> However, our convention declared if there be a tax reduction the National Grange favors the complete repeal of war-time Federal tax on automobiles. The grange is opposed to the permanent imposition of the automobile tax as a sales tax, on the ground that it is unjust and discriminatory.

Here is an organization qualified to speak for the farmer, in touch and in sympathy with the farmer, knowing the farmer's needs. I warn anyone who votes against this bill ever opening his mouth again in behalf of farm relief; such a course would be wholly inconsistent.

Gentlemen of the House, let us rise up to-day and emphatically reassert our conviction that this grossly unfair and unnecessary war-time tax upon an every-day necessity of life shall no longer continue. By this course—the removal of this tax—we will bring joy to the hearts of millions of our people who are to-day groaning under the load of heavy taxation and who have their eyes turned toward Washington with an earnest, fervent prayer that this relief will be granted. By the adoption of this amendment and the removal of this tax we will bring relief to the manufacturer, the merchant, the lawyer, the doctor, the preacher, the laborer, the school-teacher, the barber, the butcher, the baker, and the candlestick maker, the undertaker, the hay raker, apple-tree shaker, and every other class and condition of life.

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, E Pluribus Unum is the motto of the greatest Nation on earth; but, my colleagues, that motto assumes that the many out of whom the one is evolved shall equally bear all the responsibilities and burdens and shall equally share all of the privileges and advantages of the Union. The corner stone of our Union is equality of service and equality in responsibility. Class legislation and special privileges are contrary to the spirit of our Republic.

The Constitution of the United States was adopted to secure the blessings of liberty and equality to all the people. This basic principle of the Constitution will be violated if this bill without amendment is written into law. The 115,000,000 of people living under the protection of the Constitution will not be treated equitably and justly. It contains the most glaring example of class legislation. I refer to the automobile tax. There is not any doubt about this being class legislation. In its origin and in its nature this tax is discriminatory. It has been collected from a definite class for the benefit of the Nation as a whole.

There is no longer any excuse for this class tax. Such procedure could find justification only on the ground of a great national emergency, as a special tax made necessary by stern dictates of war-time emergency. It may have had some temporary excuse, but the war is over. A 10-year period after the close of the war is long enough to retain an emergency tax.

During the war and during the postwar liquidation and adjustment we paid this class tax silently and without protest. Now, we are not only protesting, but we are going to howl until this unjust burden is taken from the shoulders of the basic industry whose success insures continued prosperity. The industry, very properly, strenuously objects to the continued imposition of this discriminatory class taxation on a special product for the purpose of general revenue. It is said that this tax is easily collected.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] says that the annual Federal appropriation for good roads is $75,000,000.

> If no Federal tax should be paid by the automobile owner there would at once arise a clamor for the repeal of the good roads appropriation.

Let me ask the gentleman from Massachusetts why burden the automobile-tax payer with more than double his share of the appropriation for good roads? The automobile interests pay the highest tax in State and Nation of any class of taxpayer. The manufacturer pays his property tax, his insurance, his corporation tax, his income tax, and now in this bill you are forcing him to pay a sales tax. Your automobile purchaser pays his property tax on the automobile, his State license, his insurance, which is higher than any class of insurance in the business world. Sometimes this insurance runs more than 25 per cent of the value of the property involved. He also pays his driver's license and an unequal fuel-tax burden in the operation of his car.

When I left Toledo last month in my drive to Washington I filled my gas tank with gasoline at 15 cents a gallon—12 cents for the gas and 3 cents State gasoline tax. This tax was 25 per cent of the cost of the gasoline. When I reached West Virginia I paid 4 cents a gallon State tax. This was 33⅓ per cent of the cost of gasoline in Toledo. And now, gentlemen, you are insisting that the automobile owner shall, in addition to all of these burdensome taxes, pay a special sales tax. The claim that he should pay this tax for the purpose of maintaining good roads is only an alibi. He is paying more than his share of the road building without this sales tax. The trucks pound out the roads much faster than the automobile, and yet you relieved the trucking companies from their sales tax in the tax repeal of 1926.

You know how hard I have been working since I have been a Member of this House for cheaper transportation. Water last year carried 40 per cent of the freight load. Now, in this automobile tax you are forcing an unequal burden on the next cheapest mode of transportation.

In the Automobile Daily News, in its issue of December 5, the editor, Mr. Johnston, said:

> From the highest source of Government there was recently advanced the old theory that the automobile is still a sort of luxury or semiluxury, upon which people able to afford it should be willing to pay a tax. The whole life of modern America is based upon transportation. Whatever prosperity we enjoy, in the final analysis, comes from possession of a superior transportation system. In this transportation system the automobile plays exactly the same utilitarian rôle that the railway, the electric car, the steamship line perform.
> To cite a specific instance, farm life in America to-day would be impossible in its present form without motor vehicles. To the farmer his motor car is as much a part of his business equipment as his plow or his reaping machine. If the motor car is justifiably taxable, so is the passenger ticket for railway, steamship line, or any other method of transportation. The fact that the motor vehicle is a pleasanter, more comfortable, and more mobile method of travel than any of the others does not affect the essentially utilitarian character of its service. Pleasure is not wholly reprehensible or criminal. If the motor car gives pleasure in its use, not every trip taken by railway or steamship is completely commercial in purpose.

I knew this fight would be on if you left this class tax in the bill. On the 4th of last month I sent the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee the following telegram:

I believe continued business prosperity requires the repeal of the automobile excise tax. I shall do my best to accomplish this in the Seventieth Congress. I believe this proposal should come from your committee rather than a floor amendment. I urge favorable action by our Ways and Means Committee.

I have the honor of representing the Toledo district. The Mather Spring Co., the Tillotson Carburetor Co., the Champion Spark Plug Co., the Bock Bearing Co., and the Electric Auto Lite Co. are all located in my home city. The Willys-Overland Co. is one of the largest manufacturers of automobiles in the world. Since the close of the last session of Congress I have had an opportunity to travel around the world in a journey of over 30,000 miles. Wherever I went I saw plenty of American-made automobiles. In a Japanese newspaper I saw a paid "ad" of apology to the Champion Spark Plug people of Toledo, Ohio, for infringement upon their patent, and a promise that if not prosecuted they would not repeat their offense. In India, northwest of Calcutta, as you reach Darjeeling, at the foothills of the Himalayas, you may see a Whippet, made in Toledo by the Willys-Overland Co., streaking up the mountain side toward the peak of Mount Everest, the highest point in the world, more than 29,000 feet above sea level. In the valley of the Dead Sea, nearly 1,200 feet below sea level, you will find Fords and Overland cars. From the north to the south in the islands of the seas in all continents and grand divisions you will find the American-made automobiles.

The President tells us in his annual message that our country is enjoying prosperity. The gentlemen on the minority side deny it. What cloud in the business horizon seemed to give color to the Democratic statement that the country was passing through a serious business depression? The one fact that the industrial establishments of Henry Ford have been closed for nearly a year. One week ago last Friday Henry Ford staged the most spectacular, the most successful sale the world has ever witnessed. One Member of this House told me he ordered a car the first day of the sale, down here on Pennsylvania Avenue, and they could not promise delivery before February, 1928. Do not worry, my friends, treat the automobile fairly and it will scatter the cloud of business depression as the sun will dissipate the mists on a spring morning. Even his competitors were hoping for the success of Henry Ford's great venture. They knew that its success meant business prosperity, free and easy money. As Henry Ford sold cars, we would sell cars.

Oh, my countrymen, what a brilliant success followed this gigantic world sale. Nothing so enormous was ever planned in the business world before. The success of this marvelous venture was even beyond the dreams of those who planned and executed it. At 7 o'clock Friday morning, December 2, the window shades shot up in the thousands of salesrooms all over the world, and there stood in public view the six Ford models. Fifty thousand people were storming for entrance to one showroom alone.

Do not worry about prosperity. Take your blistering tax hands off of the automobile industry and continued prosperity is assured in this country for years to come.

Mr. CLANCY. Mr. Speaker, the splendid victory of the automobile interests in the House a few days ago is practically the culmination of a brilliant campaign waged for the past four years, for there is little doubt in my mind that the Senate has been prepared for some time to repeal the war excise sales tax on automobiles.

The first gun was fired before the Ways and Means Committee of the House at the opening of Congress in 1923, when I appeared and asked the members of that committee to begin the gradual repeal of the auto taxes. I was told peremptorily by some members of the committee that the taxes were on to stay, and one member said they might even be increased. The committee refused to touch the auto taxes in the bill it presented to the House, but I carried the fight to the floor of the House and won with practically a unanimous vote a cut of about $32,000,000 per year. The Senate ratified the action and even voted a further cut of about $5,000,000 per year, but this latter cut the House conferees refused to accept.

TWO MORE BIG CUTS

The Treasury Department felt the pressure of the highly organized auto forces and voluntarily granted a further cut of about $50,000,000 per year in 1926. This pressure has resulted in the Ways and Means Committee granting a cut of about $33,000,000 per year at the opening of this session, and a few days ago the House by a majority of nearly a hundred votes in an aye-and-nay roll call has voted for another cut of about $33,000,000 per year and to eliminate this unjust tax entirely.

I told the Ways and Means Committee emphatically in 1923 that the tax would have to come off, and now the deed is practically done. The four years of fighting have disclosed that the automobile interests have more political power than any other force in this country. They merely had to be awakened to their strength and to the ambition to defend themselves. The group of auto organizations were kind enough to accept me as their leader in the campaign of 1923–24, and they have won this supreme victory by following the plans I laid to carry the automotive propaganda back to the districts of Congressmen and Senators 12 months in the year.

EFFECT OF ORGANIZATION

The 22,000,000 auto owners were effectually mobilized and the various branches of manufacturing and repair were brought into the fray. A number of great national associations, including millions of voters and billions in capital, were highly organized. It was a political machine the like of which has never been seen before in American industry. Let him who dare encroach upon the auto industry from now on or try to subject it to persecution.

Much credit should be given to two Detroiters for the sensational victories in Washington. They are Thomas P. Henry, president of the American Automobile Association, speaking for the millions of car owners, and Roy D. Chapin, president of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, the organization of the auto manufacturers.

The auto industry has been recognized everywhere as the first industry of the land in capital and production. Now it is seen as the most powerful politically in the country.

I have been very happy in having the indorsement of every one of the great national auto organizations and with being credited in some of the leading automotive magazines with having initiated the battle for auto tax repeal and being its original leader.

PLANS FOLLOWED FOUR YEARS

The battle for auto tax elimination in this session of Congress has been very similar to the original campaign begun in 1923. The Treasury Department and the President of the United States have been strenuously opposed to any auto tax cut. Skirmishing began in the Ways and Means Committee, and the Ways and Means Committee in its report to the House cut the existing auto taxes in half, although in 1923 they refused to grant any cut. As a matter of fact, in December, 1923, the auto interests finally had a majority of 13 to 12 for a substantial auto tax reduction, but a vote was prevented by a summary adjournment of the committee. The victory was then won on the floor of the House and in the Senate and the President could not refuse to sign the bill.

THE AUTO BLOC

One of the authentic stories of the auto-tax fight is told in a leading auto magazine, namely, Automotive Industries, in its issue of March 6, 1924. This magazine was the official spokesman for the auto manufacturers. The author is one of their staff, Mr. James Dalton.

Excerpts from the article are as follows:

The automobile bloc in the House of Representatives has scored a great victory in its fight for reduction in automotive excise taxes. Success is more surprising because there was no such bloc until December 10, 1923, and when it was organized it contained only one member. * * * Representative ROBERT H. CLANCY, of Michigan, conceived the idea of organizing his one-man automobile bloc. What follows constitutes the most interesting chapter in the history of the motor vehicle.

The efforts of the friends of the auto industry before the Ways and Means Committee are recited in the story, which then continues:

The spokesmen were heard politely, but the only ripple of interest they evoked among Republican members was the reference to 15,000,000 citizen motorists, most of whom probably were voters. But it was felt the 15,000,000 never had made their voices heard politically and probably wouldn't.

Therefore when the bill came to a vote, the majority, being good Republicans and naturally anxious not to go counter to the wishes of the administration, followed the presumptive advice of Mr. Mellon and left the automotive sections exactly as they were.

Meanwhile, knowing what would happen in the committee, the one-man automobile bloc composed exclusively of Mr. CLANCY, had not been idle. As a Representative of Michigan he was familiar with the affairs of the industry. He was honestly convinced that retention of the automotive excise taxes when all others were being removed or reduced was distinctly unfair and discriminatory.

Mr. CLANCY is not unfamiliar with the intricacies of politics. He knows all about the voices which Congressmen must hear before they can be convinced. * * * Ten weeks ago he was able to visualize what would happen if any respectable fraction of the 15,000,000 motorists of the country would raise their voices so their Representatives could hear them.

THE APPEAL TO THE HOUSE

With his convictions, his vision, and his political astuteness Mr. CLANCY had no great difficulty in adding the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee to his bloc. Under his leadership they vigorously espoused the cause of automotive excise tax removal or reduction. He made a ringing speech on the floor denouncing the majority for deserting the Nation's greatest industry, and in support of the bills he had introduced for the removal of all the automotive excise levies.

The associations representing various branches of the industry and the Nation's motorists rallied around Mr. CLANCY and gave him their whole-hearted support. They had argued consistently for three years for tax relief and their arguments were irrefutable, but they made no progress for the simple reason that the voices which Congressmen dread were not raised in their support.

There was only one sure way to get action in Congress and that was to stir up constituents so they would raise their voices. Appeals were sent to all the members of all the organizations to write or wire their Representatives demanding excise tax relief. The National Automobile Dealers' Association went after the dealers and the dealers went after their customers. The Automobile Association of America went after the motorists. Every Member of Congress was bombarded daily with striking literature telling briefly and pointedly the ways in which motorists are overtaxed.

FARM BLOC BROUGHT IN

Then the Farm Bureau Federation and the National Grange were given facts and figures demonstrating that automotive excise taxes cost the farmers of the country $45,000,000 a year. That swung the farmers into line and the farmers are thoroughly familiar with the best methods of making their voices heard on Capitol Hill.

The literature which was being fired at Members of the House was followed up by personal calls and direct arguments in as many cases as possible. In the beginning the results of these presentations appeared to be negligible.

Soon, however, Congressmen began to hear voices. The farmers, who never have acquired the habit of paying taxes silently and with resignation, were the first to act. They knew exactly what to do. They protested to the Representatives of their own districts and to the representatives of their organizations in Washington, who acted promptly.

Then the motorists raised their voices. Louder and louder rose the chorus. Congressional mail assumed alarming proportions. Messengers and pages were trotting around all the time with telegrams. They all told the same story—indignation at the retention of automotive excise taxes when they were being removed from nearly all other products.

REPRESENTATIVES GARNER, GREEN, AND M'LAUGHLIN HELP

For the first time in history the political consciousness of the motorists of the country had been aroused and they had become vocal. Mr. CLANCY'S automobile bloc grew larger by the day and almost by the hour. Representative GARNER of Texas, a potent factor in the Democratic ranks and the author of a plan of his own as a substitute for the Mellon plan of income-tax reduction, saw possibilities in an alliance with it. The same was true to a certain extent of Chairman GREEN of Iowa, of the Ways and Means Committee, who didn't like the Mellon bill any better than GARNER, but who voted for it chiefly to get it out on the floor, where it could be shot full of holes.

In the meantime Representative MCLAUGHLIN, Republican, dean of the Michigan delegation and a member of the Ways and Means Committee, had seen the light. He concluded that the minimum automotive-tax reduction program agreed upon was no more than fair. Mr. CLANCY, being a good politician and knowing he could count on Democratic support anyway, agreed that he would not press his bills for total abolition of the taxes if Mr. MCLAUGHLIN would offer an amendment to the automotive sections of the pending bill providing for the dropping of the levy from trucks costing $1,000 or less and for a cut of 50 per cent in the tax on repair parts and accessories. He found that it would gratify Mr. MCLAUGHLIN to do just that.

When the vote was taken not one Member of the House out of the 435 dared to vote against the measure for auto tax reduction. The Senate was similarly lined up and there was not a vote against the measure in the Senate. As a matter of fact, the Senate was even more friendly and gave an additional $5,000,000 reduction, but when the Senate and House conferees got together this additional $5,000,000 was stricken out.

THE LAST CHAPTER

The auto-tax fight of 1923 and 1924 was probably the most sensational battle fought in the House during that Congress. The same tactics used to win that victory have been used in 1925, 1926, and 1927 to totally eliminate this tax.

It remains but for the Senate to agree to the House action and the final chapter will be written. The value of this victory to the automobile industry and to the 22,000,000 owners of cars can hardly be calculated. If the old taxes had remained, they would be a yearly burden of over $160,000,000. Thus each few years there would be placed upon the automobile industry and its customers the appalling handicap of over a billion dollars. This added to the numerous other taxes on the industry and its customers would be a burden which would seriously cripple the auto interests and in a larger sense the progress and prosperity of this country and of every country in which the American automobile is used, and which is a tremendous factor in the uplifting of mankind.

Mr. BRIGHAM. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, the tax bill under consideration shows careful and painstaking work on the part of the committee which prepared it. This is the fourth tax-reduction measure which has been presented to the Congress since the Republican Party came into power in 1921. Conditions growing out of the war which affected business abnormally have now largely been removed. This revenue bill of 1928, then, may very likely be the tax law for some years to come, and whatever changes are to be made for the next few years must be made now.

The President points out in his message that the reduction brought about by it "should be mainly for the purpose of removing inequalities." There is, in my opinion, an outstanding condition of inequality existing in the law as it is to-day and I, for one, regret that the committee did not see fit to devise an adequate remedy. I refer to the tax on small corporations which are not oftentimes much larger than the individually conducted business or the partnership and are in competition with them.

Secretary Mellon, in his statement to the committe, evidently recognized that such an inequality exists and suggested the following remedy in his recommendation to the committee:

Amending those provisions of the law that apply to the tax on corporate income so as to permit corporations with net income of $25,000 or less, and with not more than 10 stockholders, to file returns and pay the tax as partnerships at their option. It is estimated that such an amendment will result in a loss of from $30,000,000 to $35,000,000 in revenue.

In illustrating the inequality which exists throughout the country under the present law I can do no better than to quote a portion of a letter written me by Hon. Erwin M. Harvey, commissioner of taxes of the State of Vermont, when the revenue act of 1926 was under consideration:

At the present time the tax on corporations is very inequitable and unjust to small industrial corporations in Vermont. The present tax of 12½ per cent, which it is suggested be raised to 13½ per cent, is out of proportion to the tax on individuals. In my own private practice of the law I have fostered and encouraged the formation of private corporations for the operation of industrial enterprises. It is, however, becoming more and more difficult to convince men that the principle is right. In practice it works out something like this: Three men have a little corporation for the conduct of a granite business. Their corporation-tax returns show a net taxable income of $5,000. From this an exemption of $2,000 is deducted, leaving a tax to be computed at 12½ per cent upon $3,000, or $375. To this in the past a capital-stock tax of $1 per thousand is added. This, in the illustrative case, may be $25 more, making a gross payment of $400. The adjoining stone shed is being operated by three men who are working under a partnership organization. Their net income is the same, or $5,000. I need not call your attention to the fact that the partnership as a legal unit pays no tax. It files, however, an annual income-tax return, and from this return the net income is reflected over and divided among the partners. Each partner pays a tax of 2 per cent or less. In some instances the liberal deductions given to the individual are such that little or no tax is paid. Upon the assumption that all of this business income is reflected over and through the individual tax returns a tax of 2 per cent is paid. This group of men operating under a partnership organization are paying taxes aggregating $100, against $400 under the corporation formation. These men are very rapidly comparing notes. They are becoming dissatisfied, and unless some change is made many of these men will abandon the corporation form of doing business. This will be reflected not only in a mix-up in business conditions, but it will result in loss of revenue to the State of Vermont through the annual license tax which is paid through this office.

The illustrative case cited by Commissioner Harvey in 1926 would present, under the terms of the act now under consideration, still greater inequalities. Each partner in the partnership, if married, would have an exemption of $3,500 before the assessment of income tax, with further exemptions for dependents. The chances are that none of the partners would pay an income tax to the Federal Government. On the other hand, if the business is incorporated, the net income of $5,000 under the proposed act would have an exemption of $3,000, and the $2,000 left would be taxed at the rate of 11½ per cent, or $230. Suppose the net income should be $10,000. The partners, if the enterprise remained a partnership, would still probably pay no income tax, or at most would pay but a few dollars; but if their business were incorporated, the corporation would have to pay $805 tax to the Federal Government.

The small corporation may not be of such importance in the great industrial States where business is conducted on a gigantic scale; but in the rural States I submit that it is exceedingly important and should not be hampered and discouraged by unequal taxation. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that a reduction in the rate of taxation on the net income of the small corporations will encourage their organizations and will result in a greater revenue to the Government, while if the rate is left as it is their number will decrease; they will change from the corporate to the partnership or individual form of doing business, and the revenue derived from the corporate source will become correspondingly less.

THE DIRECT ELECTION OF PRESIDENT

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the election of the President.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon the election of the President. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA. Mr. Speaker, the Electoral College system for the selection of the President was originally adopted as part of the Constitution on the theory that its members would be superior men who would use a wise, impartial, and judicial fairness in making the best possible selection of a President. Within a few decades the presidential electors were deprived of all discretion and pledged in advance to vote only for the candidates approved by the political group that selected them. Thus the reason for the Electoral College system ceased to exist. It has ever since been generally known to be unsatisfactory, but due to the inertia of public sentiment, the difficulty of changing the Constitution, and the lack of agreement on a better plan the system has remained as part of our election machinery.

I have introduced House Joint Resolution 2, proposing to amend the provisions of the Constitution for the election of President. This amendment, in substance, if adopted would—

(1) Abolish the Electoral College.

(2) Provide for a direct vote for President and Vice President.

(3) Cause State returns to be certified to Congress.

(4) Provide that in computing the result in Congress, each State would retain its proportion of electoral votes as at present.

(5) Provide that each candidate be given such proportion of the electoral vote of the State as his popular vote therein bears to the total vote for all candidates. In other words, the proportionate State vote would be substituted for the present unit vote. In estimating the result, in the interest of simplicity, fractional numbers less than one one-thousandth would be disregarded unless a more detailed computation would change the result of the election.

(6) Provide that the candidate receiving the highest number of electoral votes would be elected.

(7) Give Congress power to shorten the terms of President, Vice President, and Members of Congress not more than two months, to abolish the short session of Congress, and to provide that the new Congress shall assemble more promptly after election.

(8) Provide a method of filling the vacancy in case of the death of the President elect and Vice President elect before their induction into office. This contingency is not now provided for in the Constitution.

(9) Give assurance that the political group electing its candidate would have one of its group succeed to the Presidency in case of death of the President elect and Vice President elect. This would be accomplished by permitting the President elect to designate his Cabinet officers, who would in case of the disability of the President and Vice President succeed to office as in case of a vacancy occurring after the President is installed in office.

THE PRESENT METHOD OF ELECTING A PRESIDENT

Under the present system of electing the President each State elects a number of presidential electors equal to the number of Representatives and Senators to which it is entitled in Congress. The electors are elected by a plurality vote. The presidential electors so chosen from all the States vote for President. With unimportant exceptions the State vote is cast as a unit. Votes cast in the State for the minority candidates for electors are not counted in the final determination of the result. If a majority do not unite in supporting one candidate the election in the Electoral College fails and is thrown into the House of Representatives. There the States vote as a unit. In other words, a majority of the Representatives in the House from each State determines how the total vote of that State shall be counted. The States are all equals, each having but one vote. Pennsylvania with 36 Representatives and Wyoming with 1 are equal in determining who shall be President. It may easily occur that the party which has a majority of the State delegations in the House may not have a majority of the Members of the House. The minority candidate in the State receives no credit for votes cast for him in that State.

Members of the House of Representatives who vote on the selection of a President are elected two years prior to the presidential election then in controversy. They are expected to vote according to their political affiliations, even though the party controlling a majority of the State votes has been repudiated at the last election. The defeated Members may elect the candidate the voters repudiated at the election.

If no candidate receives a majority in the House, all presidential candidates are defeated. The election is thrown into the Senate, which must select a President from one of the two highest candidates for Vice President. The Senators vote according to their party affiliations without regard for popular desire as expressed at the election.

The present system of election misrepresents popular sentiment under a two-party system, and may utterly fail when three or more parties appear in the Electoral College.

The fundamental vice of the constitutional method of electing the President is the failure of that system to register popular opinion accurately. The unit system of selecting a President, both in the Electoral College and by election in the House of Representatives, permits the disregard of the will of the voters as expressed at the latest election.

The unit system of voting is inherently wrong. It permits the majority candidate to appropriate to himself the support of his minority opponent in the State. It permits the misappropriation of votes on a vast scale in defiance of popular will. It permits the defeat of majority candidates and the election of minority candidates. The unit system adds to the prestige of dominant political organizations in the State, but at the expense of misrepresented minorities.

Where the election is thrown into the House a small group controlling the balance of power can defeat the will of the voters, or exact compliance to their own demands in return for their votes in breaking the deadlock.

This system is crude, archaic, incapable of accurately reflecting the will of the voters, and unworthy of a place in a democratic government. The highest purpose of a popular election is to carry into effect the will of the people as expressed at the polls. The existing method of electing a President is poorly qualified for that purpose.

If tolerable consequences have been secured through the present system, the results are due more to good luck than the inherent reliability of the method.

Many illustrations could be given of the inaccuracy with which the electoral system reflects popular sentiment. In 1880 Garfield received about 48 per cent of the popular vote and 57 per cent of the electoral vote. In 1884 Cleveland received about 48 per cent of the popular vote and 54 per cent of the electoral vote. In 1888 Harrison received about 44 per cent of the popular vote and 58 per cent of the electoral vote. In 1892 Cleveland received about 46 per cent of the popular vote and 62 per cent of the electoral vote. In 1896 McKinley received about 50 per cent of the popular vote and 60 per cent of the electoral vote. In 1900 McKinley received over 50 per cent of the popular vote and over 65 per cent of the electoral vote. In 1904 Roosevelt received about 56 per cent of the popular vote and 70 per cent of the electoral vote. In 1908 Taft received about 50 per cent of the popular vote and 60 per cent of the electoral vote. In 1912 Wilson received about 42 per cent of the popular vote and 82 per cent of the electoral vote. In 1916 Wilson received about 49 per cent of the popular vote and 52 per cent of the electoral vote. In 1920 Harding received about 60 per cent of the popular vote and 76 per cent of the electoral vote. In 1924 Coolidge received about 54 per cent of the popular vote and 72 per cent of the electoral vote. LaFollette received about 16 per cent of the popular vote and 3 per cent of the electoral vote.

If one candidate should carry New York by 5,000 majority over an opponent who should carry Nevada by the same majority, the popular vote of these two candidates would be equal. The one who carried New York would have 45 electoral votes and the one who carried Nevada 3. There is no common sense or just reason why a million votes for a minority candidate in New York should not be counted while 40,000 votes for the same candidate in Nevada would give him the 3 electoral votes of that State.

Eighty-nine is the total membership in the House of the 25 smallest States. Sixty-three of those Members constitute a majority in all these 25 States. Thus it is physically possible, though not probable, that less than 15 per cent of the membership of the House could select the President in case the election be thrown into the House. These facts illustrate the crudeness and unreliability of the constitutional method of electing a President in the House.

Suppose a majority of the State delegations in the House should be Republican and the Senate Democratic and a third-party candidate for President should receive a majority of the popular vote. He would not be elected unless he received a majority in the Electoral College. If he failed to receive that majority the election would be thrown into the House of Representatives where the Republican nominee would be elected. In case the election in the House failed and was thrown into the Senate, the Vice Presidential candidate in the Democratic Party would be elected. In each of these three possibilities the final determination would depend on something other than the popular vote for the candidate at the election. Either method of selecting is artificial and arbitrary.

Twice since 1875 the present system has resulted in the election of minority candidates for President. No election in recent years has strikingly manifested the untoward results of which this system is capable. Its evils may be surprisingly manifested at any election. Those evils will become distressingly apparent in case of the development of three or more parties.

Under the two-party system, for example, one candidate may carry a group of States sufficient to give him the election in the Electoral College at an average majority of 25,000 votes. His opponent may carry an equal or greater number of States by an average majority of two or three times that number. The minority candidate, by popular vote, would be elected and the other candidate, possibly with a majority of a million or more votes, defeated.

Whenever three important parties take part in a presidential election, deadlocks in the Electoral College and in the House are to be expected as natural and probable results of the present crude system of election. The final result to be expected would be a compromise, or trade, in the Senate by which it would make its choice of one of the two highest candidates for Vice President.

ENFRANCHISE MINORITIES

The system which denies State minorities representation in the election of a President is pernicious. Voting by the minority in States definitely committed to one party is a futile act. The minority voter is in effect disfranchised. His vote is not counted in the final result. This discourages the development of minority parties that are needed as a wholesome influence in the public life of the country. The tendency of the present system is to strengthen dominant political parties in the State and develop one-party control, with the indifference and arrogance that frequently attends that system.

Under the proposed amendment minority votes in each State would be counted in computing the final result. Minority voters would be enfranchised. The real contest of a presidential election, instead of being confined to a few doubtful States, would be extended to every precinct in the Nation. The voter, whether he belong to the minority or majority party, whether he be in Vermont, New York, Georgia, or California, would have the same interest in voting. Such a situation would inject new life and new interest, and tend toward a betterment of the political affairs of the country.

The present unit system of voting, which makes the result of the election depend on the electoral vote of a few States or even one State, promotes the corruption of the electorate. Unusual efforts are made and vast sums of money spent in a few doubtful States to swing the election. If such efforts are successful, it is because under the unit system large blocks of minority support are turned into majority votes in the Electoral College. Out of votes that rightfully belong to a disfranchised minority the successful candidate wins his election.

Turning a few thousand votes in our greatest State might win 8 per cent of the electoral votes of the Nation. It would take over 2,000,000 votes to equal that proportion of the popular vote of the country.

The temptation and the possibility of corrupting the few is much greater than that of corrupting hundreds of thousands or millions.

THE AGGREGATE POPULAR VOTE PLAN

The remedy commonly proposed as a substitute for the present system has been the direct election of the President by popular vote, with the office going to the candidate who receives the aggregate plurality vote of the Nation. There seems to be at least two reasons why this plan will never be adopted. One reason is that it would involve the surrender by the small States of a 10 per cent advantage they now have in the election of Presidents. Each State is represented in the Electoral College by the number of its Representatives and Senators in the Congress. Representatives are allotted to the States in proportion to the population. Each State is given two Senators regardless of population. Ten large States of the country have half its population, the other 38 have the other half. The 10 States are represented in the Electoral College by 20 votes as equivalent to their Senators. The other 38 States are represented by 76 votes as equivalent to their Senators. Under a system of aggregate popular voting, the small States would be deprived of this advantage. They can not be deprived of it without their consent. It is improbable they will ever surrender that advantage.

The second reason is the varied qualifications of voters in the different States. It would be to the advantage of the individual State, particularly if a sectional or local question were involved to cast the greatest possible popular vote. The States would be unwilling to enter into competition with each other in relaxing the qualifications of voters under a temptation to increase their voting population and thus increase their power in the election of a President. Neither would the States be willing to permit the Federal Government to set aside their election laws and prescribe uniform qualifications for voters.

The proportion who vote varies greatly as between States and within the same State, due to differences in the qualifications which limit the voting class, the extent to which the people are interested and aroused, the issues involved, the closeness of the contest, and the activities of interested groups.

The proportionate number of persons who vote in the various States has been a matter of frequent criticism and discussion. Suppose A and B States are of equal population, say, 3,000,000; 30 per cent of the population in A State votes and only 20 per cent in B State. Thus the total votes are 900,000 and 600,000, respectively, in the two States of equal population. Should the relative strength of these States in the selection of a President be determined by the number of their populations or by the number of their votes?

The present system is founded on the theory that the number of their populations should be the test of their relative strength in the election of a President. The proposed amendment retains that general theory, partly because it is unlikely any other plan can now be substituted and also because this theory, when practically applied, is probably more satisfactory.

Essentially, all our voting is representative. On the average, less than 25 per cent of the population of the country votes. In practical effect 25 per cent vote for themselves and also for the 75 per cent of the people who do not vote and who either have no right to vote or voluntarily refrain from voting. The result of the election affects 100 per cent of the population. The vast majority of the people have a part in the election only by representation through that small part of the population that in fact votes. Those who can not vote or refrain from voting share the result of the election, for weal or woe, as certainly and definitely as those who vote. Whether 15 per cent or 30 per cent of the population of the State vote, the effect is more accurately measured by the population than by the number of voters.

So far the experience of government has developed no system that more accurately registers the will of the whole population than a free and open election at which restricted classes of the population known as "the qualified voters" express the will of the people at the polls.

The State is an established political unit and is usually a more or less harmonious economic and geographical group. The State lines may therefore be accepted as the best lines of discrimination available for equalizing local or temporary variations in the proportions of voters to population.

Under the plan proposed this inequality of voting populations in the States is minimized greatly by establishing the proportionate voting system as a substitute for the present unit system. The rival candidates would more nearly share equally the effects of either a large or small vote in any State.

FILLING VACANCY ON DEATH OF ELECTED CANDIDATES

The Constitution provides no method by which the political group succeeding at the election in case of the death of its candidates before the term begins can be assured that one of its group or one representing its political principles shall fill the vacancy.

The present law enacted under authority of the Constitution provides that certain members of the Cabinet in a specified order may succeed to the Presidency in case of the death of the President and Vice President. The proposed amendment would permit Congress to provide that the President elect could designate those he intends to appoint to his Cabinet. In case of the death of the President elect and the Vice President elect and the confirmation by the Senate of the appointment of the Cabinet members, they would be entitled to succeed to the Presidency as in case of a vacancy created after the newly elected President had gone into office. Thus assurance would be given that a representative of the political group succeeding at the election would fill the vacancy. The President in effect now chooses his successor in case of the death of himself and the Vice President. It would seem the President elect in advance of his installation should have the same power and thus provide a certain means of succession to the Presidency in case of the death of the elected candidates.

PRESIDENTIAL AND CONGRESSIONAL TERMS

The Norris amendment, favorably reported by the House Committee on the Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress at the last session of Congress, proposes to shorten one term of the President, Vice President, and Members of Congress and prescribe definite dates at which the new terms shall begin in January instead of March as at present.

The amendment here proposed necessarily deals with those provisions of the Constitution. The situation is covered by a provision giving Congress power to shorten the terms of the President, Vice President, and Members of Congress not more than two months. This would simply give Congress power to shorten the terms, abolish the short session of Congress, and fix the date when a new Congress should meet.

Under the present plan the Members of a new Congress do not meet in regular session until 13 months after elected. They are then within 11 months of another election. The second election occurs after their first session in office, but before their last. If defeated at the election, they remain in office to exercise its powers contrary to the will of the voters so expressed.

The effect of this situation is not wholesome. It unreasonably delays the Members of Congress in carrying out the purposes for which they were elected. The second session under this plan ends in a jam, with legislation passing and failing very much in disregard of merit and without opportunity for proper consideration. The amendment proposed would give Congress power to shorten the terms of President and Members of Congress so the new Congress could assemble in the early part of the year. Then a newly elected administration could with reasonable promptness take up the duties intrusted to it by the people.

THE LATE BRIG. GEN. JOSEPH E. LEE

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McMILLAN. Gentlemen of the House, there was buried at Arlington National Cemetery yesterday, with high military honors, Brig. Gen. Joseph E. Lee, a native of Summerville, S. C., and I have asked permission for a minute's time to bring to the attention of the House a few facts in connection with the life and character of this outstanding and distinguished South Carolinian.

General Lee received his early educational training in the city schools of Charleston and at the Porter Military Academy. He was admitted to the South Carolina bar at a very early age.

In 1888 he entered the State militia of South Carolina as a private, and by his loyalty to the service, coupled with his efficiency and ability, was advanced in rank until finally appointed brigadier general by the governor in command of the First Brigade of South Carolina. Although holding high military rank, General Lee at the same time actively interested himself in professional, political, and civic matters. In 1898, at the outbreak of the Spanish-American War, he was recommended by President McKinley to serve as a brigadier general of United States Volunteers.

Soon after the Spanish-American War he moved to Spartanburg, S. C., where he resumed the practice of law and engaged in a successful newspaper enterprise, and later served as president of the South Carolina State Press Association.

In February, 1917, General Lee was appointed major, Quartermaster Reserve Corps, United States Army. He was called to active duty the following May and reported at Front Royal, Va. Shortly afterwards he was transferred to Newport News, and in July was appointed assistant to the commanding officer at the port of embarkation. He organized the supply division and served as its chief until September, 1917, later being appointed officer in charge. He served in this capacity until 1918, when he was transferred to the war prison barracks at Fort McPherson, Ga., as post quartermaster.

On October 31 General Lee was honorably discharged from service, due to disability incurred in line of duty, and which finally caused his death.

General Lee was an emergency officer of the World War. Although he had seen military service covering a period of years with the State militia of South Carolina, and a veteran of the Spanish-American War, he was ready for his country's call in its need for trained military leaders at the outbreak of the World War. It is, accordingly, to such men as General Lee and many other emergency officers of the World War that we can pause here for a moment at their passing into the great beyond and pay to them a word of tribute and respect for the patriotic services they have rendered to their country's cause. [Applause.]

SENATE

THURSDAY, December 15, 1927

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Whoso dwelleth under the defense of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty.

O God, inspirer and teacher of men, send out Thy light and illumine us; give us a deep and clear knowledge of ourselves and help us to a growing knowledge of our world. Confirm in us the holiness of true reason; strengthen in us the aspiration toward noble and spacious thinking; and in Thy good time bring us to Thy holy hill, where, lifted above the clouds of passion and the mists of prejudice, we shall think Thine own thoughts after Thee. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I am sure that the heart of every American will thrill this morning at the news which has come of the achievement, of the wonderful success, of Colonel Lindbergh. His flight will do more to cement friendly relations with Mexico than diplomacy can do. A little while ago we were proud at the news which came to us of his achievement in flying across the ocean.

The finest tribute that I have seen or heard to this king of the air comes from a newspaper man known to a good many in this Chamber. I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point, in the usual RECORD type, this tribute to Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, being an address of Louis Ludlow, president of the National Press Club, the address having been delivered at a reception in this city on June 11, 1927.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. Ludlow's address is as follows:

A TRIBUTE TO COL. CHARLES A. LINDBERGH

Address of Louis Ludlow, president of the National Press Club, in presenting Colonel Lindbergh at the home-coming reception given at Washington, D. C., in the latter's honor by the club, June 11, 1927

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, not for ages has the imagination of man been stirred as it was three weeks ago when Charles A. Lindbergh, fired by the intrepid spirit of the Western World, launched forth in his airplane alone, provisioned with four sandwiches and a bottle of water, a pioneer of the trackless seas. As America's shores receded in the distance he faced a vast wilderness of treacherous ocean.

As if roiled by the very boldness of this Columbus of the air—this winged Mercury, speeding like a thunderbolt of Jove—nature sent her tempestuous elements athwart his path, and while he battled with the storm and sleet millions upon millions of his fellow beings sent up prayers for his safety to the throne of God. The 33 hours and 30 minutes from New York to Paris was a period of tragic suspense, when the whole world poured forth in a myriad of mystic ways its admiration for the incomparable aviator and its love for the mother who had brought forth such a boy.

To him mountains of peril were as nothing. His faith was buoyant and his hopes were high. Courage was his woof and fiber, and it is not difficult to imagine that stern fate, surprised by this peremptory challenge of her inexorable decrees, lifted her beetled brows and was touched by the very sublimity of his heroism, for she gave him a sporting chance.

And when he reached the other shores he arose to another test of character as greatly as when he battled with time and the elements. Amid all of the adulations of kings and parliaments he remained a modest, unassuming American, an honor to his home country, an ambassador of good will, doing more to foster amity between nations than could have been done by a thousand ministers of state.

"After all," he said in London, "two Britishers were the first to fly across the Atlantic." Again, when he learned that Chamberlin had started on the long flight, he remarked fervently, "I hope he makes it." Here he struck the major chord of his character in his desire to give to his comrades at home and across the seas a share of his imperishable glory. And when, in foreign lands, the ties of home began to press and strain against his heart and he confessed, in simple truth and sincerity, to being homesick, how America did yearn to take him to her bosom!

His name is now among the immortals. Around the firesides and in the vast, crowded halls of the future, wherever worth is recognized and genius is extolled, his achievement will be recalled with pride by countless generations yet unborn. Nothing finer could have been done; nothing grander could have been done; no greater epic could have been written into history, and to-night we thank Almighty God that in His infinite goodness and mercy He has permitted Charles A. Lindbergh to return to the arms of those who love him.

I now present Colonel Lindbergh.

Enrolled Senate Concurrent Resolution 6, requesting the Congress of the United States to appropriate funds to carry out certain recommendations of the Chief of Staff of the United States Army made in furtherance of the national defense act of 1920

Whereas the President of the United States in a recent message to the Congress of the United States has stated that the Army and Navy of the United States should be strengthened, and that a people who neglect their national defense are putting in jeopardy their national honor; and

Whereas in furtherance of the national defense act of 1920, and amendments thereto, and in order to increase and promote the strength and effectiveness of the Army, the Chief of Staff of the Army of the United States has recommended substantially as follows:

(a) That the Regular Army be brought back to the strength of 150,000 enlisted men and 13,000 officers, and that it be suitably housed and enabled to conduct annual maneuvers on a moderate scale;

(b) That the National Guard be given the support necessary to permit its progressive development toward a strength of 250,000;

(c) That the skeleton organization of the Organized Reserves be adequately maintained;

(d) That all reserve officers receive an average of 15 days' training in each three years;

(e) That the Reserve Officers' Training Corps units be further developed; and

(f) That provision may be made for a gradual increase in the number accommodated annually in citizens' military training camps: Therefore be it

Resolved by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana:

SECTION 1. That the General Assembly of the State of Indiana respectfully and earnestly urges upon the Congress the necessity of appropriating such funds and enacting such legislation as will adequately provide for the effective carrying out of the provisions of the national defense act of 1920 and also the recommendations of the Chief of Staff of the Army of the United States hereinbefore set forth.

SEC. 2. Suitable copies of this resolution shall be sent by the secretary of state to the President of the United States, the presiding officers of both branches of Congress, to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State, and to the members of the congressional Committee on Appropriations and Military Affairs.

Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Arizona, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation:

EIGHTH STATE LEGISLATURE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, FOURTH SPECIAL SESSION

House Joint Memorial 1

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialist, the Eighth Legislature of the State of Arizona, in special session assembled, does respectfully represent:

That there are approximately 500,000 acres of land in the San Simon and Sulphur Springs Valleys of the State of Arizona which are susceptible of successful agricultural development.

That an abundant supply of water is available at shallow depth in both of said valleys.

That in both valleys also are strong flows of artesian water.

That extensive experiments have established the fact that land in the said San Simon and Sulphur Springs Valleys is of great potential value for agricultural purposes.

That in the county of Cochise, wherein both the said valleys are situated, is located some of the largest copper mines in the world, which said mines would consume great quantities of hydroelectric power.

Whereas there is now being constructed on the Gila River the Coolidge Dam for the purpose of the reclamation of arid lands, your memorialist does respectfully represent that the installation of turbine engines at the said Coolidge Dam for the purpose of generating hydroelectric power will assure the future agricultural development and prosperity of the San Simon and Sulphur Springs Valleys and also assure a source of cheap electrical power for the vast mining interests of Cochise County; and

Whereas the construction of a secondary dam on the Gila River adjacent to the Coolidge Dam for the development of hydroelectric power will insure to the county of Cochise, and especially to the mining industries and the potential agricultural development of the San Simon and the Sulphur Springs Valleys, every incentive for development: It is therefore

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be requested to make sufficient appropriation for the installation of turbine engines at the Coolidge Dam for the purpose of generating hydroelectric power and an additional appropriation for the purpose of construction of a secondary dam adjacent to the aforesaid Coolidge Dam on the Gila River within the State of Arizona; it is further

Resolved, That copies of this memorial be forwarded to the President of the Senate and Speaker of the House of Representatives at Washington, D. C., to the President of the United States, and to each of the Representatives in Congress from the State of Arizona.

Passed the house of representatives November 1, 1927—41 ayes, 2 nays, 3 absent, 6 excused.

Passed the senate November 2, 1927—18 ayes, 1 absent.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I send to the desk a telegram which is in the nature of a petition and ask that it be read. I do not enter at all into the merits of the controversy, because I am not advised regarding it, but I ask that the telegram be read by the clerk and then referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DENEEN presented the following house resolution of the Legislature of the State of Illinois, which was referred to the Committee on Patents:

STATE OF ILLINOIS,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

I, Louis L. Emmerson, secretary of state of the State of Illinois, do hereby certify that the following and hereto attached is a true photostatic copy of House Resolution 68, the original of which is now on file and a matter of record in this office.

House Resolution 68

Whereas under the present copyright act a person who has copyrighted a musical composition has not only the exclusive right to print, reprint, publish, copy, and vend that composition but the additional exclusive right to use that composition publicly for profit; and

Whereas the copyright act provides that the copyright proprietor may recover a sum in certain cases of as much as $100, from the offender for the infringement of this exclusive right to use the composition publicly for profit; and

Whereas protected by this act certain copyright proprietors, in addition to the purchase price, charge unreasonable and exorbitant prices for permission to use the composition publicly for profit; and

Whereas the various copyright proprietors have formed an organization known as the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers for the enforcement of the said provisions of the copyright act and for the protection of their interests thereunder; and

Whereas the American Society of Composers, Authors, and Publishers maintains a supergovernmental enforcement agency with investigators always ready to descend upon any offender and bring him to task; and

Whereas this additional fee for permission to use the composition publicly for profit, and the penalties for, infringement of the same are paid to the copyright proprietor, who ordinarily is not the author or composer of the composition; and

Whereas these provisions of the copyright act are inimicable to the best interests of a majority of the people and make it impossible to present this music to them at reasonable prices: Therefore be it

Resolved, by the House of Representatives of the Fifty-fifth General Assembly of the State of Illinois, That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to amend the copyright act of 1909 to provide that a person who has copyrighted a dramatico-musical or a choral or orchestral composition or other musical composition, which composition is offered for sale to the public, shall not have the exclusive right to perform the copyrighted work publicly for profit nor be entitled to receive any fee or price in addition to the purchase price, for permission to use the composition in a public performance for profit, nor be entitled to any penalty if the composition is so used without the permission of the copyright proprietor; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be delivered to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate of the United States, and also to each Congressman and Senator from the State of Illinois.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of a resolution adopted by the house of representatives on the 2d day of June, 1927.

B. H. MCCANN,
Clerk of the House.

Mr. GILLETT. I present a petition from the National Race Congress and Equal Rights League which I request may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The honorable Members of the Congress of the United States:

In the Constitutional Convention of 1787, held for the purpose of creating a "more perfect Union," the question of perpetuating the institution of slavery was the cause of acrimonious debate therein. So heated, indeed, became this controversy between those who were for and those who were against the system of slavery that two compromises upon this issue had to be reached before agreement upon the Constitution could be attained.

George Mason, of Virginia, a delegate to the convention, urged the abolition of slavery and stated that unless the institution was abolished a war between the northern and southern sections of the United States would ensue—the clash of opposing sectional interests could terminate in no other way. This prophet found himself without honor in his own land and walked out of the convention, refusing to affix his signature to the instrument as finally adopted.

From 1787 to 1861 the history of the United States discloses the truth that moral issues dodged, no matter how deftly, will one day strike with crushing force.

Slavery was abolished on the battle fields of the Republic, but in its wake there followed peonage, disfranchisement, lynching, civil and political disabilities imposed upon the people who had just escaped from age-long bondage.

After the passage of 60 years we find colored Americans victimized in many parts of the land and especially at the South by the same evil forces of arrogance and hate which had held them so long in slavery with the aid of governments, both State and Federal.

Fortunately the great leaders of the Nation, at the close of the Civil War, so amended the Constitution as to make it square with the Declaration of Independence and the principles of free democratic government, and under the amended instrument Congress was empowered to enforce these new articles wherever and whenever they should be violated.

We therefore most respectfully invite the attention of Congress to the fact that colored American citizens have been deprived of the right to vote by laws enacted and State constitutions adopted. Cunningly worded statutes were devised to accomplish this purpose, so that if possible these regulations might be held to conform to the amended Constitution.

Much success has thus far attended the efforts of reactionary communities to rob colored American citizens of the right to vote upon terms of equality with their white fellow citizens, but the immediate penalty paid by such communities has been to find themselves pushed backward into the least progressive communities of the land. They have fallen behind economically, educationally, and represent politically ideas which have brought and are continuing to bring in many parts of the world upheaval and revolution. They not only are not abreast of the best American thought, but their hideous reaction has given birth to a lawless organization now engaged in spreading corruption and terror in wide sections of our country.

The failure of the Federal Government to carry out the provisions of the Constitution which guarantee republican forms of government to every State within the Union has resulted in lawlessness on such a widespread scale that even southern officials are becoming alarmed over the situation, and are so expressing themselves.

When white women as well as men are being whipped and maimed by a nationally organized band of disguised thugs, we have a perfect demonstration of the extent to which lawlessness will go from its black to its white victims when once it is allowed to take firm root.

Another moral issue now faces the constituted authorities of the land. Will it be met or will it be dodged, as was the slavery issue?

We most respectfully call upon the Congress of the United States to carry out its sworn obligation to protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, to the end that the rights of all citizens may be secured under republican forms of government. The Constitution provides the way.

We most respectfully urge upon Congress increased Federal aid to southern education, passage of the Dyer antilynching bill, a law making segregation of colored employees of the Federal civil service a statutory offense, enforcement of the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution to the end that disfranchisement and racial segregation upon common carriers shall be abolished.

We respectfully request Congress to pass a resolution demanding the immediate withdrawal of the naval forces from the Republic of Haiti. Haiti won its independence upon the battle field against iron-fisted oppressors who had held them in slavery and exploited them ruthlessly. No matter whether a forward or a backward nation, it has the right that every nation claims for itself of pursuing its national destiny in its own way. This valiant people, who paid the price of liberty with their blood, sent troops to this country during our own Revolutionary struggle, and greatly aided us at a time when we were weak. To strike them down when we have grown strong is an exhibition of national ingratitude and cements no friendships anywhere in the world for the people of the United States. The South American Republics might all to-day still be under the control of a reactionary Spanish monarchy but for the timely aid and assistance given Bolivar by President Petion, of Haiti. Thus did the Haitian people win their own independence and aid both North and South America in their struggle for liberty, and it ill becomes the people of the United States to bolster up political puppets to govern them and to hold them in subjection with American guns.

Respectfully submitted.

Senate Joint Resolution 6, relative to the policy of caring for the Indians of Montana by the expenditure of Federal appropriations through State agencies

Whereas there is now pending in Congress of the United States a bill known as the Wheeler bill (S. 3498), in the House of Representatives, providing that funds appropriated for the care and relief of the Indians of Montana under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior shall be expended through certain public agencies of the State of Montana; and

Senate Joint Memorial 4, to the Senate of the United States protesting against the enactment of House Calendar 204, S. 481 (Rept. No. 911), commonly known as the corn sugar bill

To the honorable Senate of the Congress of the United States:

Your memorialists, the Twentieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, respectfully represent that—

Whereas there is now pending before the Senate of the United States a bill commonly known as the corn sugar bill, being House Calendar 204, S. 481 (Rept. No. 911); and

Whereas said bill if enacted would permit the adulteration of about 75 per cent of our food products with corn sugar without declaring the presence of such sugar on the package or other container of such foods; and

Whereas such adulteration is contrary to the existing provisions of the national pure food and drug law and would, if permitted, tend to weaken said law in a vital respect and to greatly reduce the efficiency thereof; and

Whereas we regard the passage of such pending legislation as detrimental to the maintenance of the purity of food products: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Twentieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, That we do hereby memorialize the Senate of the United States to refuse to enact the legislation aforesaid; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Montana.

Substitute for Senate Concurrent Resolution 9, memorializing the Congress of the United States not to abolish the Federal estate tax

Whereas there has been and now is considerable propaganda being disseminated to influence the repeal of the Federal estate tax, upon the grounds that it was originally passed as a war measure, and interferes with the full freedom of the States to impose succession taxes; and

Whereas we do not agree with the reasons or purposes urged for the abolishment of this source of revenue, but, on the contrary, firmly believe: (1) That this form of taxation is no longer regarded by this country and other civilized nations of the earth as an emergency war measure but as a legitimate, fair, equitable, and just source of revenue, which is paid largely by one who did not earn the property inherited, who is best able to pay it, and who can not pass such tax to the public. (2) That while the war is over, the financial consequence to the Government will remain for years to come, and it is eminently fair that large estates which have been created or enhanced through war opportunities, and whose property is largely invested in tax-exempt securities, should contribute to the liquidation of these war obligations. (3) That the right of the Federal Government and the States to tax inheritance is coextensive, and the one is independent of the other, and consequently the Federal estate tax does not interfere with the rights of any State which honestly intends to retain this source of revenue, and this agitation is largely from States which have already granted immunity from any State inheritance tax, but, nevertheless, can not successfully attract the wealthy to their shores unless the Federal estate tax is repealed. (4) That the present Federal estate tax allows a credit on its taxes to the extent of 80 per cent thereof for State inheritance taxes paid, and thus the question of double taxation therefore urged as an additional reason for abolishing the Federal tax has largely been removed. (5) That if the Federal estate tax is ever repealed, the States which are not earnestly and honestly in favor of an inheritance tax may immediately repeal their laws as an invitation and inducement to the wealthy to take refuge within their borders, and the innocent States may be compelled in self-defense to abandon this source of revenue, and within a short time thereafter Federal estate and State inheritance taxes may become a mere memory and relic of the World War, and the extra burden will be shifted proportionately to those who are less able to pay and those who have sacrificed their health and wealth in its successful termination. This we believe to be the real purpose and object of this propaganda: Therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house concurring), That we hereby request the Congress not to repeal or abolish the Federal estate tax; be it further

Resolved, That certified copies of this concurrent resolution be forwarded to Montana's Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

Senate Joint Memorial 1, to the Congress of the United States, praying for the immediate passage of the Tyson-Fitzgerald bill, an act for the relief of disabled emergency Army officers, now pending

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States of America:

Your memorialists, the members of the Twentieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the senate and house concurring, respectfully represent:

Whereas all other classes of officers who fought in the World War have been retired by Congress for their wounds and the disabled emergency Army officers alone have been denied retirement for their mutilations and disabilities; and

Whereas more than 169 of these disabled Army officers have died since this legislation has been before Congress, awaiting in vain the affirmative action of Congress giving them the relief to which they were so justly entitled; and

Whereas it is the claim of the veterans and organizations favoring the passage of this bill that the same is being kept from being enacted into law by parliamentary tactics alone: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to take immediate action on said bill to the end that the same be enacted into law and this discrimination against the disabled emergency Army officers be rectified at the earliest possible moment; and be it further

Resolved, That the secretary of state forward a copy to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to our Representatives in the United States Congress.

Your memorialists, the members of the Twentieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the senate and the house concurring, respectfully represent:

Whereas by an act of Congress of May 23, 1908, provision is made for payment of 25 per cent of all moneys received from each forest reserve to the treasurer of the State or Territory in which said reserve is located for the benefit of the public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which said forest reserve is located; and

Whereas it is the belief of your memorialists that each State and Territory is justly entitled to and should receive all of the moneys from the forest reserve in such State or Territory after deducting administrative and other expenses: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana that the Congress of the United States should enact such legislation as may be necessary to require the payment to each State and Territory in which forest reserves are located of all moneys received from such forest reserves, less administrative and other expenses; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Senators and Representatives of Montana in Congress.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Montana, ss:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the following is a true and correct copy of an act entitled "A resolution expressing the desire of the people of the State of Montana to His Excellency the President of the United States of America and to the Congress of the United States that they take into consideration the necessity on the part of the agricultural interests of the State of Montana for legislation to relieve the present depression which exists in that industry and to set forth the cause and some suggestions for a solution," enacted by the twentieth session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, and approved by J. E. Erickson, governor of said State, on the 18th day of February, 1927.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Senate Joint Resolution 4, expressing the desire of the people of the State of Montana to His Excellency the President of the United States of America and to the Congress of the United States that they take into consideration the necessity on the part of the agricultural interests of the State of Montana for legislation to relieve the present depression which exists in that industry and to set forth the causes and some suggestions for a solution

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of Montana (the House of Representatives concurring):

Whereas Congress has, through special legislation in the form of protective tariff, protected the product of labor and industry from the competition of foreign people and has so saved the American market for the products of American labor and American industry and made possible the American standard of prices, which is far in excess of the standard of world markets; and

Whereas Congress has, through special legislation, known as restricted immigration, protected the American laborer from the disastrous competition of foreign peoples and has so saved the American job for the American laborer and made possible the maintenance of the American standard of wages; and

Whereas the said special classes of legislation have afforded such ample and effective protection to the American laborer and the American manufacturer as to (quoting our President in his message to Congress) "enable them to live according to a better standard and receive a better rate of compensation than any people, any time, anywhere on earth have ever enjoyed"; and

Whereas the protection so afforded to American labor and American manufacturers, supporting for them an American standard of prices for their products, has forced upon the American farmer an American standard of prices for the things he must buy, the taxes he must pay, and the labor he must hire; and

Whereas protective tariffs for agricultural products are almost wholly ineffective, where the product is produced in excess of demand for home consumption; and

Whereas American agriculture does produce an exportable surplus of all of the major products of agriculture and the American farmer therefore finds himself almost wholly unprotected from that disastrous competition of foreign peoples; and

Whereas the American farmer is, therefore, forced to sell his product on the low standard of world prices in open competition with the South American Indian, the peon of India, the peasant of Russia, whose overhead represents the lowest standards of living in the world, and is at the same time forced to buy his necessities from a protected market, at an American standard of prices, bolstered up and sustained behind the protective tariff and restricted immigration walls; and

Whereas this unbalanced condition is chiefly responsible for the distressed condition of agriculture, a condition which has now continued for over four years, and has brought actual bankruptcy upon thousands of farmers and upon business enterprises wholly dependent upon the farmers' prosperity, having in countless instances swept away the accumulated savings of a lifetime; and

Whereas the present better prices of some farm commodities represent only a temporary and local condition and the fundamental cause of the distress has not been removed; and

Whereas we believe the policy above contended for is sound in principle and, if fairly administered, destined to greatly increase the public welfare: Be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Montana (the House of Representatives concurring), That we respectfully urge that Congress, during its present session, pass and place upon our statute books such legislation as will effectively give to agriculture the same protection as is now afforded to industry and labor; and

Whereas the freight rate on grain to the terminal markets is now 40 per cent higher than during the pre-war period and the market price is but about 20 per cent, we recommend a reduction in the freight rates to equalize this condition; and

Whereas the home market for the agricultural products, particularly wheat, is governed by the price of our product in the markets of Europe, we heartily indorse the proposed plan to construct the St. Lawrence River ship canal, which, by lowering the transportation charge, would add to the value of our agricultural products at the primary market; and

Whereas the exportable surplus of agricultural products, and particularly of grains, depresses the home market below the cost of production; and

Whereas by reason of our geographical location our harvests and marketing occur during a few months, but our domestic consumption and exportation of surpluses continue over the year, we urge upon Congress the construction of terminal storage facilities to the end that storage charges be reduced to a minimum so that the primary producer may not be forced, by reason of excessive storage and interest charges, to sacrifice his product in order to meet current expenses, but can avail himself through his cooperative marketing associations of the credit facilities already provided by the Federal Government; and

Whereas the protective tariff does not protect agricultural products sufficiently because of the exportable surplus, that Congress devise some effective method of segregating the exportable surplus, or some means whereby the agricultural industry may itself segregate its surplus to the end that the protection may be made effective on, and that the American market be saved for, the product of the American farmer and an American standard of agricultural commodity prices made possible: Be it

Resolved by the Senate of the State of Montana (the House of Representatives concurring), That we do most earnestly urge upon the President of the United States of American and upon the Congress of the United States the imperative need on the part of the agricultural interests of the State of Montana for legislation to relieve the present depression which exists in that industry and setting forth the causes and some suggestions for a solution.

That the secretary of state transmit this memorial to the President of the United States and to both Houses of Congress.

President of the Senate.

INVITATION TO VISIT FLORIDA'S CAPITAL

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, a resolution was adopted by the Florida Legislature recently inviting certain Senators to visit a portion of Florida, particularly the St. Marks region, during the Christmas recess. I wish to have this resolution printed in the RECORD and to say that if any members of the committees referred to can accept the official invitation of the State of Florida, they may communicate with me on the subject or with Hon. W. C. Hodges, of Tallahassee, the author of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolution is as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 21

Whereas there is situated about 20 miles south of Tallahassee, in Wakulla County, Fla., the harbor of St. Marks, which before the Civil War was one of the most important harbors on the Gulf coast, and which is still available for the uses of commerce and trade, if properly dredged, but which has not been used since the Civil War because of obstructions placed in the mouth of the harbor in the blockade of that port; and

Whereas Congress is interesting itself in the development of harbors along the Florida sea coast and has recently sent an engineer to make some inspection of this port: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate of Florida (the House concurring) do invite the Rivers and Harbors Committee of Congress and the chairman of the Committee on Reclamation and Drainage, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs to visit Tallahassee, the capital of the State, and inspect the port and harbor of St. Marks during the Christmas recess of Congress, 1927, and that a copy of this resolution, signed by the governor and attested by the secretary of state, under the great seal of the State of Florida, be sent the chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of Congress, the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, and the chairman of the Committee on Reclamation and Drainage, and that a copy also be sent to Major General Jadwin, Chief of Engineers, and that he be invited to accompany the members of these committees for this visit and inspection; be it Resolved further, That a copy of this resolution be spread upon the journals of the senate and the house of representatives.

REIMBURSEMENT OF CIVIL WAR EXPENSES OF NEVADA

Mr. ODDIE. I present a petition of officials of the State of Nevada, the legislature of that State not now being in session, praying for the reimbursement of the State for money actually advanced and expended by the State in aiding the Government of the United States in the War between the States, which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PITTMAN. I suggest to my colleague that he ask that the petition which he has presented be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ODDIE. I request that the petition which I have just sent to the desk may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorial from the officials of the State of Nevada (the legislature not being in session) asking for the reimbursement of the State for moneys actually advanced and expended by the State in aid of the Government of the United States during the War between the States

MEMORIAL OF THE STATE OF NEVADA

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

Your memorialists, the executive officers of the State of Nevada (the legislature not now being in session), respectfully pray that an appropriation be made to reimburse the State of Nevada for moneys actually expended by the State for costs, charges, and expenses incurred in enrolling, equipping, and compensating her military forces during the Civil War in response to the urgent calls of and under proper requisitions made by the commanding officer of the Military Department of the Pacific, under direct authority of the President and the Secretary of War, upon the understanding that all such costs, charges, and expenses actually incurred in raising troops for the United States would be reimbursed to the State.

The expenditures made by the State of Nevada for and on account of the United States, and at its most urgent call, are set forth by the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to the act of Congress approved March 3, 1899 (30 Stat. 1206), as follows:

"The amount expended by the State of Nevada, with such interest on the same as the State had paid, between February 10, 1865, and June 30, 1889, amounts in all to the sum of $412,600.31. * * * From June 30, 1889, to December 31, 1899, the State of Nevada has paid the sum of $58,401.27 as interest upon money paid by the State in aiding * * * in the Civil War. (The Supreme Court of the United States in the New York case (160 U. S. 598) held interest paid by the State on borrowed money a proper cost or charge.) * * * The total amount expended by the State of Nevada or by the Territory of Nevada and assumed by said State, with such interest on the same as the said State has actually paid, amounts to $471,001.58. * * * The sum of $8,559.61 was allowed and paid the State of Nevada. * * * This amount deducted from the total paid by the State of Nevada leaves the sum of $462,441.97 for which the State has not been reimbursed." (H. Doc. No. 322, 56th Cong., 1st sess.)

No part of the sum actually expended has been reimbursed the State of Nevada other than the small amount credited, although the costs, charges, and expenses, including interest, incurred by other States in aid of the Government during the Civil War have been paid said States.

The State of Nevada is in urgent need of the sum due her from the United States, and your memorialists believe that if the attention of Congress is again invited to this matter it will appreciate the justness of her request for reimbursement.

Your attention is respectfully called to a few salient facts. The Territory of Nevada was created by act of Congress approved March 2, 1861. It embraced a generally mountainous and desert region of nearly 100,000 square miles and comprised a then population, exclusive of Indians, of but approximately 15,000. A Territorial government was made necessary by the then recent discoveries of great gold and silver mines. Early in 1861 the Government withdrew all troops from the Pacific coast, excepting one regiment of Infantry and three batteries of Artillery, to guard practically the entire Mexican cession and the Oregon country, nearly one-third of the area of the United States. In 1863, by reason of activities at sea, the ocean route to the Pacific was closed. The overland route was left the only means of communication. This route also was threatened with closure by warring Indians and bandits. The Territory of Nevada was called upon to furnish troops in this exigency. This required money, which the Territorial treasury did not possess. The Territory authorized a bond issue and answered the Government's urgent calls with a regiment of Cavalry and a battalion of Infantry. The overland route was kept open to California and the Comstock Lode and other Nevada mines permitted to continue operations. These mines turned into the Treasury of the United States during the years of and immediately following the Civil War a half billion dollars of gold and silver. On March 21, 1864, just two months after the people of the Territory had overwhelmingly defeated a proposed State constitution, authorized by act of the Territorial legislative council, Congress passed an enabling act and the people of Nevada were asked to assume the obligations of statehood. So important is this matter that we quote from Charles A. Dana, then Assistant Secretary of War, the following excerpt from his book Recollections of the Civil War:

"The administration had decided that the Constitution of the United States should be amended so that slavery should be abolished. This was not only a change in our national policy, it was also a most important military measure. * * * It was believed that such an amendment would be equivalent to new armies, in the field, that it would be worth at least a million men. * * * When that question came to be considered, the issue was seen to be so close that one State more was necessary. The State of Nevada was organized and admitted into the Union to answer that purpose."

The author proceeds and quotes President Lincoln, when the question of the vote upon admission was in doubt, as saying:

"Here is the alternative, that we carry this vote or be compelled to raise another million, and I don't know how many more men, and fight no one knows how long."

The State was morally bound to assume the Territorial debts and obligations. It did so as a part of the Constitution. President Lincoln, with whom Congress alone left the matter, upon receipt of a copy of the Constitution sent by telegraph, approved the same with that provision.

We call the attention of Congress to the fact that the appropriate committees of both the Senate and House of Representatives have in past years repeatedly made exhaustive investigations of Nevada's war expenditures and have in every instance reported upon the same favorably, and that the Senate on three separate occasions passed measures carrying an appropriation for reimbursement. In this connection we crave the indulgence of the Congress to be permitted to have three distinguished statesmen, among the many who have considered the matter, again speak in behalf of our State:

Senator Hawley, of Connecticut: "There is no sort of question as to its justice."

Senator Hale, of Maine: "The Senate is committed to this State claim by vote, by sentiment, and it is only a question of time when it will pass."

Senator Teller, of Colorado: "If there are any claims that are just and proper which the United States ought to pay, this is one of them. It is as sacred an obligation, in my judgment, as the national bonds." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 56th Cong., 1st sess., vol. 33, p. 6278.)

It is respectfully submitted, in conclusion, that the conditions under which these expenditures were made were in many respects peculiar to Nevada alone; that the justice of reimbursement has not only been established, but we believe a moral obligation is also involved stronger, if possible, than the mere legality of the obligation; that since reimbursement has been so long delayed it would be but an act of tardy justice to appropriate the sum necessary for such reimbursement at the present session of Congress.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAN FRANCISCO BAY

Mr. JOHNSON. I introduce a bill providing for the construction of a bridge by the city of San Francisco.

The bill (S. 1762) granting consent to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Bay of San Francisco from Rincon Hill to a point near the South Mole of San Antonio Estuary, in the county of Alameda, in said State, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JOHNSON. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce a communication from the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco in respect of the bill just introduced by me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The communication is as follows:

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO,
Washington, D. C., December 14, 1927.

HON. HIRAM W. JOHNSON,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR JOHNSON: The Board of Supervisors of the City and County of San Francisco, State of California, by resolution adopted in regular meeting December 5, 1927, authorized me, as chairman of the bridge committee of said board, to deliver to you, with a request for presentation to the Seventieth Congress of the United States, a bill granting to the city and county of San Francisco a permit to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Bay of San Francisco from Rincon Hill in the city and county of San Francisco to a point near the South Mole of San Antonio Estuary in the county of Alameda, State of California.

In accordance with the instructions contained in said resolution, I herewith hand to you a certified copy of the proposed bill, and respectfully request that you introduce the same in the Congress. I also hand to you herewith a certified copy of the report of Robert Ridgway, Arthur N. Talbot, and John D. Galloway, board of engineers, which report is referred to in said proposed bill as being on file in the office of the Secretary of War of the United States.

In support of its application for a permit to construct a transbay bridge, San Francisco cites the following reasons:

1. The bridge is necessary for the safety and convenience of the public.

2. The bridge is indispensable to the financial and economic growth of northern California.

In amplification of the above permit me to call attention to the following facts:

San Francisco Bay is overcrowded with ferries. Shipping in San Francisco Bay is second in point of volume only to that of the harbor of New York. Over 11,000 vessels passed into and out of the harbor last year. Eighteen lines of ferries, making an aggregate of over 850 crossings daily, convey 50,000 people over the bay twice a day across the main lines of commercial shipping. In 1926 ferry trips of interurban type between San Francisco and east bay cities numbered 43,550,678; main-line passenger trips numbered 1,676,518. This bay ferry traffic creates a navigation menace. The menace is great and is constantly increasing. It is enhanced by frequent and sometimes very heavy fogs. The time required to cross the bay by ferry—18 minutes—is unduly long. This constitutes a distinct detriment to business and a grave hardship upon business people. Automobile traffic, now so important to the growth of city and State, is impeded. In 1926 over 2,500,000 automobiles were transported by ferry between Oakland and San Francisco. Congestion of automobiles in highway approaches to and from the city is frequent and often acute. San Francisco and adjacent cities and towns of the peninsula suffer from lack of direct and unbroken road connections with highways across the bay.

The bridge as planned by a board of engineers, the personnel of which was recommended by the presidents of four universities of the State of California, represents months of intensive study. It will be of double-deck and will accommodate foot and vehicular travel, as well as suburban trains, to which may be diverted traffic from all main lines of passenger transportation. It will be 12,000 feet long, will have 20 spans, 2 of these with a horizontal clearance of 1,250 feet each. It will have a vertical clearance of 150 feet over 2½ miles of deep water of the bay. This vertical clearance is 15 feet greater than that of the four bridges over the East River at New York and the Philadelphia-Camden bridge over the Delaware River. There will be one movable span, which it is expected will be used only on rare occasions. Shipping men are agreed that the bridge will not interfere with shipping. Indeed, they approve of and urge the bridge on the ground that it will be an aid to shipping. The bridge will not interfere with the proposed United States naval base at Alameda. The city of Alameda, by proper resolution, has indorsed the proposed bridge and is joining in the application for a permit to construct the bridge at the location specified. There will be no interference with Oakland Harbor or with present plans for the development of that harbor. On the San Francisco side of the bay most of the wharves and by far the largest wharves lie north of the bridge and are not affected thereby. The members of the board of engineers are emphatic in saying in their report that there will be "no interference with shipping in any part of the bay." San Francisco Bay, with its area of 463 square miles, is one of the largest natural harbors on the globe; the area of deep water available for anchorage is sufficient to accommodate the navies of the world. Clearances provided by the proposed bridge are more than sufficient to pass the largest ships in the United States Navy. The line of the bridge crosses over the northern portion of the United States fleet anchorage as that anchorage is depicted on paper; this can be obviated by moving this anchorage about 1,000 yards southward, where ample deep-water anchorage exists.

Within the last two years 26 applications for a franchise to construct a bridge across the bay have been made to the Board of Supervisors of San Francisco. Perhaps every possible route and every possible type of bridge have been suggested. Voluminous maps, drawings, engineering digests, and blue prints have been filed. Discussion of and arguments on these various applications progressed before the board of supervisors for over six months. Many noteworthy engineers prepared or contributed to the plans and discussions. The entire subject matter, therefore, has been inquired into most exhaustively. Much money has been spent in research. San Francisco itself has spent some $50,000 of municipal moneys in an endeavor to determine the very best type of bridge and the very best location. It is the sincere belief of city officials that the bridge as now planned between Rincon Hill and Alameda Mole represents the very best of engineering advice and legal counsel.

This San Francisco transbay bridge enterprise is neither provincial in its conception nor local in its significance. San Francisco is the financial center of the great Pacific coast. Her bank clearings are greater than those of any city west of Chicago. Nearly 2,000,000 people are concentrated within 50 miles of her borders. With her destiny is bound up vitally the destiny of many, if not most, of the populous communities of the West. Her success is their success; her prosperity is their prosperity. The transbay bridge will promote the growth and serve the convenience of them all. Indeed, it is the expectation and the hope that it will be of service and advantage to the entire country. The Chief Executive of this Nation in one of his first and most important utterances since the opening of the present Congress stressed the fact that: "It can not be too often said that this is all one country. Agriculture, industry, transportation, and finance should realize," he stated, "that they are interdependent and that each may prosper by extending its services to the others."

San Francisco wants to extend its services to others in this matter of transportation. She wants to make straight and safe the path that leads to her door. She is not fearful of the financial burden that she may have to bear or the construction problems that she may have to solve. She is serene in her confidence that she can meet all these. She wants to be brought into closer contact with her sister cities and towns of the Nation; she wants these cities and towns to be brought into closer contact with her. She aspires to make contribution to the convenience, safety, and prosperity of the people of city, State, and Nation. Her aspirations have been fostered and encouraged by the entire State of California; they have received particular encouragement from the people of northern California. The cities and towns of the entire San Francisco Bay region are in complete accordance with her bridge plan and route. From no civic body, from no political subdivision, from no commercial organization has come any word of dissent. San Francisco has the hearty and undivided cooperation of her sister cities. All she now asks is congressional permission as defined in the accompanying bill. Granted this, she will proceed with all possible expedition to construct across San Francisco Bay a bridge which will serve millions of people of the present generation and anticipate the needs of added millions of people of generations to come.

Very sincerely yours,

JAS. B. MCSHEEHY.

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I introduce a bill for the relief of agriculture and ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The bill (S. 1764) to establish a Federal farm board to aid in the orderly marketing and in the control and disposition of the surplus of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement in regard to the bill I have just introduced.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator from Arkansas will proceed.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, not with the view of delaying the passage of an adequate farm relief measure do I introduce this bill, but I do so with the belief that it may be by the committee so incorporated into whatever measure shall by the committee be reported to the Senate that it will meet the objections of those who honestly wish to be helpful to the farmer but have been unable for reasons that to them seem adequate to support the McNary-Haugen bill.

The bill which I have just introduced has incorporated in it every provision of that measure as to the appointment of the board, their qualifications, powers, and duties. It differs from that measure only in the method proposed for caring for the surplus of any farm product when and after the board shall declare that such a surplus either exists or will exist.

It gives an opportunity to those who have contended that they wish to give the farmers the benefit of the tariff. It will give the farmer the benefit of the highest schedules that are enjoyed by any manufacturing institution within the United States.

The plan is this: Whenever there shall be a surplus, for instance, we will say, of cotton, and it shall have been so declared by the board, then any cooperative association of cotton growers or any such association—it makes no difference under what title it be called—may issue certificates or debentures to those who wish to export cotton, and those debentures shall be presented, together with the bills of lading for the cotton to be exported, to the customs officials of the port from which the cotton is to be shipped and shall receive for the debentures a customs certificate, which shall be negotiable and which empowers its holder to import into the United States, duty free, any merchandise of the value of such exported cotton which the holder of such certificate may wish to import into this country.

Inasmuch as there are many articles, such as aluminum, on which the duty, for instance, is practically 100 per cent, therefore the holder of this certificate would be enabled to import, duty free, merchandise that would otherwise have to pay a duty of practically 100 per cent.

As an illustration, we annually export about $500,000,000 worth of cotton. If such cotton should be exported after the board shall have declared there was a surplus of cotton, the exporter of the cotton could then bring into this country merchandise, duty free, which, if it had been imported under other conditions, would cost in duties about $500,000,000. In other words, by reason of the fact that the purchaser has exported farm products, he will get a rebate in his duties of about $500,000,000. The result will be quite apparent. There will be a high market for farm products which will be exported after the board shall have declared there was a surplus. It is certain that under those conditions farm products to be exported would command a premium easily of 50 per cent above the domestic market for like products.

Europe, which now can not buy farm products from us because we have all the free gold, so they can not pay with that, and our tariff wall is so high they can not trade with us, would be enabled under the provisions of this bill to buy at very much above the market price our farm products, because they could then sell to us their merchandise and have it imported into America duty free.

If it is the desire now to give the farmer the protection of the highest rate of duty now enjoyed by any merchandise in America, the provisions of this bill will give it, and it will take out of this country every dollar's worth of our surplus farm products at a greatly enhanced price.

It will do more than that; it will stop short selling of farm products. It will give a market for surplus farm products far above the world price for such farm products.

With a hope that there are those who really want to relieve the farmer of the unjust burden that he has borne under our present industrial conditions, this bill is introduced, and their support solicited.

I ask unanimous consent that the bill which I have just introduced may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The bill (S. 1764) is as follows:

A bill (S. 1764) to establish a Federal farm board to aid in the orderly marketing and in the control and disposition of the surplus of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce

Be it enacted, etc.—

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SECTION 1. In order to stabilize the current of interstate and foreign commerce in the marketing of agricultural commodities and to prevent existing suppression of commerce with foreign nations in such commodities and unjust discrimination against and undue restraints and burdens upon such foreign commerce in favor of interstate or intrastate commerce in such commodity, it is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress to promote the orderly marketing of agricultural commodities in interstate and foreign commerce, and to that end, through the execution of the provisions of this act, to provide for the control and disposition of surpluses of such commodities, to preserve advantageous domestic markets for such commodities, to prevent such surpluses from unduly depressing the prices obtained for such commodities and from causing undue and excessive fluctuations in the markets for such commodities, to minimize speculation and waste in marketing such commodities, and to further the organization of producers of such commodities into cooperative associations.

(i) Shall advise producers, through their organizations or otherwise, in the development of suitable programs of planting or breeding in order that they may secure such benefits.

COMMODITY ADVISORY COUNCILS

SEC. 4. (a) For each agricultural commodity to which the board from time to time determines the provisions of sections 6 and 7 should be extended the board is hereby authorized and directed to create an advisory council of seven members fairly representative of the producers of such commodity. Members of each commodity advisory council shall be selected annually by the board from lists submitted by cooperative associations or other organizations representative of the producers of the commodity. Members of each commodity advisory council shall serve without salary, but may be paid by the board a per diem compensation not exceeding $20 for attending meetings of the council and for time devoted to other business of the council and authorized by the board. Each council member shall be paid by the board his necessary traveling expenses to and from meetings of the council and his expenses incurred for subsistence, or per diem allowance in lieu thereof, within the limitations prescribed by law, while engaged upon the business of the council. Each commodity advisory council shall be designated by the name of the commodity it represents, as, for example, "the cotton advisory council."

(b) Each commodity advisory council shall meet as soon as practicable after its selection at a time and place designated by the board and shall select a chairman. The board may designate a secretary of the council, subject to the approval of the council.

(c) Each commodity advisory council shall meet thereafter at least twice in each year at a time and place designated by the board, or upon call of a majority of its members at a time and place designated in the call, notice of such call being sent by registered mail at least 10 days before the date of the meeting.

LOANS

SEC. 5. The board is authorized to make loans out of the revolving fund hereinafter created to any cooperative association upon such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe for the purpose of assisting the cooperative association (1) in controlling the surplus of any agricultural commodity in excess of the requirements for orderly marketing, or (2) in the acquisition, by purchase, construction, or otherwise, of facilities to be used in the storage, processing, or sale or other disposition of the commodity. The aggregate amount of loans under this section, outstanding and unpaid at any one time, shall not exceed $250,000,000, nor shall the aggregate amount of loans under this section for the acquisition of facilities, outstanding and unpaid at any one time, exceed $25,000,000. Any loan under this section shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum.

DEBENTURES

SEC. 6. (a) Whenever the board finds—

First. That there is or may be during the ensuing year a surplus above the requirements for the orderly marketing of any agricultural commodity or above the domestic requirements for such commodity; and Second. That both the advisory council for such commodity and a substantial number of cooperative associations or other organizations representing the producers of the commodity favor the full cooperation of the board in the marketing and exportation of the commodity, then the board, after publicly declaring its finding may promote the exportation of such commodity by the issuance of debentures to cooperative associations producing such commodity or any agent of such association. Debentures shall be issued during a period the time for the commencement and termination of which shall be fixed by the board and which may be extended by it from time to time.

(b) Whenever the board has so found, it shall notify the Secretary of the Treasury of its findings, and on and after the date fixed by the board for the commencement of the debenture period the Secretary shall provide for the acceptance of the debentures issued in accordance with the provisions of section 7.

(c) Any decision of the board relating to the commencement, extension, or termination of a debenture period shall require the affirmative vote of a majority of the appointed members in office, and of members of the board representing Federal land bank districts which in the aggregate produced during the preceding crop year, according to the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, more than 50 per cent of such commodity.

SEC. 7. (a) On and after the date so fixed for the commencement of the debenture period the board shall issue (as provided in subdivision (c)) to any cooperative association (as defined in section 12) or to any authorized agent of such association, debentures in an amount equal to the export price of the commodity produced by such association (or its members) and exported by such association or agent.

(b) As used in this section the term "export price" means the price at which a commodity is sold, or agreed to be sold, for export by or for the account of the cooperative association producing such commodity.

(c) The board shall issue debentures—

(1) After publication made in accordance with regulations prescribed by it.

(2) Upon submission of proof satisfactory to it (A) in respect of the export price, (B) that the commodity to be exported has been produced by the association or its members, and (C) that no debenture has heretofore been issued on account of such commodity.

(3) At such places, by such officers or agents of the board, and subject to such regulations as it may prescribe.

(d) Debentures may be assigned or transferred in any other manner by any such association or agent, and shall provide that any person holding such debenture shall be entitled to have it received by any collector (as defined in section 401 of the tariff act of 1922) in lieu of payment for duties otherwise collectible against articles imported by the holder.

(e) The holder of any such debenture shall be entitled to import into the United States free of duty articles equal in value (as defined in section 402 of the tariff act of 1922) to the face value of the debentures so held, irrespective of the nature or amount of duty otherwise collectible against such articles.

(f) The board shall prepare and issue and shall prescribe the terms and conditions in respect of debentures. The Secretary of the Treasury, upon request of the board, is authorized to have such debentures prepared at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, but the cost thereof shall be paid by the board.

(g) Debentures issued under authority of this act shall be obligations of the United States within the definition in section 147 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, as amended, and all provisions of chapter 7 of such act, as amended, shall apply in respect of any such debenture.

(h) Any person who shall make any false statement for the purpose of fraudulently procuring, or shall attempt in any manner fraudulently to procure, the issuance or acceptance of any debenture, whether for the benefit of such person or of any other person, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

REVOLVING FUND

SEC. 8. (a) In accordance with regulations prescribed by the board, there shall be established a revolving fund, to be administered by and to be exclusively under the control of the board. The board shall have the exclusive power of expending the moneys in such fund.

(b) For the purposes of the revolving fund there is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $250,000,000, to be made available by the Congress as soon as practicable after the approval of this act, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall deposit in the revolving fund such portions of the amounts appropriated therefor as the board from time to time deems necessary.

(c) The deposits to the credit of the revolving fund shall be made in a public depositary of the United States. All general laws relating to the embezzlement, conversion, or to the improper handling, retention, use, or disposal of public moneys of the United States shall apply to moneys deposited to the credit of the fund or withdrawn therefrom but in the custody of any officer or employee of the United States.

(d) In addition to the deposits made by the Secretary of the Treasury, there shall be deposited to the credit of the revolving fund repayments of loans to cooperative associations under section 5, and interest thereon.

(e) There shall be disbursed from the revolving fund the loans to cooperative associations under section 5, and the salaries and expenses of such experts as the board determines should be payable from the fund.

EXAMINATION OF BOOKS AND ACCOUNTS OF THE BOARD

SEC. 9. Expenditures by the board from the appropriation for administrative expenses under section 11 shall be allowed and paid upon the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by the chairman of the board. Expenditures by the board from the revolving fund shall be made by authorized officers or agents of the board upon receipt of itemized vouchers therefor, approved by such officers as the board may designate. Vouchers so made for expenditures from the revolving fund shall be final and conclusive upon all officers of the Government, except that all financial transactions of the board shall, subject to the above limitation, be examined by the General Accounting Office at such times and in such manner as the Comptroller General of the United States may prescribe. Such examinations in respect of expenditures from the revolving fund shall be for the sole purpose of making a report to the Congress and to the board of expenditures in violation of law, together with such recommendations as the Comptroller General deems advisable concerning the receipt, disbursement, and application of funds administered by the board.

COOPERATION WITH EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

SEC. 10. (a) It shall be the duty of any governmental establishment in the executive branch of the Government, upon request by the board or upon Executive order, to cooperate with and render assistance to the board in carrying out any of the provisions of this act and the regulations of the board. The board shall, in cooperation with any such governmental establishment, avail itself of the services and facilities of such governmental establishment in order to avoid preventable expense or duplication of effort.

(b) The President may by Executive order direct any such governmental establishment to furnish the board with such information and data pertaining to the functions of the board as may be contained in the records of such governmental establishment. The order of the President may provide such limitations as to the use of the information and data as he deems desirable.

(c) The board may cooperate with any State or Territory, or department, agency, or political subdivision thereof, or with any person.

ADMINISTRATIVE APPROPRIATION

SEC. 11. For expenses in the administration of the functions vested in the board by this act there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500,000, to be available to the board for such expenses (including salaries and expenses of the members, officers, and employees of the board and the per diem compensation and expenses of members of the commodity advisory councils) incurred prior to July 1, 1929.

GENERAL DEFINITIONS

(b) Whenever any agricultural commodity has regional or market classifications or types which in the judgment of the board are so different from each other in use or marketing methods as to require their treatment as separate commodities under this act, the board may determine upon and designate one or more such classifications or types for such treatment.

SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

SEC. 13. If any provision of this act is declared unconstitutional or the applicability thereof to any person, circumstance, commodity, or class of transactions in respect of any commodity is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and the applicability of such provision to other persons, circumstances, commodities, and classes of transactions shall not be affected thereby.

Whereas the Department of Agriculture, on or about September 15, 1927, made public a report purporting to give a reliable estimate of the world carry-over of cotton as of July 31, 1927, which contained statements that were inaccurate and based upon information received from nonofficial sources; and

Whereas the Department of Agriculture, on or about September 15, 1927, made public a report relating to the probable farm price situation during the balance of the year which contained predictions that the future trend of cotton prices would be lower; and

THE TARIFF

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next business in order is resolutions coming over from a preceding day. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read Senate Resolution 52, submitted by Mr. MCMASTER on the 13th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Senate favors an immediate lowering of tariff schedules, and tariff legislation, embodying lowered schedules, should be considered and enacted during the present session of Congress; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the House of Representatives.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may go over without prejudice, to be called up by the Senator from South Dakota when he sees fit.

Mr. MCMASTER. Mr. President, because of the fact that several Senators who are interested in the adoption of this resotion have requested that it go over for a few days, I have no objection to the request made by the Senator from Kansas.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will go over without prejudice.

SIX-YEAR TERM FOR PRESIDENT

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, on December 13 I had inserted in the RECORD a collection of statements by notable characters of the country regarding a six-year term for President. I ask unanimous consent that this may be made a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not the agreement that was made between the House and the Senate is going to stand on the question of printing matters both in the RECORD and as public documents. A complaint has come to me during the present session that such orders have been made two or three times during this session. If the Senate is going to insist upon that course, the House is going to follow the same course; but the Joint Committee on Printing of the Senate and the House passed a resolution that such matters could be printed either as public documents or in the RECORD, but not in both forms.

I know that the other course has been followed twice at this session, and I do not refer to it now with a view of objecting to this request; but I want to be able to say to the members of the joint committee in the House that I have called attention to the subject here, and hereafter I shall ask that such matters be printed either as public documents or in the RECORD, whichever Senators desire.

Since the Senator from Washington has not been notified of it, if he still asks that this matter be printed as a public document, I have no objection; but that is the reason for the statement I have made.

Mr. DILL. I am not insisting upon it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the matter referred to will be printed as a public document.

STATUE OF ALEXANDER HAMILTON STEPHENS

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the report of the proceedings in Statuary Hall, in the Capitol, on the 8th instant, on the occasion of the unveiling of the statue of Alexander Hamilton Stephens.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

Ceremonies at the unveiling of the statue of Alexander Hamilton Stephens, of Georgia, held in Statuary Hall in the Capitol, Washington, D. C., on December 8, 1927, pursuant to House Concurrent Resolution 3, Seventieth Congress, first session, which is as follows:

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the statue of Alexander H. Stephens, presented by the State of Georgia, to be placed in Statuary Hall, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered the State for the contribution of the statue of one of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for his distinguished humanitarian service.

"Resolved further, That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the Governor of Georgia."

The meeting was called to order at 3 o'clock p. m. by Senator WILLIAM J. HARRIS, of Georgia, the presiding officer.

Senator HARRIS. Dr. J. Sprole Lyons, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Atlanta, Ga., will offer the invocation. Doctor Lyons.

INVOCATION

Almighty God, we thank Thee for lives which honor Thee in leading their fellow men in paths of righteousness and peace and true patriotism. As we gather in this great hall devoted to the memory of the best of our Nation, we are grateful for the patriot and statesman whose memory we honor to-day, whose body was all too frail an habitation for his mighty spirit, but whose heroic life has been, and continues to be, a benediction and an inspiration to his country, and especially to his State, which now honors itself in honoring him.

We dedicate this statue to-day, wrought in the beautiful marble of the Georgia which he loved so well and served so faithfully, to be a token of the devotion of the people of that State to his memory, as well as a sacramental seal of the Union of the free and equal States which, please God, shall never be broken. We leave it to-day in the goodly company of the immortals of our Nation under the sheltering dome of its Capitol, and consecrated to the holy mission of keeping alive in the hearts of our Nation those ideals and passions which shall make America, and keep America, that blessed and happy people whose God is the law. In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit. Amen.

ADDRESS OF SENATOR WILLIAM J. HARRIS

Senator HARRIS. The United States has every reason to be proud of Alexander Hamilton Stephens. Obstacles to him were only steppingstones to higher and nobler things. For 8 years he was in the legislature of his State, for 16 years before the Civil War he was a Member of Congress of the United States, for 4 years during the Civil War he was Vice President of the Confederate States, for 10 years after the Civil War he was again a Member of the Congress of the United States, and he died while he was governor of his State. Thus he was 38 years in the service of the people of Georgia as their lawmaker and one as their governor.

Few men in the history of the United States have given so great a length of service, and none has rendered to his State and his Nation service that better entitled him to the honor of being acclaimed one of the two greatest men in her history. He was also the peer of the best ever in the history of the United States in his high character, broad intelligence, and unselfish service. He had all these in such a measure that I am proud that he was a Georgian and that it is my privilege, as one of the Georgia Senators, to take part in accepting this statue, which placed in this hall proclaims to the long ages ahead that both his State and his Nation considered him worthy of the very highest honor.

No man in the world's history ever surpassed Alexander H. Stephens in the steadfastness of his devotion to the principles of truth, justice, and mercy. His private life was without fear and without reproach and full of incidents of helpfulness to those in need, especially to young men seeking aid to attend college. His public career shows him time and again placing loyalty to principles above subservience to political party, time and again refusing to follow where he thought principles were being set aside for party purposes. On the tablet of his heart was written the sentence often quoted by him, "Times change and men change with them, but principles never." No man ever strove harder to be guided by those principles that preserve the permanent interests of humanity. He was—

"One who cared not to be great
But as he served or saved his State."

There are several events in his life that prove that his devotion to principles was superior to his desire for praise or applause. He favored the annexation of Texas, though the Whig Party, to which he belonged, opposed it. He was denounced as a traitor to his party, but he unflinchingly persisted in the path which he had deliberately chosen. Before the Georgia Legislature of November, 1860, and the secession convention of January, 1861, he opposed the secession of his State from the United States. He did his best to stop that resistless tide of public opinion that organized the Confederate States in the winter of 1860–61. In these, and in almost every other position he took, we can now see that he was both patriotic and wise. Time has vindicated his judgment. We now see clearly that he was a great statesman.

He was also a great parliamentarian and a great orator. These gifts he devoted to the highest interest of his country, to the preservation of the Union, and to the cause of constitutional liberty. For 26 years he was a Member of the lower House of Congress, and he was elected by his State to be its United States Senator just after the close of the War between the States, just after he returned from a prison of the United States at Fort Warren, Boston Harbor, Mass.; but he was denied admission to the Senate because of the reconstruction policy then in force toward the once seceded States. Shut out from service in the Halls of Congress, he then devoted his time to the production of his greatest literary work, which he entitled "The War Between the States." This work, in two large volumes, presented what is now generally conceded to be the clearest and strongest statement ever made of the right of secession under the Constitution of the United States, and it stands to-day as the best defense of the conduct of the South during the war. This great defense of the South finished, he accepted service again in the House of Representatives and voluntarily withdrew to become governor of his State.

The career of Alexander H. Stephens is one of the marvels of human history. Though a delicate boy with poor health throughout his whole life he became a tower of strength to his people. His father was a farmer and a teacher of country schools and trained his own children to work and to study. Thus, in his childhood, Alexander H. Stephens worked on a farm after he was 6 years old and attended school two or three months of the year. When he was 15 years old his father died and left him penniless, but a charitably disposed citizen provided for his attendance in a high school, and by borrowing money he was able to attend the university of his State, where he graduated with first honor and obtained the thorough scholarship that enabled him to study law without a tutor and enter the bar. He very soon distinguished himself and was prospering as a lawyer when he was elected to the legislature of his State and began the long and noble service to his country which ended only with his death. His surely was a life devoted to his country. How appropriate now that his country, grateful for his service and proud of his achievements, should wish to preserve his image in this place, the very place where his voice was once heard pleading for the principles of justice. This marble reproduces his form, and its being here will prove to all future generations that he was one of the greatest men who ever lived in Georgia.

Looking back over the years it is interesting and very impressive to note that four of the men whose statues stand in this hall were born in Georgia not far apart. Dr. Crawford Long was a roommate of Mr. Stephens at the University of Georgia. The Confederate general, Joseph Wheeler, who served later in the Spanish-American War, was captured just after the Civil War and sent to prison with Mr. Stephens. Mr. Stephens and General Wheeler in the early eighties served together in the United States Congress. General Wheeler and Dr. J. L. M. Curry's statues were placed here by the State of Alabama. General Wheeler was born in Augusta, Ga.; Doctor Curry in Columbia County, Ga. Sequoia, the Indian chief whose statue was placed here by the State of Oklahoma, was also born in Georgia.

Robert Toombs and Alexander H. Stephens were born in the same county near the same time, and they were close personal friends. They entered the Congress of the United States about the same time, Toombs in 1845, Stephens in 1843. As both were Whigs and both of supereminent abilities and from the same State, they were often called the twins of Georgia. They were, however, of very different temperaments, Toombs impetuous and brilliant and commanding, Stephens quiet and thoughtful and persuasive, but they were linked in friendship so strong that no differences ever affected it. They are still linked so closely in the hearts of all Georgians that whenever one of them is mentioned the other is always thought of, and usually spoken of; and now that one of this noble pair is selected for the signal honor of this occasion the name of the other comes to our lips.

Toombs said at the grave of Stephens, "His acts are written in letters of gold. He was the child of the State, the child of the Republic, yes, the child of humanity, and his was one of the few immortal names that were not born to die. He took his mission from his conscience—the voice of God." [Applause.]

At the time of the death of Governor Stephens, former Gov. N. E. Harris was a member of the legislature and was chairman of the memorial committee. He said of Mr. Stephens:

"He lived for Georgia. There was no drop of blood in his veins that did not bear the image of his mother State. He was a great man, and the fact that he confined himself to the study of what was best for the country and his State gave him a supremacy in those early days following the war that no man could dispute."

My late friend and colleague in the Senate, Hon. Thomas E. Watson, was a member of the Georgia Legislature memorial committee and made the following statement about Mr. Stephens:

"He fell on sleep like a child weary and worn. Great Nature, the common mother, holds him tenderly to her bosom. When he shall awaken it is inspiring to believe that he shall greet the morning in a land where there is no night, where the skies are undimmed by a cloud, where the feet bleed upon no pathway of stones, and the head wears no crown of thorns."

I was requested by the committee to announce that when the names of the following people are called they will please rise. The committee regrets that on account of the length of the program they can not ask them to made addresses.

I will ask Judge Alexander W. Stephens, representing the Stephens family in Georgia, to please rise.

(Judge Stephens rose and was greeted by applause.)

Senator HARRIS. I will ask John M. Graham, private secretary of Mr. Stephens, to please rise.

(Mr. Graham rose and was greeted with applause.)

Senator HARRIS. I will ask Mr. Elias, of Washington, private secretary of Mr. Stephens while in Congress, to please rise.

Mr. HALLMAN. He does not seem to be here.

Senator HARRIS. Will Mrs. Rebecca Latimer Felton, ex-Senator Felton, the only woman Senator of the United States, please rise?

(Mrs. Felton rose and was greeted with applause.)

Senator HARRIS. Mr. Gutzon Borglum will now address us in presenting to the Atlanta Chapter of the Daughters of the Confederacy his services as sculptor.

ADDRESS BY GUTZON BORGLUM

Mr. BORGLUM. Mr. Chairman, Senators from Georgia, your excellency the governor of the State, Mr. President, and Daughters of the Confederacy, I have the honor to tell you that the portrait statue of your great citizen, our fellow American, Alexander Hamilton Stephens, late Vice President of the Confederacy, is finished and here safely delivered in the Capitol of the Union, where it will remain under the protection of the United States as a part of the record of the life of this great Nation.

It would be as unbecoming for me, as the sculptor, to praise too much my own as it would be for a mother to say too much about the merits of her child, but we are not dealing primarily with art or its merits to-day, but rather with the record that we are writing in marble in the history of this Nation.

Carlyle once said, "I am a poor man, but I would gladly give one-half of all I possess had some artist in his day drawn a true portrait of the Christ, that humanity might see just how the Son of God looked, how He appeared, just what were His features, what the form assumed by the Son of God."

Mr. Chairman, I have had the honor for many years of serving the people of the South, in helping them develop the record of their great. In that service I have become profoundly impressed with the chivalry, the unique independence, the purity of motive, the spirit of southern knighthood rising to greatness. I have found they have a peculiar solitary quality, and I have found also that the South has been strangely prolific in her contribution of both men and women who have played a necessary and constructive part in the shaping of our great civilization. I have also found that no part of America's history to date is so wanting a true record, true portraiture, as the story of the South.

I am not going to discuss the virtue of Stephens—that will be left to others who will follow—further than to say that he hardly needs a monument, and, like Lee and Jackson and Forrest and Johnston, Hoke and Jordan, we can do little, if anything, to add to his fame; but lest we forget the price they paid that they might be honest before their God and their country, and that we and our children and our children's children shall not be without example of the kind of men they were, we, their contemporaries, must erect monuments to pass on to posterity true records of what manner of men they were.

God in his judgment chose the better part of mankind to rear our children, and so it was to the mothers of men he entrusted the youth of the world. It is almost while at our mother's breast we hear the first stories of our father's greatness and there fall in our first sleep and dream of the adventure and the romance of life. How natural, then, it should have been that the Daughters of the Confederacy, the United Daughters, should have been entrusted in the South with keeping the faith and making the record. It is to you, dear women, who have played the parent to the veteran of the Confederacy, that is due the credit of the preservation of what we have of art and memory of the great. You have long known that I hold that the War between the States was a necessary tragedy for the founding of a greater Union, and you also know that I have long held that the record of that whole war, North and South, is an integral part of our Union history. We want to know, and we want it written down in marble, in bronze, yes, in gold, who of our brothers fought brothers, frankly and fearlessly. For that, and that alone, I have labored, but it was also because of my awakening to the truth of the imperishable part you sisters, wives, and mothers of our fathers, which showed me how sacred, how imperative the need of the record was, that I have given so much and will continue to give to help. Please accept this from me in that spirit.

Senator HARRIS. There will now take place the unveiling of the statue by little Miss Ida Stephens, great grandniece of Mr. Stephens, and Sam Venable Mason, young son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank T. Mason, of Atlanta.

(The statue was thereupon unveiled amid the applause of the audience.)

Senator HARRIS. "Alexander Hamilton Stephens" is the subject of an address to be given now by Dr. Garnett W. Quillian, of Atlanta, Ga., in presenting the statue to the State of Georgia in behalf of the donors. [Applause.]

ADDRESS BY DR. GARRETT W. QUILLIAN

Doctor QUILLIAN. That man is great who has the strength to serve, the patience to suffer, who seeks not to conquer the world, but, mastering himself, spends his life and energies in unselfish service for his fellow man.

Such a man was Alexander Hamilton Stephens. His entire career was one of devoted sacrificial public service.

With patience and fortitude in overcoming in early life difficulties multiplied, he was laying for himself a foundation for true greatness which was exemplified in what he did, the spirit in which he did it, and its usefulness to his fellow man.

Never seeking office, but seeking rather to avoid political life, he was drafted repeatedly to serve his constituency, and was elevated first as representative in the legislature; then to the senate of his State; then to the United States Congress; then as Vice President of the Confederacy. He was elected to the United States Senate immediately following the War between the States, but was refused a seat in the Senate because of the dissensions which arose during the period of reconstruction. He was later returned to Congress, and finally in 1882 retired, after a service all told of 26 years, to become Governor of Georgia, accepting this responsibility in spite of his age and feebleness because her people, who loved him, assured him that he alone could unite jarring factions and heal her political wounds.

In the history of Georgia and America there may have lived men as great as he, but as we have with care studied his marvelous career the evidence is convincing that in the glorious history of our beloved Commonwealth and common country there has not lived in our Nation a greater man, a greater statesman, nor a more perfect patriot than Alexander Hamilton Stephens.

In a peculiar way this man personified the maxim: "The heights by great men reached and kept were not attained by sudden flight, but they, while their companions slept, were toiling upward in the night."

He was born on February 11, 1812, and died March 4, 1883. His father was Andrew Baskins Stephens, of English descent; a good man and a thrifty farmer. His mother was Margaret Grier, of Irish descent. She was a frail little woman, mild, industrious, charitable, intelligent, and he, but a tender babe of three months, lying in her fragile arms, and clinging with his tiny fingers to his loving mother's breast, she left him. Being deprived of a mother's care in infancy, he lost his father when only 14 years of age. In the character of Alexander we observe a marked blending of parental traits. He was thrifty, generous, progressive, and always as tender and as pure as a child.

When a mere lad he was given a Bible by his father and started to Sunday school. With it two passages of Scripture, as a guiding influence for his life, were suggested. These he often repeated. The first, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom"; the second, "Fear God and keep His commandments, for this is the whole duty of man."

While a mere boy he became a teacher in the Sunday school. His renown as a Bible student quickly spread, and later this experience opened up the way for him to continue and complete his education.

There was a desire on the part of his teachers and others to educate him for the ministry, but this troubled him greatly, for, said he, "Whether I should be fit to preach when I should grow up, I could not know."

In after life his accurate knowledge of the Bible served him well in many of his wonderful speeches and debates. In writing of these formative years he said, "I studied with intense interest by the light of blazing pine knots, the only light in our house for readers in those days. By the fire I read long after the whole household was asleep, and after a hard day's work."

Later in life, when a student of law, he would not infrequently study his law books all night long, retiring only with the rising of the sun.

"My college days were my happiest days," said Mr. Stephens. He was a favorite with both faculty and students, and made the highest grade of any in his class.

As a young lawyer he had periods of intense despondency. He never weighed in all his life more than 101½ pounds, and most of the time less than 100, though he was 6 feet, less 2 inches, tall.

His chestnut hair was brushed away from a thin brow and bloodless cheeks. In his diary he wrote: "I believe I shall never be worth anything, and the thought is death to my soul. I am too boyish and simple in my manners and address."

In addition to his early orphange and poverty he was handicapped by a constitution so frail that his continued existence seemed a miracle.

"His form was the most slight and slender I have ever seen, he never looked as if he had a two weeks' purchase on life," said his intimate friend, Robert Toombs. He was frequently mistaken for a boy, and on one occasion while he was a distinguished delegate to the Southern Commercial Convention at Charleston, when lounging on a sofa, his landlady admonished him: "Sonny, get up and give the gentleman a seat." With his fondness for the humorous he rose smilingly, to the great amusement of his companions.

But woe to the opponent who rated him by his physical size. It was the fashion to speak of him as "intellect incarnate" and a "bodiless brain."

Colquitt, judge, Senator, and leading debater and speaker in the State, hearing how others had gone down before young Stephens, casually remarked his hands itched to get hold of him. When Stephens, with courtesy, humor, and facts—a store of which he always kept at hand—had decisively defeated his opponent in debate, some wag in the crowd cried, "Your hands itch to let him go now, don't they, Judge?"

His maiden speech in the Legislature of Georgia, a brilliant effort, saved the measure for the building of the State railroad and paved the way for his election to Congress. The bill was all but lost when he arose, with black eyes gleaming from an unearthly white face, and proved by indisputable data and argument both the value and practicability of the road.

He was appointed chairman of the committee on education in 1836, and when, like the railroad project, the College for Women at Macon, Ga., was being ridiculed, his support saved the charter for Wesleyan College, the first institution for women in the world authorized to confer degrees. He championed the cause of his alma mater, the University of Georgia, and advanced in many ways the cause of learning.

In the United States Congess Mr. Stephens was considered as the ablest Member of the House. When it was known that Stephens, of Georgia, was to speak, at an early hour the gallery was filled to overflowing with the families of distinguished statesmen, members of foreign legations, dashing belles, and the best citizens of Washington.

There was something grand in this shadowy figure, binding up the very breath of the House. Senators deserted the other wing of the Capitol and sat under a spell which they could not break. "The speaker seems the mere organ of some hidden power," said the Charleston Courier. "His unearthly white face seems to brighten into fuller and ghostlier meaning; his eyes shine like sunken pits of fire suddenly disclosed; his attenuated form seems to dilate to his dilating soul—a deathlike silence reigns over the Hall, broken only by the reverberating tones of Mr. Stephens's matchless voice." Horace Greeley, that brilliant statesman and journalist, said of him, "You forget that you are listening to the most eloquent man in Washington, and only feel that he is right." And yet Mr. Stephens did not strive after oratory; his first aim was to convince by fact and argument, and not by a play upon the emotions. He was a skillful debater and quick at repartee.

On one occasion when Mr. Stephens had outclassed his opponent, Judge Francis H. Cone, during a debate, his antagonist, in desperation, cried, "You little slim, emaciated, dried-up runt! I could pin your ears and swallow you whole"; to which Mr. Stephens replied: "And if you did, kind sir, you would have more brains in your belly than you now have in your head!"

He was an adviser of great leaders, a counselor of Presidents. He was a consummate parliamentarian. He was a bold and finished diplomat.

His faculty for foresight seemed intuitive, even mystical. He read the future by the past and by his knowledge of the minds of men.

From his first speech in Congress to his last before the war he made consistent endeavor to preserve the Union under the Constitution, and was often accused of abolitionism by his enemies among his own constituency, and of laboring for slavery extension at the North. He repudiated the doctrine, "the greatest good for the greatest number," and maintained that "If slavery, as it exists with us, is not best or can not be made the best for both races, the African as well as his master, it ought to be abolished." He insisted, however, that it was a question under the Constitution of the United States for each individual State to determine for itself.

His system of ethics was often quoted by him: To do unto others as he would have them do unto him, conditions being reversed.

He made many prophetic utterances. In his celebrated "Union Speech," delivered at Augusta in 1860, he condemned the secession movement and made a prophecy for which some called him insane: "The signs of the times portend evil," said he. "You need not be surprised to see these States now so peaceful, contented, prosperous, and happy, embroiled in civil war in less than 12 months."

He refused to be put in nomination for President of the United States at the Charleston Convention in 1860, though strong pressure was brought to bear upon him, but he supported with all of his energy the candidacy of Douglas; but the split in the Democratic Party at Charleston and Baltimore put three Democratic candidates in the field against the Republican candidate and resulted in the election of Mr. Lincoln on a platform declaring against Government toleration of any form of slavery in the Territories.

South Carolina promptly seceded, several States followed her; Georgia, trembling on the brink, was held back by Stephens.

President Lincoln and Mr. Stephens had much in common; the boyhood of each had been a struggle with poverty; each had learned his lessons by a pine-knot fire; both were lawyers. In Congress both were members of the same political club, and each admired the peculiar abilities of the other. Stephens in a public speech following the untimely death of Mr. Lincoln said: "I knew Mr. Lincoln well; he was warm-hearted; he was generous; he was magnanimous; he was most truly with malice toward none, with charity for all."

Lincoln, in a letter to his own law partner, said: "I take up my pen to tell you that Mr. Stephens, of Georgia, a little, slim, pale-faced, consumptive-looking man has just concluded in Congress the very best speech of an hour's length I ever heard. My old withered dry eyes are full of tears yet."

And here to-day in our National Capitol it is significant that after a lapse of 62 years Mr. Lincoln, war-time President of the Federal Government, in marble quarried from Mr. Stephens's native soil, sits at the far end of the Mall, and Mr. Stephens, war-time vice president of the Confederate Government, also in Georgia marble, sits secure in this sacred Hall at this end of the Mall.

In our fancy we can see them in the Eternal City, clasp hands to-day, where with virtue that is celestial, truth that is radiant, and love that is Godlike they shall separate no more forever, and listening may hear them in unison with Lee and Grant, Jackson and Sheridan, Gordon and Hooker, Zeb Stuart, and all the grand choir invisible, join their celestial voices in one grand according chorus:

There is no North, no South,
We are not divided,
All one body we,
One in faith, one in hope, one in charity,
One through all eternity.

Mr. Stephens, in his celebrated union speech delivered at Augusta, Ga., in a futile effort to avert the War between the States and to preserve the Union, said: "I have looked and do look upon our present Government as the best in the world. I have ever believed and do now believe that it is to the best interest of all States to remain united under the Constitution. My judgment is against secession."

President Lincoln wrote him requesting a copy of his union speech. In replying Mr. Stephens said: "The country is in great peril, and no man ever had heavier or greater responsibilities resting upon him than you have in the present momentous crisis." To this letter Mr. Lincoln wrote a historic response, and marked "for your eye only," assuring Mr. Stephens that a Republican administration would not directly or indirectly interfere with the slaves in the South. But, said he, "You think slavery right and should be extended, while we think it wrong and should be restricted, and that is certainly the only substantial difference between us." Mr. Stephens wrote another long letter to Mr. Lincoln, entreating him to clarify his position, saying: "A word fitly spoken by you now would be like apples of gold in pictures of silver."

Before Georgia seceded Mr. Stephens made many addresses against secession, and used all of his influence possible to avert the tragedy of war, as did his younger brother, Judge Linton Stephens, who was considered by many as distinguished a lawyer and as bright an intellect as Alexander. After Judge Linton Stephens had completed a masterful address in 1860, at Dalton, against secession, calls were made for Alexander, who had gotten up from a sick bed to be present at this meeting, at which a vast concourse of people had gathered. In his weakened physical condition and in prophecy of impending ruin, with great reverence, he exclaimed, in the language of the Christ as he wept over the Holy City, "O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how oft would I have gathered thy children together as a hen gathereth her chicks under her wings, and ye would not!"

In his battle for the Union, Stephens, with his brother, Herschel V. Johnson, and Benjamin H. Hill, led a forlorn hope against Robert Toombs, Tom and Howell Cobb, and Gov. Joe Brown. An idea expressed by Tom Cobb and capitalized by his brother Howell, "We can make better terms out of the Union than in it," turned the scale of fate and caused Georgia to secede. It was the consensus of opinion of the best minds that had Georgia not seceded Virginia and the other States would not have pursued this course, and there would not have been—at this time at least—a civil conflict.

Finally, when in spite of his logic, prophecy, and persuasive eloquence, Georgia did secede, Mr. Stephens, loyal to his State, and as champion of the doctrine of "State rights" seceded with her.

He continued his battle for the Constitution, demanding that the new Government formed be modeled on the old.

He declined to allow his name to be presented for the Presidency of the Confederacy, and in the interest of harmony and only as a duty from which he felt he could not escape he accepted the Vice Presidency, being sworn in on February 11, his 49th birthday. A week later Jefferson Davis was inaugurated as President.

Concerning his efforts during the war to be useful in economics and diplomacy, to which fields his gifts and training peculiarly fitted him, and the subsequent differences which arose between Mr. Stephens and Mr. Davis, I will not speak other than to say that Mr. Stephens remained consistent in his attitude of loyalty to the Constitution.

Immediately following the close of the war, and after the tragic death of Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Stephens, as were most of the prominent leaders of the Confederacy, was arrested on the order of the new Republican administration and was thrown into prison, being confined for approximately six months at Fort Warren, located just across the bay from Boston. When he entered prison his hair was chestnut brown; when he was finally released his hair had changed to white.

Mr. Stephens died one year preceding my birth, hence I was deprived of the privilege of being his contemporary. As I have read the history of his wonderful life, written by various authors, I have been fascinated as I have never been in reading any novel. I have read the history of his life night after night, until 1, 2, 3, and 4 and even 5 o'clock in the morning without growing weary.

I have merely given to-day a suggestive outline of his statesmanship and patriotism. I would delight to speak at length of various incidents in his life; of his riding the circuit, without a horse and with saddlebags upon his shoulders; of his first law case, which he won; of his bravery and personal encounter with Judge Cone, in which he received 18 knife wounds; of his distressing experiences during his unjust imprisonment. To relate details of his railroad accident, in which he suffered several fractured bones, and of his many serious illnesses, might prove of interest.

I would like to tell of his aid in assisting not less than 55 young men in securing an education, and of his many charities in helping various institutions and needy persons whenever opportunity was given. I would like to enumerate some of his accomplishments in Congress. He was the father of the Weather Bureau, and encouraged the development of the telegraph and Atlantic cable.

I would like to tell you of his charming social life and hospitality. He gave his home, which still stands at Crawfordsville, Ga., the name "Liberty Hall," for said he, "Here I do as I please, and expect my guests to do the same."

I would like to mention his various publications, and praise especially his War Between the States, recognized as the ablest defense of the Confederacy ever published. This alone would make his name immortal.

To me it would be a peculiar fascination to give suggestive outlines of many of his political and literary speeches, and I would delight to speak of his purity of life and loyalty to his friends—but this would require hours to present, even suggestively. Any address would be quite inadequate, however, if reference were not made to an important influence in his life.

Mr. Stephens was never married, but he loved. This experience which should have brought him life's joy, brought him but sorrow. He kept silent because of his poverty and ill health. So sacred he held this experience that only once or twice in after life did he mention it—all that tradition preserves of the object of his attachment is that she was lovely in person and character; was his pupil and learned rapidly; and she had "dark eyes and curls, and rosy cheeks."

Years afterwards, when in Congress, he loved again. The lady, a woman of beauty and distinction, was not indifferent to him, but again he kept silent; a woman's due, he thought, was a husband on whom she could lean and not an invalid whom she must nurse.

The love of which I wish to speak more particularly was that between himself and his young half-brother, Linton. Like Jonathan and David, their souls seemed to be knit together. Linton's mother died when he was only 1 year old, Alexander himself, only a boy, assuming the responsibility of guardian of him. Neither had known a mother's care. While in prison, he wrote in a letter to Linton, "This little messenger of love goes as the embodiment of the tenderest and strongest affections of my heart to the dearest one to me on earth." Again he wrote when Linton had been ill: "My greatest mental disquietude, my greatest suffering, has been on your account. Would to God I could know this day how you are, and that you are well again!"

At various times he would dream of Linton and write a full description of his dreams in his Prison Journal. "Will Linton come to-day? My earnest wish and prayer is that all may be well with him and that I may yet see him." Finally Linton came to visit him at the prison, and a short time afterwards, October 12, while he was away for a day in Boston, orders for Mr. Stephens's release were received, and his first thought was, "I wish Linton were here!" And later, in 1875, when Linton died, he exclaimed, "The light of my life has gone out." I have never known of a sweeter, more wonderful love than this between brothers.

Mr. Stephens in a literary address at his alma mater in 1879, after enumerating various accomplishments of distinguished Georgians, paid a beautiful tribute to the true and original discoverer of ether as an anesthetic in surgical operations, who died June 16, 1878, and suggested that he, in company with Gen. James Edward Oglethorpe, its founder, should be selected as the two men who should represent Georgia in Statuary Hall.

I shall never forget the humiliation which was mine when a young man just out of college 23 years ago when on my first visit to Washington and being conducted through Statuary Hall in the National Capitol, with a large party, the statues of great men from the various States were pointed out by our guide, I, with great temerity said, "Now show us the statues of the men from Georgia," and was informed: "Georgia has no statues."

At that moment I pledged myself that I would do my utmost to remove this stain of neglect from the fair escutcheon of our State.

When the resolution creating the National Statuary Hall in the Capitol at Washington was under consideration in 1864, Mr. Morrill, of Vermont, the author of the resolution, said: "Will not all of the States with generous emulation proudly respond, and thus furnish evidence that the Union will clasp and hold forever all its jewels, the glories of the past, civil, military, and judicial, in one hallowed spot where those who will be here to aid in carrying on the Government may daily receive fresh inspirations and new incentives?

"To scorn delights and live laborious days, and where pilgrims from all parts of the Union, as well as from foreign lands, may come and behold a gallery filled with such American manhood as succeeding generations will delight to honor, and see the actual form and mold of those who have inerasably fixed their names on the pages of history."

On July 1, 1902, a commission created by the Legislature of Georgia, on motion of Hon. Madison Bell, of Atlanta, and appointed by Gov. Allen D. Candler, verified the sacred maxim: "That he who would be least among us, should be the greatest," and chose, not General Oglethorpe, not discounting his greatness, because he was one of the greatest characters in all history, but selected the names of Crawford W. Long and Alexander H. Stephens whose statues should be placed in this Hall representing Georgia's two most distinguished sons.

Though I may have contributed little toward the fruition of my dream, I rejoice that on March 30, 1926, the statue of Crawford W. Long was placed in this sacred Hall, and that here to-day, through the generosity of Mrs. J. M. High, Atlanta's foremost citizen, and Mrs. Elizabeth Venable Mason, of Atlanta, who merits equal recognition because of her invaluable aid, and that gifted and intrepid sculptor, Gutzon Borglum, but for whose genius the wonderful memorial proposed to the Confederacy, to be chiseled in enduring granite upon the face of Stone Mountain, would never have been conceived, who has so graciously and generously contributed his services as sculptor; it is the privilege of the Atlanta Chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy to present to the Nation, through his honor the Governor of Georgia, the actual form and mold of Alexander H. Stephens, and I rejoice that I am privileged to have a part in it.

The intrinsic value of these monuments will be as real as the sun that shines, the flowers that grow, as a mother's love, and the inspiration which will come to the young manhood of the State and Nation can not be measured in pecuniary value.

In the last illness of Mr. Stephens, there are two citizens of Georgia—one here to-day—who were very close to him.

To ex-Gov. Nat Harris, who has been the recipient of his generosity, he being among those whom Mr. Stephens had aided in securing an education, and one to whom he was strongly attached, he whispered this message: "Give Harris my love."

To Judge E. C. Kontz, his warm personal friend, and who officially represents on this occasion his honor, the mayor of Atlanta, and who stood by Mr. Stephens in his death chamber, we are indebted for an accurate description of his dying moments.

Just before the spirit of Alexander Hamilton Stephens winged its flight into the glory world, he said: "Alex—get ready, get ready—we are almost home!"

When Mr. Stephens died, not only in Georgia, not only in the South, was public tribute paid to his memory. In far off Vermont, State offices were closed on the day of his funeral, and the flag was displayed at half-mast over the capitol.

When the news of his death reached Washington City, the House of Representatives, of which he had so long been a Member, unanimously adopted resolutions expressing "heartfelt sympathy with the people, not only of Georgia, but the whole country, in the loss of such a statesman and such a patriot."

Go with me into the Library of Congress at the National Capital, or that one on Copley Square in Boston, or that one on the corner of Fifth Avenue and Forty-second Street in the metropolis of America. I dare say we will find there two freight cars full of biography commenting on the good and great people of the ages, but the greatest biography ever written was expressed in just five words, and was written of Him whose birthday the world will celebrate on the 25th day of this month, "He went about doing good." This, ladies and gentlemen, is typified perfectly in the life and character of Georgia's two most distinguished sons! After all, there is nothing grander than such living! We may say of them, as was said of another distinguished Georgian, Henry Woodfin Grady, who died literally loving a Nation into peace:

"I have seen the light that gleamed at midnight from the headlight of some giant engine rushing onward through the darkness, heedless of opposition, fearless of danger, and I thought it grand! I have seen the light come over the eastern hills in glory, driving the lazy darkness like mist before a sea-born gale until leaf and tree and blade of grass glittered in the myriad diamonds of the morning ray, and I thought it was grand! I have seen the light that leaped at midnight athwart the storm-swept sky, shivering over chaotic clouds, mid howling winds, until cloud and darkness and the shadow-haunted earth flashed into midday splendor, and I knew it was grand! But the grandest thing, next to the radiance that flows from the Almighty throne, is the light of a noble and beautiful life, wrapping itself in benediction round the destinies of men and finding its home at last in the blessed bosom of the Everlasting God!"

That man is great who has the strength to serve, the patience to suffer, who seeks not to conquer the world, but, mastering himself, spends his life and energies in unselfish service for his fellow man.

Such a man was Alexander Hamilton Stephens, whom, not having seen, I love!

Senator HARRIS. Governor Hardman, of Georgia, will present the statue to the United States of America. [Applause.]

ADDRESS BY L. G. HARDMAN, GOVERNOR OF GEORGIA, IN PRESENTING THE STATUE TO THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Governor HARDMAN. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Vice President, Senators, Congressmen, Daughters of the Confederacy, ladies and gentlemen, and I would not forget to recognize old guards and the young women and the young men of Georgia. [Applause.] I rise not to address you, but it is an honor and a privilege to receive for the State of Georgia this statue from the Daughters of the Confederacy.

I want to say, before I tender this statue to this great Nation, that as I stand here I can in my mind hear this imperishable marble address the friend and compatriot of Alexander Stephens, Dr. Crawford W. Long, whose statue is right over there: "Crawford, I have come. Here am I. You and I were roommates in the University of Georgia. You left that institution seeking to serve mankind in your efforts and in your life. You made a contribution not only to this Nation but to the entire world and to mankind in the discovery of sulphuric ether, the conquerer of pain, and in that you followed the Great Nazarene. But I, Crawford, gave my time, my effort, my love, to service to mankind for liberty, for freedom, and for peace. I come now to room with you in the Statuary Hall of the National Capitol of the greatest Nation on earth; and here it is, with our fellows, representing the highest ideals of government, that we shall spend eternity; and here it is that these principles and the service that we have rendered shall live throughout all time." [Applause.]

Through you, Mr. Vice President of this great Nation, it is a real joy to tender the statue of this great man to this unparalleled Nation. Thank you. [Applause.]

Senator HARRIS. Because of the esteem in which he is held by the people of Georgia and the United States, and because of the devotion of the soldiers from Georgia who served under him during the last war, and because he is one of the great men of the world, the Vice President of the United States, Hon. Charles G. Dawes, has been asked to receive the statue from the State of Georgia. [Vice President Dawes was greeted by the audience rising and applauding.]

ADDRESS OF VICE PRESIDENT DAWES ACCEPTING THE STATUE ON BEHALF OF THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Vice President DAWES. This statue is of a man whose place in the esteem of his fellow citizens was won by the force of a character which irresistibly held him to his high convictions irrespective of personal interest. Possessed of commanding intellect and born with instinctive sympathy for the poor, the weak, and the suffering, his recognition of the relation of a constitutional bill of rights to their welfare made him its champion at all times and under all circumstances, notwithstanding that in war self-preservation is the first right of nature, and its expedients must then often take the place of constitutions.

Thus in the awful stress of civil conflict, when the Constitution itself was involved, his position was often misunderstood, both in the North and in the South. Yet, he always trod the painful path to which his sense of duty pointed the way. The war ended, and as to him there gradually formed that ultimate calm judgment of the people which is only asserted when time, dulling passion, and prejudice clears the way for reason. Then the voice from the heart and conscience of a people became finally articulate and hailed him as a great leader and friend.

This statue is erected by the people of Georgia as a tribute of enduring gratitude to a beloved son of the State.

As representing the Government of the United States, a government whose flag inspires the love of a united people no longer divided, either by section or sentiment, a government under which the North is proud of the South and the South of the North, the East of the West, and the West of the East, I accept this memorial in its name, in accordance with the act of the Congress. [Applause.]

Senator HARRIS. I now introduce Georgia's distinguished junior Senator, Hon. WALTER F. GEORGE. [Applause.]

RESPONSE BY SENATOR WALTER F. GEORGE, OF GEORGIA

Senator GEORGE. With the statue of Alexander Hamilton Stephens, Georgia is content to complete her contribution to Statuary Hall.

Tortured by poverty in his youth, and receiving his own education at the hands of kindly and noble women, he gave educational opportunity to the youth of his State; many of the State's most illustrious men are directly indebted to him for their educational advantages. Under his own roof he made provision for the homeless wanderer. His carriage was at the command of the common vagabond in the public highway.

In the days of national stress and strife he differed from the leaders of southern thought upon matters of the supremest importance, and with sublime moral courage he opposed the strongest prejudice of his own people.

He loved the State; he loved the South; he was never among the traducers of his State or of his section, though he openly and fearlessly questioned the wisdom of their course. From the beginning he set his face like flint against secession, although he was the first and only Vice President of the Confederacy. In the memorable convention in which the sovereign State of Georgia solemnly expressed her decision to go out of the Union, and amid threats of personal violence, his character and his courage enabled him to say that if he should die, he wished his body wrapped in the old flag of the Republic and buried in the soil of Georgia.

Of him Myrta Lockett Avary said: "He was the one public man of his day who remained throughout the war neither southern nor northern but American." [Applause.]

Upon his calm and unerring judgment the people of his State early learned to rely. His judgment was successively justified by events. Above other men of the South, his life, his exalted character, and his public service fitted him to serve the State and the Nation through the era of passion. He lived to see the bonds of union again cemented.

Lawyer, historian, chief executive of the State which now so signally honors his memory, and for 26 years a Member of the Congress of the United States, the statue of Alexander Hamilton Stephens is well at home in the company of the illustrious representatives of sister States here in the Nation's Hall of Fame. [Applause.]

Senator HARRIS. We have heard to-day of the deeds of a great man; and the half has not been told. We often hear of the deeds of men, but not so much of the deeds of women. In the humble hut, as well as in the palace, the deeds of devotion and self-sacrifice of women surpass those of the men; and that is illustrated to-day. Doctor Quillian told us that Mrs. High, with the assistance of Mrs. Mason, made possible this event; and yet at their request they have both been left off this program. I know I am expressing the sentiments of this audience when I ask these ladies to please come to the platform and let the audience see them.

(Mrs. High and Mrs. Mason went upon the platform and were greeted by the audience rising and applauding.)

Senator HARRIS. We will now receive the memorial wreaths. Mrs. P. H. T. Lane, the national vice president, United Daughters of the Confederacy. [Applause.]

Mrs. LANE. In the name of the United Daughters of the Confederacy I place this wreath in memory of our first and only Vice President of the Confederate States of America, Alexander Hamilton Stephens, for—

> "Plato was not more supremely just;
> Augustus was not greater in the state,
> Or Brutus truer to a public trust."

Senator HARRIS. Mrs. High, in behalf of the chapter of United Daughters of the Confederacy of Crawfordsville, Ga. [Applause.]

Governor Hardman will place the wreath on the statue of Crawford W. Long. [Applause.]

The sponsors will place the bouquets on the statue of Alexander Hamilton Stephens. [Applause.]

On the statue of Robert E. Lee, the Confederate Veterans will place the wreath. That statue is on the other side of the hall. [Applause.]

I will now call for the representatives of the governors of the several States, and ask them to rise.

John Trotwood Moore, representing the Governor of Tennessee. [Applause.]

Mr. Hampson Gary, representing the Governor of Texas. [Applause.]

Gen. Lucien Powell, representing the Governor of Virginia. [Applause.]

Mrs. Holden, a relative of Mr. Stephens, and wife of the distinguished Judge Horace M. Holden, of Athens, will place a wreath upon the statue. [Applause.]

Mrs. HOLDEN. As official representative of the Daughters of the Confederacy, Georgia Division, I place this wreath on the statue of their Vice President of the Confederacy. [Applause.]

Senator HARRIS. The Confederate soldiers are placing the wreath on General Lee's statue on the other side of the Hall. [Applause.]

Governor Hardman will present to the audience one of the old slaves of the Stephens family. [Applause.]

Governor HARDMAN. I have the distinguished honor to present to this audience Dora Stephens, the only living slave of Alexander H. Stephens. She lived at the old home place; and it is a great honor to be able to present one of these slaves to the people of America.

(At the request of the Presiding Officer, the audience rose and sang the first and last verses of "America.")

Senator HARRIS. After Doctor Small has pronounced the benediction, Doctor Quillian will place a wreath on the colossal bust of President Lincoln, by Gutzon Borglum, which reposes in the adjoining hall. [Applause.]

BENEDICTION BY DR. SAM W. SMALL, OF GEORGIA

Doctor SMALL. Our Heavenly Father, we have paid our last possible mortal tribute to the memories that flow down to us from the personality and the great services of one of Thy sons who made himself illustrious by his loyalty to Thee, and his love of humanity, and his fidelity to his country. We pray that Thy rich benedictions may be upon this event, the like of which would be impossible at any time in the past, or in any country of the present except our beloved America; and we pray Thee that from this silent figure carved in imperishable marble, succeeding generations may receive the inspirations of love and loyalty to Thee, of sacrifice for fellow man for whom Christ died; and this we ask in His name, and in the name of the Holy Spirit. Amen.

(At 4.35 o'clock p. m. the proceedings were concluded.)

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD immediately following the exercises attending the unveiling of the Statue of Alexander H. Stephens an address prepared by Judge E. C. Kontz, of Atlanta, Ga., representing the mayor of Atlanta.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection leave is granted. The address of Judge E. C. Kontz is as follows:

On this momentous occasion as under this dome of the Capitol we unveil this statue of one who never held a sword, alongside of that of Crawford W. Long, the country doctor, as the chosen sons of all of Georgia's noble and worthy children, we are forcibly impressed that "Peace hath her victories, no less renowned than war."

Alexander Hamilton Stephens, as great as were his mental powers; unsullied as was his moral character; attractive in personal appearance, and charming as was his personality; his interests as broad as the outlook of humanity; great in every sphere of his activities, as student, as teacher, as lawyer, as legislator in State, Federal, and Confederate Governments; great in diplomacy; he was a friend of the outcast and counsellor of Presidents. Effective as were his powers, as a leader of men, as individuals and in mass; as an orator, not only noted for sublimity of thought and beauty and clarity of diction, he was ever forceful and efficient in the presentation of his cause, whether on the hustings, at the bar, or in the forum. Keen in mental grasp; his spiritual nature was attuned to the music of the spheres; and capable of interpreting the message of the violet. Friend of every living creature—he loved his dog; his dog loved him. His purse was ever open to the call, not only of every human being—he never turned out an animal grown old in his service. His knowledge of men was prodigious; he remembered names, and was adept in genealogy, especially of Georgians. Much confined by illness, he became profound in learning and versed in the whole range of human knowledge. His statesmanship was founded not only upon brilliance of his intellect but upon acquaintance with the history of government from the earliest recorded times; and his innate conception of the motives that move men; and he led men because they knew he knew, and those who knew him best felt that if it might be said of any mere human being, he never had a selfish thought. Though slight of statue, he was majestic in physical as well as in moral courage; with 18 cuts, a stab just barely missing his heart, when called on to retract a statement or receive the final thrust, his only answer was, "Never; cut." He refused to prosecute his assailant.

What Alexander Hamilton Stephens said of Robert E. Lee we may likewise say of Stephens as his highest eulogy, "What I have seen General Lee to be at first, childlike in simplicity and unselfish in character, he remained unspoiled by praise and by success." Such was the recognition of his power and his hold on the hearts of men that Lincoln sought his cooperation in an effort to avert the war. Sherman, after reaching Georgia, sought his cooperation to end it. He suffered as a prisoner at Fort Warren in Boston Harbor, and yet when the war was ended he, too, "with malice toward none and charity for all," spoke in this Capitol at the unveiling of the picture of Lincoln with such magnanimity that President Barnard, of Columbia College, wrote in 1878, that he "continued to command equally North and South a homage, a respect, and a confidence which are awarded by the people to hardly any other." His life radiated the atmosphere of the pure, the good, and the true, and he thought on these things. He believed that man must not live by bread alone; but he knew, too, that man needs bread, and thus he was a man of action, and great was his influence in the practical affairs of his State and country; and among the constructive benefits which he conferred on Georgia was his successful advocacy of the construction of the Western & Atlantic Railroad. He was the father of the Weather Bureau as we know it. His influence was substantial in the chartering of Wesleyan, the oldest chartered female college of the world; and such was the breadth of his patriotism that in a speech in Atlanta in 1872 he said: "There are true men at the North, men true to Democratic principles in New Hampshire, Maine, Massachusetts. It is a great mistake to suppose that there are not true men there, as true liberty-loving men as you are."

When returned to Congress in 1872 he addressed himself to his old task of reconciling sections, preserving peace, and as always, of proclaiming the sacredness of the Constitution. Modest he was, but when attacked in the Georgia convention he did not hesitate to claim his due, and thus having, with his brother, Linton, drafted the platform of 1870, he said that it contained "the principles that brought you into power." But the outstanding service of his long, useful life was borne by his clear comprehension of the character of the Federal Government and of the sovereignty of the States. He did not in 1861 favor the policy of secession; he opposed it; but he never questioned the right of the convention of his State; and it is now, not because he was Vice President of the Confederacy; not because he was a Member of Congress nor because he was Senator elect; not because he was Governor of Georgia; not because of the mere brilliancy of his intellect, nor, indeed, because of the purity of his soul; but because there was in him that which flowered in his matchless defense of the South and his vision of the soul of liberty which dwells in the principle of the sovereignty of the States, without which our American Government would be a sham and a delusion, the cloak of tyranny, and the instrument of oppression.

Grady died "literally loving a nation into peace," and although (as stated by Senator Hill) we were "back in the house of our fathers," our reception was as of a prodigal returned; but since Alexander Hamilton Stephens wrote his Constitutional View of the War Between the States, men no less reverence the towering form of the Union which he loved; but they also saw the majestic figure of the sovereign States as never before, and thus he struck from them the last vestige of reproach, and made clear that the Confederate soldier never was a "rebel"; and it was because of this supreme effort of him whom we here honor that the way was opened for the Senate, the House of Representatives, and the President of the United States to authorize the minting of a coin with the no less significant superscription, "E Pluribus Unum," as a "Memorial to the valor of the soldier of the South."

As brave and true men of the South honor the leaders of the North in the fratricidal strife, so do patriots of every section stand before the now quickly emerging effigies of Lee, of Davis, and of Jackson as they ride out of the granite sides of Stone Mountain, just as has come the figure before us, in pristine purity, from the marble quarries of the State he loved so well, for even our hills and our valleys pay tribute to his greatness, and on our hearts is written the story of his matchless worth. As Gen. James Jackson, who in 1795 resigned from the United States Senate to enter the State legislature, said, that should his heart be opened "Georgia" would be found legibly written there. So let us as we rejoice together in a reunited country, which, may it please God, shall stand until the heavens shall roll up as a scroll and time shall be no more, a model to liberty-loving people in every clime in all generations, not by force of arms or by the mandate of any entangling alliance, but as God shall give us to see the right, for the protection of each other; for the advancement of their common interest, the peace and prosperity of all the world, and a beacon light to the nations of the earth; so may Maine and California, Missouri as well as Georgia, be written on the hearts of men, and let others in like spirit say of theirs as we of Georgia:

O proud Georgia, mother of soldiers, scholars, statesmen, grand men, and noble women, seated on your everlasting hills, clothed in the rich drapery of forest and of plain, decked in your rich rude jewels and with lap well filled with amaranth of immortality, sheaves and choicest gifts for your children; in one hand cities, the other outstretched in benevolent deeds and ever ready for the protection of your people; your feet resting at the sea mid orange blossoms, emblems of your worth; your tresses bound with mountain laurel, fit symbol of your virtue and your glorious achievements; palms strew your pathway; with your sisters go on in your majesty while the nations, wondering, watch your sure and steady march to new victories and to greater glory.

Our sons freely offered their lives in the Spanish-American War, and without stint they gave themselves in the World War, and it was a son of Virginia who so long kept us out of the great struggle, and who, when the people were ready, led a united people to victory in the greatest conflict of the world's history. So will we of the South support the Union and fight its battles, never forgetting, however, that the Union is a confederacy of many States; and if this day's proceedings shall cause men to again inspect and study the foundations of our Government, as they march shoulder to shoulder with those of their sister States in a union of hearts greater than any written constitution, Alexander Hamilton Stephens will not have lived in vain nor died without a patriot's reward; and it shall indeed be true that "he, being dead, yet speaketh."

CLAIM OF THE STATE OF CONNECTICUT

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. President, I introduce a resolution calling upon the Comptroller General to make a report to the Senate regarding an old claim of the State of Connecticut similar to the reports which have been made as to the State of Maryland and the State of New York at previous times; and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. It simply calls for a report to be made by the Comptroller General to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 67), as follows:

Resolved, That the Comptroller General is hereby authorized and directed to investigate and reexamine the account between the United States and the State of Connecticut with respect to advances and expenditures made by such State for military purposes during the War of 1812–1815 with Great Britain, and, after applying to such account the rules applied to the settlement of a similar account between the United States and the State of Maryland under the act entitled "An act authorizing the payment of interest due to the State of Maryland," approved May 13, 1826, as amended by section 12 of the civil appropriations act, approved March 3, 1857, to submit to the Senate a report containing a restatement of such account with interest computed according to such rules.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

REGENT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Library I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 48) providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than the Members of Congress. I call the attention of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] to the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress which now exists be filled by the appointment of Charles Evans Hughes, of New York.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 72), as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States and the House of Representatives be notified of the election of Edwin P. Thayer, of Indiana, as Secretary of the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to.

ELECTION OF SERGEANT AT ARMS

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 73), as follows:

Resolved, That David S. Barry, of Rhode Island, be, and he is hereby, elected Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move as an amendment to the resolution, to strike out the name of David S. Barry, of Rhode Island, and to insert in lieu thereof the name of J. L. Dobell, of the State of Montana.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I desire to ask the chairman of the Senate committee appointed to inquire into campaign expenses in connection with the election of 1926 to give to the Senate a statement of the facts in relation to the reported recalcitrancy of the present Sergeant at Arms in the matter of the service of subpœnas for that committee, and the discharge of other duties for that committee.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, I have not with me the correspondence which was exchanged between the committee and the Sergeant at Arms. I would have to send for it in order to state the matter with that degree of accuracy which I would like to employ if I make any statement. I did not bring the papers because I had concluded, in view of what has transpired, not to bring the matter before the Senate. That view was arrived at after some discussion with the members of the committee. So, while I am perfectly willing to give the information, I want it understood that I am doing it simply because it has been requested. I shall give it as accurately as I can recall it.

After the Congress adjourned the committee desired to have certain papers served in the State of Pennsylvania relating to the procuring of the ballots. The proper documents were prepared for service. Mr. Barry was called before the committee and was asked to serve them.

I will say to Mr. Barry that if I make any error in my statement, I would be glad to have him step to my desk and call my attention to it, and I shall be glad to correct it.

Mr. Barry inquired where the money was to come from with which to pay the expenses, and the statement was made either by himself or some one else that the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate had stated that he would not approve the vouchers of the committee and that Mr. Pace, financial clerk of the Senate, had indicated that under the circumstances he would not pay money on vouchers unless so approved. Thereupon Mr. Barry was informed that the money would be advanced by the committee or one of its members.

Mr. Barry expressed the opinion that he was in doubt whether he had the right to receive the money for his expenses from any source except the regular channels, through the financial clerk as disbursing officer of the Senate, and said that he desired time to consult with his counsel. My recollection is that he said he would like to have a day or two. The committee, after consultation, wrote Mr. Barry a letter saying that they desired an answer from him by 3 o'clock on that day—I believe that was the hour—which allowed him, as I now recall, something like three hours to ascertain what he would do; and that the committee required an answer from him within that time as to whether he would carry out the directions of the committee. In a short while we received a reply saying, in substance and effect, that within the time limited he would be unable to have the consultation he desired. This is all in letters, and since I am making an oral statement I will get the letters as soon as I can have them brought from my office.

Mr. Barry informs me that he did not ask for the privilege of advising with his attorney, that he had no attorney, but that he did ask time in which to advise with somebody.

Taking up the matter where I left off, the substance of the reply was that he declined to carry out the directions of the committee under the circumstances if required to carry them out at that time and without consultation. Thereupon the committee appointed an agent to execute its orders and sent that agent to the State of Pennsylvania to serve the papers which the committee desired to have served. I think I ought to say that at the time I felt very indignant over the matter.

Mr. Barry a day or two ago called at my office and said that the real trouble which he had in mind was that he was in doubt about the authority of the committee to proceed at all, that he had not meant any disrespect to the committee, and that he stood ready to carry out any proper orders of any committee of the Senate at any time.

I think that is as fair a statement as I could make of the situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as to my pair and transfer as before, I vote "yea."

Mr. HALE (when Mr. GOULD'S name was called). Making the same announcement as before, if my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. HOWELL (when Mr. NORRIS'S name was called). My colleague the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. COPELAND (when Mr. WAGNER'S name was called). Repeating the announcement previously made regarding my colleague [Mr. WAGNER] and his absence, I wish to say that if he were present and at liberty to vote he would vote "yea."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I am not able to obtain a transfer and therefore I am compelled to withhold my vote. If I were voting, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BRATTON. Making the same announcement that I have already made with reference to the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], I desire to announce that if he were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I desire to make the same statement as before with reference to the absence of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDWARDS].

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—40

Ashurst	Fletcher	King	Simmons
Barkley	George	McKellar	Steck

NOT VOTING—12

Blease	Edwards	Jones, N. Mex.	Tydings
Bruce	Gooding	Norris	Wagner
du Pont	Gould	Smith	Watson

So the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas.

The resolution was agreed to; and the Vice President subsequently administered the oath prescribed by law to David S. Barry as Sergeant at Arms of the Senate.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word on the question of the election of the Sergeant at Arms.

In view of the fact that the so-called Reed special committee saw fit not to bring in any charges against the Sergeant at Arms, I felt constrained to vote for his election. I wish it distinctly understood, however, that if any occasion again arises when an employee of the Senate refuses to obey an order of the Senate or of any committee of the Senate, I shall stand ready at any time to vote for his discharge.

Everyone makes mistakes; I think the Sergeant at Arms made a serious mistake. An employee of the Senate is the servant of the Senate and Senate committees. The Senate and its committees are responsible for orders given him, but, I repeat, in view of the fact that the special committee did not see fit to bring in a report, and in view of the fact that all people sometimes make mistakes, I felt constrained to vote for the election of Mr. Barry as Sergeant at Arms upon this occasion.

ELECTION OF ASSISTANT DOORKEEPER

Mr. CURTIS. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was agreed to.

ELECTION OF ACTING ASSISTANT DOORKEEPER

Mr. CURTIS. I offer a further resolution and ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 75), as follows:

Resolved, That Edwin A. Halsey, of Virginia, be, and he is hereby, elected Acting Assistant Doorkeeper of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

SENATOR FROM PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. SHORTRIDGE. I offer and ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk and which I ask to have read.

Mr. CURTIS. Let the resolution be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 68), as follows:

Whereas on the 4th day of March, 1927, the Senate referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections the pending contest between WILLIAM S. VARE and William B. Wilson, involving the question whether the said VARE or the said Wilson, or either of them, is entitled to membership in the United States Senate as a Senator from the State of Pennsylvania: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections is hereby authorized to hear and determine said contest, and to take such evidence as it may deem proper in order to determine the questions involved, and certify its conclusions to the Senate.

Said committee is authorized, by itself or by any subcommittee, to investigate the questions aforesaid, and shall have authority to act by or through such agents or representatives as it may see fit to designate.

Said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, shall have power to issue subpœnas and require the production of all papers, books, documents, or other evidence pertinent to said investigation, and said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions of the Senate and during any recess of the Senate or of the Congress and to hold its sessions at such places as it may deem proper.

It shall have authority to employ clerks and other necessary assistance and to employ stenographers at a cost not to exceed 25 cents per hundred words, and to cause to be taken and recorded all evidence received by the committee, and to have said evidence printed for the information of the Senate.

The Senate, having heretofore created a special committee to inquire into certain matters in connection with said election and the primary preceding the same, and having continued said committee in force, it is ordered that the Committee on Privileges and Elections may, in its discretion, consider such evidence as has heretofore or may hereafter be taken by the said special committee appointed pursuant to Senate Resolutions 195, 223, 258, and 324, Sixty-ninth Congress, and Senate Resolution 10, Seventieth Congress; and the said special committee is hereby authorized, in its discretion, to consider such evidence as may be taken by the said Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and his deputies and assistants are hereby required to attend the said Committee on Privileges and Elections, or of any subcommittee thereof, and to execute its directions.

The chairman of the committee, and each and every member thereof, is hereby empowered to administer oaths and generally have such powers and perform such duties as are necessary or incident to the exercise of the powers and duties imposed by this resolution.

Said committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date.

The cost of investigations and proceedings in pursuance of the foregoing to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and not to exceed $50,000.

Mr. REED of Missouri. Mr. President, before this resolution shall be adopted there may be a word to be said.

Mr. CURTIS. The resolution will have to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate in any event, and the Senator from Missouri will have an opportunity to read and consider it in the meantime.

Mr. REED of Missouri. The resolution does not carry any appropriation.

Mr. CURTIS. It authorizes the employment of stenographers, and that authorization has to be passed upon by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WATSON. The resolution has to be referred to that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the statute the resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT TO SATURDAY

Mr. CURTIS. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it adjourns to meet on Saturday next. I would have asked that it adjourn until Monday, but the conference report on the deficiency appropriation bill will be ready for presentation on Saturday, and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would like to have it disposed of on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. It is expected that the conference report on the deficiency appropriation bill will be considered by the Senate on Saturday.

Mr. CURTIS. Yes; it is expected that it will be considered on Saturday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent submitted by the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the agreement is entered into.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 12 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being under the order previously entered, until Saturday, December 17, 1927, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, December 15, 1927

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Not unto us, O Lord, but unto Thee give glory for Thy mercy. Come unto us that we may hallow Thy name and fulfill Thy law. Strengthen us to do Thy will. This day may we put some touches of sunlight into the lives of others. Guide us in the way of right living. May we not live by bread alone, but by the inspiration of the noblest pursuits of life. We thank Thee for our rich privileges; may we use them for the honor and glory of Thy name and for the good of our fellow men. In the spirit of Jesus of Nazareth. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DISTINGUISHED VISITOR

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House for printing in the RECORD a communication from the Speaker of the House of Venezuela, who recently occupied a seat in the gallery:

Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I wish to extend to you and through you to the Members of the august body over which you preside my deep appreciation and sincere thanks for the courtesies extended to me on my recent visit to Washington.

G. MANRIQUE PACANINS.

THE REVENUE BILL

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the revenue bill, with Mr. NEWTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] just prior to adjournment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAINEY: Page 193, strike out lines 8 to 19, inclusive.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, the pending amendment strikes out section 431 of the bill on page 193. This amendment is one of the most important amendments submitted to this bill; it is far-reaching in its consequences. The item in question I have here as it was incorporated in the original draft of the bill before the committee and before this draft was made. In effect it increases the excise taxes on foreign-built boats 500 per cent. The language as the section was originally drafted was so objectionable and so obnoxious that the committee struck it out and simply increased five times the excise duties on boats for other than trade purposes brought into the United States.

It is admitted and it will not be denied that the section as drafted now operates as a complete embargo on foreign-built ships of this class. None of them can come in. I can not better commence this argument than by calling attention to our treaty with Germany. Most of these foreign boats which come in—and the number that come in is negligible—are built in Germany, and now I want to read article 8 of our treaty of friendship with Germany, signed at Washington on December 6, 1923, ratified by the Senate, and proclaimed on the 14th day of October, 1925. This is our agreement with Germany. I read article 8 of this convention:

> The nationals and merchandise of each high-contracting party within the territories of the other shall receive the same treatment as nationals and merchandise of the country with regard to internal taxes, transit duties, charges in respect to warehousing and other facilities, and the amount of drawbacks and bounties.

A most far-reaching clause. It affects internal taxes and it goes much further than treaties usually go. This clause, as we have drafted it now, increases 500 per cent the excise duties on boats constructed in Germany.

I do not know, at any rate I am not at liberty to say, whether or not this section is now being considered in our State Department; but we do not need any declaration from our State Department to indicate to this Congress and to the country that we are grossly violating our treaty with Germany if we write this clause into the law, which has the effect of absolutely excluding boats manufactured in Germany from entering our ports under American ownership and from sailing under the American flag. They make no such discrimination as this against our boats. We can build as many boats in this country for German ownership as we want to build, and, therefore, she has made no discrimination against us. Our nationals are not receiving this kind of treatment there, but if we enact this into law her nationals will be receiving this kind of treatment here.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Is it not true that there is already a tariff rate on these foreign-built pleasure boats and power boats?

Mr. RAINEY. No; not directly, if they come in under their own power. The larger boats that come in come in under their own power and they do not pay a tariff duty. In order to evade this provision of our law—and that is the main reason for this clause—in 1926 they built in Germany 13 small racing yachts, to be used in the races off Long Island. They brought them on the decks of ships to Halifax and then brought them down here under their own power, their own sailing power or their own steam power, as the case might be. These boats cost $13,000 apiece to build in Germany, and the evidence shows they would have cost $22,000 if built in the United States. It is an inconsiderable item, and it does not amount to anything.

I might say, however, to the gentleman from Texas that there is a tariff on everything which goes into the manufacture of a boat. For example, engines of the Diesel type—and they are now putting them in all ships on account of their economy of operation—carry a tariff of 40 per cent, and a Diesel engine, according to the testimony, amounts to 20 per cent of the entire cost of building a boat, and the tariff on a Diesel engine is so high that no Diesel engines are brought into the United States. Therefore the tariff protects the boat builders of this country and manufacturers as to every item used in the construction of a boat. The tariff is so high that none of those things come in. The machinery which goes into a boat carries a high rate of duty.

There are 178 manufacturers in the United States who are demanding this paragraph, and they are manufacturers of machinery and manufacturers of boats, including manufacturers of Diesel engines. I suggested to the gentleman who appeared for them before the committee that if we had free raw material for boats or if we should take the tariff off of Diesel engines and off of these other things that go into the manufacture of a boat, they would be able to build boats cheaper. They do not want to do this because they have already got a tariff on these things which is absolutely exclusive. You can not bring any of them in and the proponents of this legislation are largely engaged in the manufacture of engines of the Diesel type.

Therefore manufacturers of engines of the Diesel type will not only get the 40 per cent which operates to exclude such engines from the United States, but in addition to that, under this bill, they will in effect get 500 per cent more.

There never has been in the history of bills levying tariff duties or excise duties before a clause which increased 500 per cent excise charges or tariff charges.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. I yield.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Then I understand from the gentleman's argument that the real purpose of this section is not to raise revenue for the Government, but really to act in the place of a prohibitive tariff.

Mr. RAINEY. Absolutely. Not a tariff, of course; the tariff is not involved, but it is a prohibitive charge in direct violation of article 8 of our Washington convention with Germany. It has the same effect, but the tariff is not involved, I will say to the gentleman on my left, in this amendment which I am offering to the bill. The tariff will remain just exactly as it is.

The effort is being made, in literature sent to Members of the House and in the hearings before the committee, to show that American boat building is in a decline. I might say before going to that branch of the subject that we have a user's tax now on foreign-built boats imposed each year. On a boat of any considerable size—a boat of 500 tons displacement—this user's tax will be $1,600 a year. This was a tax imposed during the war on all boats of this character, but we afterwards took it off as to American-built boats. So American manufacturers still have the user's tax as applied each year to foreign-built boats, in addition to the present excise tax they have, which is only 20 per cent of the proposed taxes. These taxes are five times as great.

Now, the American shipbuilding industry is prospering, prospering more than the shipbuilding industry of any other country in the world. Figures, as I obtain them from the Commerce Yearbook, run something like this:

In 1926 there was a decided decline in the tonnage under construction in the world, a decline of 1,933,000 tons. Therefore, in all the world, outside of the United States, there is an appreciable decline in the shipbuilding industry. In the United States we had under construction at the end of 1926, 151,000 tons, a gain over 1925 of 44 per cent. Therefore, this claim made by representatives of the shipbuilding industry that they are in a desperate condition is not borne out by the facts. They had under construction in shipyards in the United States 44 per cent more tonnage in 1926 than they had in 1925.

Most of the world trade, the transoceanic trade, is carried on in 5,575 ships—ships of more than 4,000 tons displacement—and we have our full share of that tonnage.

In 1926 we carried in American ships 118 per cent more tonnage than we carried in 1914; a slight decrease of 0.5 per cent in the tonnage carried in American ships in 1926 under 1925, which is absolutely negligible. We carry in American ships 36 per cent of our transoceanic tonnage, and, of course, in the coastwise trade we carry it all; and on the Lakes we carry it all.

So this charge that the American shipbuilding industry is declining is not borne out by the facts, and the statements made are misleading.

This proposed increase in charges on foreign-built boats can in no particular be construed as a proposition to raise revenue. It is frankly the very opposite. It will act as a complete embargo, and there will be no revenue derived from that source in the future if this provision is enacted into law. We only collect $7,000 now, and that small amount indicates how negligible is this German competition. The demand for it is an unconscionable demand, presented by prosperous shipbuilding industries, whose business is not declining but is increasing at a greater rate than the shipbuilding industry of any other nation; in fact, the shipbuilding industry of every other shipbuilding nation in the world is declining.

We now build in our yards more ships every year than is built in the yards of any other nation in the world except Great Britain, Italy, and Germany. In 1924 we constructed in American shipyards a tonnage of only 58,000. On June 30, two years later, we had under construction in American shipyards a tonnage of 133,000, and six months later, on December 31, 1926, our tonnage under construction in American shipyards had increased to 151,000 tons. During the period I have mentioned tonnage construction has declined in the shipyards of every other nation of the world. We carry 47 per cent of our foreign commerce now in our own ships, and only 6 per cent of this amount is carried in our Shipping Board vessels.

This is not a proposition which affects only the very rich. This is not an attempt merely to compel the very rich to buy their yachts from American shipbuilders. It affects principally men of moderate means, and we would never have heard of this unconscionable attempt to place an embargo on foreign-built ships if it had not been for the fact that 15 small sailing boats for racing purposes were brought in from Germany about a year ago. These boats of this small type came in in an unusual way. They were brought on the decks of freighters and unloaded at Halifax—a foreign port—and then came in under their own power to United States ports.

These small boats only cost $13,000 each, including the costs of delivering them at Halifax. If they had been built in this country, protected as materials are by tariffs, they would have cost $22,000 each. Therefore American shipbuilders figure that they have lost in profits $8,000 on each of these 15 small sailing boats, a total of $120,000 for all of them. We are asked now, in order to prevent a recurrence of this situation, to imperil our trade relations with Germany by placing this unconscionable tax on foreign-built boats. It will probably be a long time before conditions are such in the yacht-racing sport as to again bring about this situation.

American shipbuilders are not worrying about large yachts being constructed for American millionaires in German shipyards. According to the Marine News for December, 1927, there are eight large yachts being built in German shipyards for prominent leaders in American industry, and about that many are being built in American shipyards. What they are afraid of is that the smaller boats used by people of moderate means for pleasure on our waterways will be brought in, after being landed at Halifax, under their own power. This is the thing that worries American shipbuilders, and this embargo will affect not so much six or eight rich men in the United States who may buy large yachts abroad each year as the small men who may buy small sailing craft and small power boats abroad and land them at a near-by foreign port and bring them in under their own power. They are afraid that others may follow the precedent set by the few men who brought in a few small sailing boats last year in this way. Of course, if a boat is so small as to make it impossible to bring it in from a near-by port under its own power, it would have to come on the deck of a ship, and when it does it pays a duty.

The user's tax, the present excise taxes, and the indirect methods of tariff protection we have now in effect constitute all the protection builders of Diesel engines and builders of boats ought, in good conscience, to ask at the present time. Our trade relations with Germany and with other foreign nations are now being endangered by the greed of American manufacturers and already tariffs are being raised against us in practically every commercial nation in the world, until in some nations they amount practically to an embargo on our agricultural products. Such legislation as is proposed in the section I am trying to strike out of this bill will simply accentuate the conditions to which I am calling attention. The agricultural condition of the country, now in such dire straits, will be the first to feel the effect of the retaliatory legislation made inevitable in foreign countries by just such legislation as is proposed in the section I am endeavoring to strike out of this bill. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this is a matter that does not require very much discussion. This is a tax on the wealthy yacht owner who prefers to spend his money in Europe rather than patronize an American shipyard.

I would like at this time to take about 5 or 10 minutes on the tariff aspect of the situation as presented by the gentleman from Illinois, but it is hardly worth while, and this is really not the time for a tariff discussion.

This is an excise tax for the use of these boats, and it is graded according to their size. Witnesses who appeared at the hearings on this subject were the only people, strange to say, who came before the committee asking for an increase of taxation, asking that the rates be increased. Of course everybody else that appeared at the hearings wanted taxes reduced.

These boats arrive from the other side and when they come in under their own power, as the gentleman from Illinois has said, they do not pay a tariff. The method employed in handling the smaller ones is to unload them from freight steamers at Halifax or St. Johns and bring them into this country under their own power and thus escape the penalty imposed by our tariff law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And pay no tariff whatever.

Mr. CROWTHER. Pay no tariff whatever; and in addition to that, one of these yachts that will cost from $1,000,000 to $1,500,000, or even more, comes into port here under her own power, and very frequently has equipment running as high as half a million dollars, consisting of tapestries, rugs, crockery, dishware, engines, electrical apparatus, silverware for the table, and they arrive here with the linen and silver on the table and all ready for the owner to enter just the same as you would enter your private home; and not one cent's worth of all these magnificent furnishings pays a cent of duty because it is recognized as equipment, and it is all made in European countries.

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWTHER. Yes.

Mr. RAINEY. Under the law, are they not required if they dock at an American port and remain any length of time to remove such things from the vessel and put them in lockers and lock them up?

Mr. CROWTHER. Of course they are not allowed to remove the equipment under the law, but we know now that there is a great deal of smuggling going on under the guise of bringing such things in on these big yachts as equipment. It is only one of the many difficulties that face us at the various customs ports in the attempt to stop smuggling.

Now, this tax we believe is fair, and we believe it is necessary, because our shipyards are not prosperous to-day, despite what the gentleman from Illinois said. The evidence given by men who represent them show that they are not prosperous. The reason boats are built over there is because there is 33⅓ per cent differential between the cost here and in Germany. This is largely due to low wage scales in Germany.

That is all there is to this proposition. It is not complicated; it is not tied up in any way with the tariff. The tariff proposition as it exists is futile, because it is avoided by their coming in under their own power.

I recently read the statement that the German shipbuilders submitted estimates to the Cunard Steamship Co. for the construction of three boats, and their bids were £500,000 less than the British bids. Boats can be built over there for 66⅔ per cent of what it will cost here.

Now as to the Diesel engine. I asked a prominent engineer if it was a fact that because of the duty we did not import Diesel engines, and he said it was not a fact; it is because we made an engine equally serviceable in this country. If the United States Government desires to use Diesel engines on their battleships or cruisers, under the law they could bring them in without a tariff. The gentleman from Illinois knows that. So there is no difficulty about the tariff on Diesel engines. The only trouble with the tariff is that it falls far short of protecting many of our key industries from foreign competition. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAINEY) there were—28 ayes and 81 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

PART V.—STAMP TAXES

SEC. 441. TAX ON SALES OF PRODUCE ON EXCHANGE

Subdivision 4 of Schedule A of Title VIII of the revenue act of 1926 is repealed, to take effect on the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I realize that the members of the Ways and Means Committee, without much partisan feeling, have worked hard to make this bill. In the making of tax laws they are doing better each year; but it seems to me that not only the members of the Ways and Means Committee but many of the other Members of the House and the people fail to realize that generally we will have an income tax as long as this Government endures. Some people seem to have a fixed idea that the levying of an income tax resulted from the Great War. But we had the income tax prior to that and we will continue to have it in some form or other. Therefore I hope and pray that the time will soon come when the Committee on Ways and Means will do something to simplify the methods with regard to the reporting of incomes so that the great bulk of the people who pay taxes on incomes under $12,000 can make their returns simply, properly, and without unnecessary expense. The cost to the Federal Government in printing and paper alone is enormous, and you all know of the costs and labor to the average payer of a medium income tax.

The Chairman, I venture to say that 20 per cent of all the membership of this House can not properly make their own returns without the aid of the income experts from the Treasury Department, who are sent over here from Baltimore each year to help us out.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is aware that the returns of those having an income of $5,000 have been simplified. I know of clerks and women that have no trouble in making up their returns.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; I know. I said that each year the committee was doing better, but they can do still better. The process should be simplified so that the great body of the people who pay a tax under $10,000 income might do it on one sheet of paper with one affidavit. Plans have been outlined, and submitted to the committee, but the plan seems to have become fixed in the beginning, and no one seems willing to start on a new and simpler line. Then, again, the small taxpayers are unorganized. No lawyers represent them. They have no experts to appear for them. The committee is occupied with the big, hard problems of taxation, and can not find time for consideration of a simple process for the modest man with taxable income, who is anxious and willing to pay his bit to the Federal Treasurer, and who will appreciate a simple plan by which he can pay a small flat percentage of his gross income in lieu of paying under the present cumbersome plan. At least, an optional plan might be tried for his benefit.

SEC. 442. TAX ON SALES OR TRANSFERS OF CAPITAL STOCK

Subdivision 3 of Schedule A of Title VIII of the revenue act of 1926 is amended, to take effect on the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act, by striking out "on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 2 cents, and where such shares are without par or face value, the tax shall be 2 cents on the transfer or sale or agreement to sell on each share" and inserting in lieu thereof "on each $100 of face value or fraction thereof, 1 cent, and where such shares are without par or face value, the tax shall be 1 cent on the transfer or sale or agreement to sell on each share."

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. That will not interfere with gentlemen who want to offer amendments. I want to say a word to these gentlemen over here on the Republican side who are worrying about the loss of revenue by amendments to the bill. I want to call attention to this particular section and stress upon you the fact that a mere change of a word—2 cents to 1 cent—loses you $8,500,000. Out of that $8,500,000, $8,000,000 of it is paid by New York State alone. In other words, they paid more in one transaction when the Du Ponts bought General Motors than you people from Iowa pay in five years. You are going to repeal it, and then you are going to say that you are sorry to lose the revenue. You are not willing to give the small corporations relief, and the probability is that Mr. GREEN'S excuse will be that he could not afford to lose the revenue. Yet he donates $8,000,000 to the New York Stock Exchange without a word. I am in favor of reducing taxes, and I have no objection to reducing these taxes so far as the principle is concerned, but I call the attention of you gentlemen to the fact that in the reduction of taxes in this bill you are not favoring the average man except in the automobile tax and in the small corporations, and here you are, without a word, giving up $8,500,000 worth of taxes, 90 per cent of which is paid on the New York Stock Exchange. I merely call attention to it, so that you can do as you please. I do not propose to offer an amendment, for I favor repeal of all taxes of this nature. I do not want you to say in the future that you are reducing these and then did not have enough revenue. Here you are voluntarily surrendering $8,500,000 by this provision.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I wish the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] would make a logical argument, which he is capable of doing, if he so desires, but he has not made such an argument. The stamp taxes, as everyone knows, are passed on. They are not paid by the party who buys the stamp, and they are not in this case. This is a tax on doing business. It is a war tax that has not been reduced since the beginning of the war, and is paid, not by big corporations, but by individuals.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I imagine that that is probably true, that all taxes are merely passed on. That is what I said about the corporation tax. The gentleman took the other end of it. I call the gentleman's attention, however, in passing on this tax to the fact that seats on the New York Stock Exchange are going down in value every day. They are now worth between three and four hundred thousand dollars, while at the beginning of this year they were worth only $200,000. Evidently the business is not profitable, and it looks as if it might go broke, if you do not take off this tax.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I thought the gentleman was not through with his argument and would need to add something else. The fact of the matter is that this tax is burdensome on some transactions. A large number of corporations, especially mining corporations, issue stock very low in value, as low as 25 cents, do they not, I ask the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY]?

Mr. HADLEY. Oh, yes; it is not unusual to see it floating at far below that. I have seen it as low as 2 cents a share.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. A gentleman at my right tells me that he bought some the other day as low as 2 cents a share.

Mr. HADLEY. I know of stock transactions where the 2-cent tax would absorb the entire value of the stock, and they are bona fide transactions. On a sale of $100,000 worth of stock, where the rate is 2 cents, as it is in the present law, the tax will be $2,000. This is all dust that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is throwing into the eyes of the committee here when he talks about the New York Stock Exchange. He talks about the New York Stock Exchange to draw attention away from the effect of the amendment he has fostered, which will result in reductions greatly in excess of estimated revenues. He now seeks to escape this by pointing out where you can save eight and a half million dollars at the expense of those people who are sustaining a great burden.

The fact is, as the chairman has just said, that this is a tax on business. I call attention to the fact that it is a tax on the par value. It is not a tax upon the intrinsic value. If stock is worth par, it will operate equitably; but it is upon the par value and not the intrinsic value. Mining concerns and other development concerns, which have any prospective development, frequently capitalize upon a prospective basis, and the prospective development is the warrant for it. On the transfer of stock the tax is burdensome, unreasonable, and operates to deter business and industrial activities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], or any other Member, thinks that this is a tax on the members of the New York Stock Exchange, he is greatly deceived. The people who are on the stock exchange do not pay this, except in the first instance. They buy the stamps and charge it to the people who are selling the stock. It is the same way with these little mining concerns, where the stock is transferred. The gentleman from Texas is about as logical on this as he has been in some of the other arguments that he has made.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma: Page 195, after line 5, insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 443. SALE OF STAMPS AT POST OFFICES

Title VIII of the revenue act of 1926 is amended by adding after section 807 a new section to read as follows:

"SEC. 808. The commissioner shall furnish to the Postmaster General without prepayment a suitable quantity of adhesive stamps to be distributed to and kept on sale by the various postmasters in the United States in cities of over 50,000 inhabitants. The Postmaster General may require each such postmaster to give additional or increased bond as postmaster for the value of the stamps so furnished, and each such postmaster shall deposit the receipts from the sale of such stamps to the credit of and render accounts to the Postmaster General at such times and in such form as he may by regulations prescribe. The Postmaster General shall at least once monthly transfer all collections from this source to the Treasury as internal-revenue collections."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I accept that amendment, and I think there is no objection to it upon the part of any member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Just before adjournment yesterday I made considerable effort, unsuccessfully, to get the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON] to yield. The gentleman from South Carolina stated with great emphasis that there was a time in our history when the country was out of debt and distributed a surplus among the States during a Democratic administration under Andrew Jackson.

My purpose in asking the gentleman to yield was to remind him and the House that the surplus which he mentioned, being the only one he could remember under a Democratic administration, and that nearly a hundred years ago, was not the work of Democratic statesmanship; it was not revenue growing out of a revenue bill; it was not the result of a scientific study and adjustment of sources, rates, and estimates. Every dollar of that surplus was derived from the sudden unprecedented and unexpected volume of sales of the public lands.

It was not only a surprise, but it was so foreign to Democratic experience that it was viewed with dismay and apprehension. They did not know what to do with it. They could not comprehend then, as they can not now, the idea of an adequate reserve or margin. They decided to loan the sum—$28,000,000—to the existing States, numbering at that time 26. This was done at the suggestion of Calhoun to Jackson, and carried into effect by the Democratic Congress.

History recites the effect of this act as follows:

The 80 banks of deposit in which it was lying had regarded this sum almost as a permanent loan and had inflated credit on the basis of it. The necessary calling in of their loans in order to meet the drafts in favor of the States, combining with the breach of the overstrained credit between America and Europe and the decline in the price of cotton, brought about a crash which prostrated the whole financial, industrial, and commercial system of the country for six or seven years. The crash came just as Jackson was leaving office; the whole burden fell on his successor, Van Buren.

Again, with the peculiarity of government and legislation characteristic of Democracy when it attempts business statesmanship, this was done in such a manner that the nature of the transaction is far from clear. It was a gift, in effect, to the States, yet technically it was a loan, a loan which had no due date. It is carried hopelessly on the books of the United States Treasury as "unavailable funds." It was a Government financial transaction which seems to have served as a precedent for Democratic administration uncertain loans of doubtful authorization made to foreign countries after the armistice.

Such is the history of the boasted sole and last surplus of a Democratic administration, in 1836, so strenuously declaimed by the gentleman from South Carolina. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This is a political debate which I do not think I can permit to go on. The gentleman from South Carolina spoke yesterday——

Mr. STEVENSON. I spoke for two minutes on yesterday. That is all the time I have taken this session, and I will not take much more. It seems to have attracted attention, however, on the other side, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] is entirely wrong in saying that history shows the Democratic Party has never turned in a surplus, and this gentleman [Mr. WINTERS] undertakes to excuse and defend Mr. BEGG's mistake by saying it was an accidental surplus. I will call your attention to a little more. When Grover Cleveland went out of office on the 4th of March, 1889, he turned over a surplus to the Treasury for a Republican administration. What happened? In 1893 when Benjamin Harrison went out of office he left a Treasury which was bare and depleted, with a gold reserve that had been actually impaired so that the Government had to go out and sell bonds to replenish the gold reserve. There was not enough money to meet the obligations. [Applause.] Mr. Cleveland held for four years during the most distressful period the country has ever seen, and when he went out of office he left a solvent Treasury, with all the dollars of the United States worth a dollar all over the world and with a gold reserve which protected our Government, which in the many years of the Republican administration had never been adequately provided for until Mr. Cleveland did so. And Mr. Wilson, of New Jersey, the Democratic President for eight years, left an ample reserve and an ample credit in the Treasury of the United States to meet its obligations and turned over a surplus.

Mr. SNELL. What were Liberty bonds selling for when President Wilson retired from the White House?

Mr. STEVENSON. The gentleman from Ohio did not know the difference between the Republican campaign book and the history of the Democratic Party. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

PART VI.—LIQUOR TAXES

SEC. 451. TAX ON STILL WINES

(a) So much of section 611 of the revenue act of 1918 as reads as follows:

"On wines containing not more than 14 per cent of absolute alcohol, 16 cents per wine gallon, the per cent of alcohol taxable under this section to be reckoned by volume and not by weight;

"On wines containing more than 14 per cent and not exceeding 21 per cent of absolute alcohol, 40 cents per wine gallon;"

is amended to read as follows:

"On wines containing not more than 14 per cent of absolute alcohol, 4 cents per wine gallon, the per cent of alcohol taxable under this section to be reckoned by volume and not by weight;

"On wines containing more than 14 per cent and not exceeding 21 per cent of absolute alcohol, 10 cents per wine gallon."

(b) Such section is further amended by adding at the end thereof two new paragraphs to read as follows:

"Any such wines may, under such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, be sold or removed tax free for the manufacture of vinegar or for the production of dealcoholized wines containing less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume.

"The taxes imposed by this section shall not apply to dealcoholized wines containing less than one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol by volume."

(c) Subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall take effect on the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LAGUARDIA: Page 196, line 13, add the following: "The payment of the tax provided in this section shall be conclusive evidence of the lawful possession and subsequent sale of such wine, the provisions of any existing law to the contrary notwithstanding."

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Does the Chairman desire to hear argument against the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman if he insists.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I expect I will have to make an argument to the point of order and not to the merits of my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman understands the rules of the committee and the House. The point of order is sustained.

The gentleman from Maryland, Mr. LINTHICUM, is recognized.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take up much time of the House because what I want to say now is a matter of press record. I noticed in the Friday edition of the Star last week an account of a meeting at which our former colleague, Mr. Upshaw, of Georgia, was present, a meeting of the Anti-Saloon League; and when Mr. Kresge——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not go on with that. I know of no reason why he should talk on something that is not related to this bill.

Mr. LINTHICUM. It is related to this bill, because I moved to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I moved to strike out the last word, which is the word "act." Under that you can speak upon almost any subject, and I am speaking of the action of a gentleman who was formerly a Member of this House, a Member from the State of Georgia, at the meeting of the Anti-Saloon League, when Mr. Kresge offered to contribute $500,000 toward the Anti-Saloon League campaign.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I think I have the right to discuss the last word, "act."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland will confine his remarks to the amendment.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Certainly I am speaking in order when I speak on a question of taxation in an act of this kind, where an attempt is made to tax certain wines and liquors brought into this country. I want to discuss that, and I want to tell how the gentleman from Georgia, when Kresge made that offer, led in singing Praise God, from Whom All Blessings Flow. [Laughter.]

With that statement I will extend my remarks in the RECORD, to include the article that I referred to and one from the Sun of to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object. I have objected to the insertion of all editorials and newspaper extracts and memorials.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Then I will take occasion to read this article entitled "Dry Georgia tops list with 4,000 stills seized" in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object to that.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I have not been allowed time in which to discuss this bill heretofore.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I am not going to discuss this particular amendment, but I do want to say something about the bill in general.

If the people of the United States knew the contents of this bill, and knew what it will really do, I doubt that there would be 100 votes cast for the bill in the House. But the people do not know. They read the headlines in the large city dailies and the copies of those headlines in the weeklies about tax reduction, and the average man throughout the country actually thinks his tax will be reduced when this bill becomes law.

The fact is that the average man gets nothing from this bill, even less than nothing. We have to operate the Government, and it takes $167,000,000 a year to pay the interest on the war debt alone. Some of us think that those people who made money out of the war ought to pay the greater part of that debt. But now the tax heretofore imposed upon those people has been reduced, and hence the taxes will be increased for the little fellow, though indirectly. If we retain the Garner amendment and the repeal of the automobile tax there will be a little relief for the average man. And the finest feature about the bill is that the estate tax has been left in, and the greatest credit for that belongs to the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN]. I, of course, appreciate what the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] have done; but inasmuch as they are progressive Democrats, and therefore for the people instead of for the special interests, I should naturally expect them to be for the retaining of the estate tax. But not so for the chairman of that most powerful committee on earth to-day—the Committee on Ways and Means.

In spite of the pressure that has been brought to bear upon him by Andrew Mellon and all the powerful money interests, he has consistently stood his ground and never wavered an inch under the terrific barrage. I think the people of this Nation owe to the gentleman from Iowa an eternal debt of gratitude for the stand he has taken, because it is due to his work more than that of any other individual that the estate tax shall go on. [Applause.]

But outside of those three features I can not see how the farmer of my district or the laboring man or the small business man gets anything. This bill, when enacted into law, will increase instead of reduce the taxes for more than a hundred million American citizens. The bill is shaped in iniquity in the $400,000,000 brain of Secretary Andrew Mellon; it is conceived in sin in the $50,000,000 mind of Undersecretary Ogden Mills, and it is brought to life by the millionaires on the majority side of the Committee on Ways and Means, and there are many of them on that committee.

Having in mind the oath I took on December 5 I can not vote for a bill of this kind. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 453. TAX ON CEREAL BEVERAGES

Section 903 of the revenue act of 1926 is repealed, to take effect on the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph covering section 453.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK of New York: Page 97, line 5, strike out section 453.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, on June 10 of this year the President indicated his great concern about the future revenues of this country. There has been a great deal of discussion on the floor of this House about the sources of revenue to carry on the business of the Government of the United States, but there has been little discussion by anybody in the high public life of this country about a great source of revenue which a few years ago was destroyed by sumptuary legislation. I do not think it would be out of order at this time to call attention to the loss of revenue due to prohibition. I think it is interesting on a revenue bill, no matter what one's political views may be on the wet and dry question.

The revenue derived in 1919 by the United States from the sale of beer was over $100,000,000. It can be safely estimated that could we have modification of the Volstead Act the revenue derived by the United States from a similar source would be largely in excess of that.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BLACK of New York. No; I do not choose to yield. [Laughter.]

Let us look on the other side of the books. What has this thing cost us on the expenditure side? It has cost the Federal Government, as well as various units of the United States, untold sums in ludicrous and ridiculous attempts to enforce the law. It has cost the United States great sums of money to maintain an increased census in the Federal jails, and similarly in the States it has cost great sums to maintain a greater census in these State jails. As an offset against that the Attorney General simply says we get about $4,000,000 in fines from the enforcement of the prohibition law.

Now, what about the farmers? On the barley crop alone the farmers have suffered a deficit of over $700,000,000. This is true as well of hops. In 1922 there were 34,000,000 pounds of hops used.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of New York. No. I am still a Coolidge man. I do not choose to yield.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I wish the gentleman would yield for a question.

Mr. BLACK of New York. Well, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Can the gentleman tell us how many hundred millions of bushels of barley were used in the liquor business?

Mr. BLACK of New York. I have not the figures now, but I have put them in the RECORD year after year. The gentleman should have read them, because I put them in the RECORD for his benefit.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. I wish the gentleman would put them in the RECORD again.

Mr. JONES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK of New York. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Perhaps the gentleman is still emulating the President; he finally yields under pressure?

Mr. BLACK of New York. I do. I yield, but I do not run. Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CROWTHER], that great Republican from the State of New York, for whom I have the greatest admiration because he is a real Republican, and my friend from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] had a discussion about yachts that are smuggled into this country without paying any revenue, but what about the beer that comes into this country from Canada and which does not pay any revenue? The Canadian Government tells us there were 4,000,000 gallons of beer sent into this country last year and a great deal of whisky sent into this country last year. On the revenue side alone this is a mighty serious proposition, and when you consider further that the people have scrapped this proposition of prohibition it is time the Government thought of doing the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read down to and including line 17 on page 199.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to have the attention of the gentleman from Iowa. In line 1, page 199, after the word "assessed," there is a period, which the Chair believes should be a comma.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is a clerical error which, by unanimous consent, the clerks were authorized to correct.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 504. SUSPENSION OF RUNNING OF STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

(a) Section 277 (b) of the revenue act of 1926 is amended to read as follows:

"(b) The running of the statute of limitations provided in this section or in section 278 on the making of assessments and the beginning of distraint or a proceeding in court for collection, in respect of any deficiency, shall (after the mailing of a notice under subdivision (a) of section 274) be suspended for the period during which the commissioner is prohibited from making the assessment or beginning distraint or a proceeding in court (and in any event, if a proceeding in respect of the deficiency is placed on the docket of the board, until the decision of the board becomes final), and for 60 days thereafter."

(b) Subsection (a) of this section shall apply in all cases where the period of limitation has not expired prior to the enactment of this act.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Of course, we have to follow the committee in these recommendations as to these administrative features of this bill; but the thing I am afraid of is that Congress is not giving enough attention to the taxpayer's side in tax controversies, but is turning everything over to the Government's side of such controversies.

In the first place, a taxpayer can not go into court and restrain the Government. He has no relief in the courts. You deny him any right to go into the courts. Let us see what happens. Here is a corporation which sells out and here is a shareholder and director of that corporation. They have their tax assessed and they put up the money with which to pay that tax. It is discovered later on that there should have been more tax assessed. What do they do? They go out and take the property of this stockholder and director and tie up all of his property. He can not go into court. He is engaged in another business, a separate business, but he can not go into court and relieve himself at all because you have barred the doors of the courts to him. An officer has distrained his private property and tied it up because of the assessment due from the corporation that has failed to pay all of it. You tie up his individual property and do not give him any chance.

Mr. MADDEN. If the gentleman will yield, this man owns the corporation the gentleman is describing, does he not?

Mr. McKEOWN. No; he has sold out and gone into another line of business, and they go out and tie up his private property and all of his money in the banks.

Mr. MADDEN. But if he is a man who has failed, he would not have any money in the banks.

Mr. McKEOWN. The man did not fail, but the corporation sold out.

Mr. MADDEN. Then your man did not fail, but he just ran away?

Mr. McKEOWN. No; he sold his interest in the corporation.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, that is worse.

Mr. McKEOWN. He was simply a director in a corporation that sold to another company. Then they come along and tie up his individual property and tie him up so he can not have any relief.

Mr. MADDEN. He ought not to be in such a corporation.

Mr. McKEOWN. Well, it is not a fair proposition to him.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We must protect the Government in some way. I do not think my friend has read section 613, which has to do with those cases. Of course we can not permit a man who owes a tax to transfer his property and beat the Government out of the tax.

Mr. McKEOWN. I understand you have to protect the Government. I know that; but in the passage of these administrative rules, if you give too much credence to the demands of the department you do not give any protection to the taxpayer. That is what I am speaking about.

I will give you another illustration of what happens. There was a business man who gave certain properties to his wife. He executed the deeds, but did not put them on record. They then made two returns, his wife making a return as well as himself. Then what took place? They came back and said, "You are not entitled to make two returns; you must make one return and pay additional tax." He paid the additional tax, but they would not allow him any credit for the money his wife had paid under her tax return and said they would return that to the wife and told him to make out an application for its return. He made out the application for its return; it went in, and for five years it stayed there, and then they said, "We can not give it back to you; it has to be given to the wife, and she did not make the application for its return. The statute of limitations has run and she can not recover it."

If this is not mistreating of our Nation, I do not know what that term means.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment the Ways and Means Committee has presented us a reasonable, fair, just tax-reduction measure. They have had at their command the best information available to help make up the bill. As far as I am able to learn from conversation with various people from different parts of the country and from reading newspaper editorials, the average thinking man of this country, the man who thinks in the unit of the good of the whole country rather than the simple unit of his own pocketbook, is absolutely satisfied with this tax-reduction measure.

I have listened to the debate quite carefully, especially the debate from the Members on the minority side of the Ways and Means Committee. In my judgment they did not make a single dent in the general propositions or principles carried in this bill. I did not think they tried to, and they left the floor giving me the impression they expected to support this bill.

Now, what is the situation in which we find ourselves? Of course, I and every other man would prefer never to have to vote for taxes. Unfortunately we all can not take the position that one of our late colleagues took when he stated he voted for every appropriation and against every tax. The millenium has not yet come and unfortunately we have to put money in the Treasury before we can take it out, and what have we done in the actual consideration of this bill?

Every single amendment that has been offered on this floor, or very nearly every one, except the estate tax, that was intended to emasculate this bill or to keep the bill from returning money to the Treasury, has had the almost unanimous support of the Democratic side of this House.

I want to say to you, gentlemen, that some of you very men within the next 30 days will ask for the most unprecedented appropriations for your local sections that were ever asked on the floor of the American Congress. You are going to ask this for flood control and river and harbor improvements to meet your industrial growth. I have been down through that country for three weeks and I talked with some of your people and they said to me, "Mr. SNELL, I hope you and our other Northern friends will help take care of our situation." I looked over the situation. I thought their demands were fair, and I promised to do the right thing by them. I came back here with the intention of doing everything that was right to protect them in their flood-control proposition and also in their demands for appropriations in connection with rivers and harbors to take care of the increased development in industrial growth along the Gulf of Mexico; and I want you gentlemen who represent that part of the country to go back home and tell them that Mr. SNELL stood on the floor of the House of Representatives and voted to put taxes on his own people so that we would have money in the Treasury to do our part when the time came; and practically every one of you voted against me every time.

Now, these are cold facts. You have voted against your own interests and the interests of your people and I want them to know it. This tax reduction is not political as far as I am concerned. You have voted to put the Treasury in such a condition that they can legitimately say they have not the money to meet the appropriations you are asking for and that you ought to have. I have stood here and have done everything I could to get enough money in the Treasury to meet every reasonable and legitimate demand that should be made on it and you have consistently voted against them. If you people who are more interested in these local propositions than I am will not cooperate with me in getting some money in the Treasury for that purpose, you need not expect my cooperation to help you jimmy money out of a depleted Treasury. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. No; I do not yield at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in line with what the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] has just said, I want to call your attention to a question that was asked Mr. Mills, the Undersecretary of the Treasury, at his last appearance before the committee, when he gave us a résumé of the methods that had been used in arriving at the surplus which we could expect.

Mr. TREADWAY. My question is this: The Treasury submitted a suggested reduction of $225,000,000 in taxes. Can you tell us whether in that estimate you considered—and if so, what consideration was given—the probable action of Congress at the coming session in regard to appropriations?

Mr. MILLS. I think that same question was asked at the hearing 10 days ago, and the answer was that we have not taken into consideration such new expenditures as might be provided for in the next session of Congress. In other words, the figures do not include any payments that might have to be made on account of ships and radios, if the alien property bill goes through; they do not include the $25,000,000 that will be required for the purchase of the triangle; they do not include Mississippi flood reliefs; they do not include increased naval expenses; they do not include Muscle Shoals; they do not include Boulder Dam; and they do not include agricultural relief. That being so, the figures given by the Treasury must be considered as maximum figures and not minimum figures.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa and Mr. OLDFIELD rose.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object, of course, to my friend, the gentleman from Arkansas, speaking, but if there is any more talk on this section I will have to object. I therefore ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate greatly what my friend from New York [Mr. SNELL] said a moment ago. I am glad that he intends that his heart shall be in the right place on the proposition of flood control. But let me call attention to two or three things. We have lost only $33,000,000 to the Treasury, and that is on the automobile tax. On the proposition of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] we took from the Treasury $24,000,000, but on the second proposition we put back $24,000,000 or $25,000,000.

Mr. HOCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes.

Mr. HOCH. I voted for the second proposition of the gentleman from Texas, but the gentleman from Arkansas knows that in any event it does not take effect for two years.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The excess revenue for the next fiscal year is far in excess of the reduction at the present time.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I take the position that we have lost nothing on the two propositions.

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLDFIELD. Yes.

Mr. RAINEY. And the gentleman must not forget that we have retained the estate tax.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I was coming to that. This year we get $75,000,000 out of the estate tax. The Secretary of the Treasury came before our committee and said that he wanted to repeal the inheritance tax because we did not need the money. They were perfectly willing to relieve Mr. Ford and the Garys and the Rockefellers of taxes after they die, but he did not want to relieve the automobile purchasers and the little corporations of taxes. That is the situation here.

Now, that is the situation as far as these three propositions are concerned. We have voted on them and lose only $33,000,000, and we have saved $75,000,000 by retaining the inheritance tax over the protests of the President, Secretary Mellon, and Undersecretary Mills.

Now, I am going to offer an amendment to page 226 which will save the Treasury $2,000,000 a year. That is not a great deal, but it is something. The committee once placed it in the bill, but for political reasons and under a misapprehension the Republican Members backed up and took it out of the bill. I hope that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] will think about this. They thought that Republican officeholders would lose their offices, but the Civil Service Commission has said they would not, but, on the contrary, they would be covered into the classified civil service. I hope you gentlemen will think of that, because it will be a great convenience to the taxpayers of the country, and the Treasury Department is for it. [Applause.] I want you to realize that you are saving $2,000,000 by it and conferring a great convenience on the taxpayers throughout the country. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 505. SAME—TRANSFEREE CASES

(a) Section 280 (d) of the revenue act of 1926 is amended to read as follows:

"(d) The running of the statute of limitations upon the assessment of the liability of a transferee or fiduciary shall, after the mailing of the notice under subdivision (a) of section 274 to the transferee or fiduciary, be suspended for the period during which the commissioner is prohibited from making the assessment in respect of the liability of the transferee or fiduciary (and in any event, if a proceeding in respect of the liability is placed on the docket of the board, until the decision of the board becomes final), and for 60 days thereafter."

(b) Subsection (a) of this section shall apply in all cases where the period of limitation has not expired prior to the enactment of this act.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, petulance and irritation often cause wise and patriotic gentlemen to say things they do not mean. I am very much distressed at the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] a few moments ago, when he appeared to be deeply grieved because gentlemen were voting for some amendments to the bill, and he seemed to be alarmed over the danger that these amendments, if adopted by the House, would necessarily cause him to change his views on the question of Mississippi flood control.

Like the gentleman from New York, I do not come from the Mississippi Valley, but I know the gentleman from New York did not mean what he said. I know that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] views that matter as a statesman and not as a pork-barrel politician. I know that his petulance will pass in a few moments and that he will realize that his irritation for the moment caused him to express thoughts that are at variance with the gentleman's conduct here and at variance with the great responsibility which he carries as chairman of the Rules Committee and as one of the outstanding leaders on the Republican side of this Chamber. [Applause.] I would suggest to the gentleman from New York that when he says that if these amendments are adopted the gentlemen from the Mississippi Valley need not expect him to vote for public improvements to control Mississippi floods when the Treasury will not warrant it, he fails to properly interpret his duties here.

Let me suggest to the gentleman from New York that his obligation on this floor is not to gentlemen from the Mississippi Valley, but his obligation here is to the people of the United States, and when he says that he has visited that stricken section, that he viewed conditions there, that he believes the conditions call for relief, that he believes that it is the duty of the Federal Government to step in and undertake that relief, and that he has come to that conclusion, then he has transferred any responsibility from the shoulders of the people of that section to his own shoulders as a Member of the Congress of the United States. [Applause.]

I suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] that in editing his remarks, a privilege granted to all Members of the House, he bear in mind the suggestion I have dared to make. I am sure that the gentleman does not mean what critical people might infer. I know the gentleman, and I know that deep down in his heart his conscience will not permit his hand to execute a threat which his tongue may have impatiently uttered. A different conclusion might be drawn by those who are disposed to attribute to the gentleman the qualities of a pork-barrel-trading politician.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I moved a little while ago to close debate, but I do not think that motion has been acted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman made his motion before there had been any debate, and the Chair, under the rules, could not put the motion.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment, if that motion has not been agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am compelled to make the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman now to make his motion to close debate.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 5800) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and for other purposes," disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. WARREN, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. OVERMAN.

THE REVENUE BILL

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 506. WAIVERS AFTER EXPIRATION OF PERIOD OF LIMITATION

Section 278 (c) and (d) of the revenue act of 1926 are amended to read as follows:

"(c) Where before or after the expiration of the time prescribed in section 277 for the assessment of the tax, both the commissioner and the taxpayer have consented in writing to its assessment after such time, the tax may be assessed at any time prior to the expiration of the period agreed upon. The period so agreed upon may be extended by subsequent agreements in writing made before or after the expiration of the period previously agreed upon.

"(d) Where the assessment of any income, excess-profits, or war-profits taxes imposed by this title or by prior act of Congress has been made (whether before or after the enactment of this act) within the period of limitation properly applicable thereto, such tax may be collected by distraint or by a proceeding in court (begun before or after the enactment of this act), but only if begun (1) within six years after the assessment of the tax, or (2) prior to the expiration of any period for collection agreed upon in writing by the commissioner and the taxpayer before or after the expiration of such six-year period. The period so agreed upon may be extended by subsequent agreements in writing made before or after the expiration of the period previously agreed upon."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Members on both sides of the aisle have frequently expressed their admiration for and confidence in Mr. McCoy, the Actuary of the Treasury Department. No one has more earnestly commended him for his estimates on matters of taxation than my good friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER]. I have just had a conversation with Mr. McCoy, and I asked him whether he had made an estimate or would make an estimate of the possible gain in revenue by the adoption of the second Garner amendment, which relates to the returns of so-called affiliated corporations.

Mr. McCoy told me that he could not make an estimate on that subject; that he had never made one; that he had told Mr. GARNER of Texas that he was in doubt whether the entire elimination of the consolidated-returns provisions in the law eventually would bring any increase in the collection of taxes, for the reason that these corporations, whether they be consolidated or affiliated, whether they file consolidated returns or returns as affiliated corporations, are able to so conduct their business among themselves and between themselves that where the control is in the same set of people, in the same individuals, the entire management of the business will benefit by offsetting losses in the making of tax returns. It is to be understood that these corporations have a common management; they are engaged in a common business. They may have affiliations in other parts of the country, but they do business with themselves, among themselves, and between themselves, and there is no reason why, with all the ingenuity and ability at their disposal, not only in their own ranks but from the ranks of attorneys and accountants and other experts, they may not so manage their affairs that eventually there will be no gain in revenue to the Federal Government.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. I understand, then, that the books may be so manipulated that they can really evade the law, but if you could catch them you really could put them in the penitentiary?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I do not think it is a question of manipulation. I think it is a question of conducting the business. One can well realize what are the possibilities, where there is a common control, where the same people manage two or more corporations engaged in the same business. Why should they not be able to so manage their business that they will not be compelled to pay an increased amount of taxes by reason of the fact that they are so organized? And in addition to that, if it does transpire that their present organization results in a larger payment of taxes, of course, they will reorganize, and instead of having fifty or sixty subordinate corporations they will organize into a larger corporation and refrain from this division of power and authority and management.

On the other hand, Mr. McCoy is convinced that the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] will result in the loss to the Treasury of approximately the amount of revenue which the gentleman has stated, which I understood to be about $24,000,000. Therefore we will find ourselves mistaken if we think the second Garner amendment will offset the first Garner amendment in the loss of revenue.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I want two minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then make it seven minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] was on his feet and had been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not intend to cut out the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If the gentleman from Iowa wants to stop this debate, he ought to stop debate on his side by Mr. SNELL and Mr. CHINDBLOM, which does not apply to this amendment. I am anxious to stop it. I want to pass this bill to-day. We are likely to have five roll calls if the gentleman from Iowa wants a separate roll call on each amendment. If we must have debate, let us apply it to these various provisions of the bill rather than to indulge in general debate.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I shall follow the gentleman's suggestion and move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I want two minutes in which to call attention to certain things, and I do not want to take the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] off his feet.

Mr. GIFFORD. Have I not been recognized, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts was recognized by the Chair. The Chair can not entertain a motion to close debate now, but will at some future time if the gentleman from Iowa desires to make it. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, some of the remarks recently made reflected rather upon me. The Associated Press carries a story "that one Republican, GIFFORD, of Massachusetts, voted with the Democrats" on the second proposition in reference to affiliated corporations. It may be a real honor or a doubtful honor, but as many other Republicans voted on the proposition as I did certainly they ought to share the honor, and I ought to correct that statement and suggest that the press take notice thereof so that many other Republican Members may receive proper mention. The Ways and Means Committee frame a tax bill before we come to Washington wherein policies or methods of taxing the people are involved. We want to be as loyal to the committee as possible, but must have the privilege of opinion. Certain members of the committee itself find it all right not to be regular. In the matter of affiliated corporations, I inquired if there is not some danger in framing a new law—section 118 being absolutely new—of juggling or washing sales, as later termed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIFFORD. I have not time to yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman does not mean that section 118 restricts corporations. The provision has been the law for years and years.

Mr. GIFFORD. We believe in the making of consolidated returns and returns by each corporation in its own entity. This matter was, belatedly, carefully discussed in the House yesterday, and the statements made fully justified our anxiety when it was stated that possibly under the present method they could wash sales, amply justifying our inquiry, could it be possible or really encouraged under the new method. But, Mr. Chairman, it does seem too bad in the matter of a policy or method taking people's money that after arriving in Washington we are not able to get upon our feet and plead for the things for which our constituents expect or our own opinions demand. The automobile people from their districts have voted to have the auto tax repealed and registered the wishes of their constituents. It is, of course, not true that I am the one Republican who joined with the Democrats. It takes more than one to effect such a result.

If one Republican can beat this tax bill, I must be of some importance in this House. [Applause.]

Mr. BLACK of Texas rose.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman desire time?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. In view of the fact that my colleague from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is going to speak on the same phase of the bill that I was going to discuss, I shall not ask for time.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. In five minutes the debate on this section will be closed.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, may I have the attention of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD]? It may be that pointing him out as the only Republican who is associated with the Democrats on this amendment is unfortunate. But that is not true, because we know that without the help of some dozen other Republicans the Democrats could never have put this amendment through.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] and others were chiding this House, and undertook to convince you that you were reducing the taxes more largely than they should be reduced. Mr. McCoy, the Actuary of the Treasury, in a statement that appears in the RECORD this morning, declines to make an estimate, but when I asked Mr. McCoy how much it would be he said, "I can not make an estimate."

Mr. MADDEN. He says he has not looked into it carefully.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I want to say that there is not a man in the House or in the Senate who does not take Mr. McCoy's say so as worth 100 per cent.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Why did not the gentleman take it on the bill?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. He said he can not make an estimate on this bill because he can not make an accurate one. As a final reduction in this bill, if you permit the small corporation amendment to remain in the bill and strike out section 118, you will not lose a cent of revenue in the long run.

Mr. HOCH. It could not apply to next year, but according to the terms of the bill it must apply to 1929.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. It commences on the 1st day of January, 1929, so that the taxes for 1929 would apply.

Mr. HOCH. You say, "1929," but not for the fiscal year 1929.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Yes. You talk about your wash sales. You can do it now. You have got your preference to make it either as a separate corporation or as a unit. Turn to section 141 and read it. Corporations at the present time have the right to make a separate return for affiliated corporations. If they wanted to make wash sales and get credit for capital losses they can do it now. You give these corporations a preference that you do not give other corporations. The principle of it is wrong, and that is the reason why I want to strike it out. Under the present law the United States Steel Corporation can make it as a unit or as 147 corporations, and if they wanted to wash their assets and get the benefit of capital loss they can do it now, if you have a Secretary of the Treasury who will permit it. But if you had the right kind of administration in the Treasury they could not do it now and can not do it in the future. You are giving the great corporations this morning $8,000,000 reduction. You give them that $8,000,000 reduction, but you do not want to give the little corporations anything. I want to do it, and that is the reason why I offered the amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE IV.—ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 601. BOARD OF TAX APPEALS—PROCEDURE

Sections 906 and 907 (a) and (b) of the revenue act of 1924, as amended, are further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 906. (a) The chairman may from time to time divide the board into divisions of one or more members, assign the members of the board thereto, and in case of a division of more than one member, designate the chief thereof. If a division, as a result of a vacancy or the absence or inability of a member assigned thereto to serve thereon, is composed of less than the number of members designated for the division, the chairman may assign other members to the division or direct the division to proceed with the transaction of business without awaiting any additional assignment of members thereto. A division shall hear and make a report to the board upon any proceeding instituted before the board and any motion thereon, assigned to such division by the chairman.

"(b) The report of the division, and any findings of fact made or opinion or memorandum opinion rendered by the division in connection therewith, shall become the report and the findings of fact and opinion of the board within 30 days after such report by the division, unless within such period the chairman has directed that such report shall be reviewed by the board. Any preliminary action by a division which does not form the basis for the entry of the final decision shall not be subject to review by the board except in accordance with such rules as the board may prescribe. The report of a division and any findings of fact made or opinion or memorandum opinion rendered by the division in connection therewith, shall not be a part of the record in any case in which the chairman directs that such report shall be reviewed by the board.

"(c) If a petition for a redetermination of a deficiency has been filed by the taxpayer, a decision of the board dismissing the proceeding shall be considered as its decision that the deficiency is the amount determined by the commissioner. An order specifying such amount shall be entered in the records of the board unless the board can not determine such amount from the record in the proceeding, or unless the dismissal is for lack of jurisdiction.

"(d) A decision of the board (except a decision dismissing a proceeding for lack of jurisdiction) shall be held to be rendered upon the date that an order specifying the amount of the deficiency is entered in the records of the board. If the board dismisses a proceeding for reasons other than lack of jurisdiction and is unable from the record to determine the amount of the deficiency determined by the commissioner, or if the board dismisses a proceeding for lack of jurisdiction, an order to that effect shall be entered in the records of the board, and the decision of the board shall be held to be rendered upon the date of such entry.

"(e) If the assessment or collection of any tax is barred by any statute of limitations, the decision of the board to that effect shall be considered as its decision that there is no deficiency in respect of such tax.

"(f) The findings of the board made in connection with any decision prior to the enactment of the revenue act of 1926 shall, notwithstanding the enactment of such act, continue to be prima facie evidence of the facts therein stated.

"SEC. 907. (a) Notice and opportunity to be heard upon any proceeding instituted before the board shall be given to the taxpayer and the commissioner, and a report upon the proceeding and a decision thereon shall be made as quickly as practicable. The decision shall be made by a member in accordance with the report of the board, and such decision so made shall, when entered, be the decision of the board. If an opportunity to be heard upon the proceeding is given before a division of the board, neither the taxpayer nor the commissioner shall be entitled to notice and opportunity to be heard before the board upon review, except upon a specific order of the chairman. Hearings before the board and its divisions shall be open to the public, and the testimony, and, if the board so requires, the argument shall be stenographically reported. The board is authorized to contract for the reporting of such hearings, and in such contract to fix the terms and conditions under which transcripts will be supplied by the contractor to the board and to other persons and agencies. The proceedings of the board and its divisions shall be conducted in accordance with such rules of practice and procedure (other than rules of evidence) as the board may prescribe and in accordance with the rules of evidence applicable in courts of equity of the District of Columbia. Such rules of practice and procedure shall have the same force and effect as Federal equity rules. The mailing by registered mail of any pleading, decision, order, notice, or process in respect of proceedings before the board shall be held sufficient service of such pleading, decision, order, notice, or process.

"(b) It shall be the duty of the board and of each division to include in its report upon any proceeding its findings of fact or opinion or memorandum opinion. The board shall report in writing all its findings of fact, opinions, and memorandum opinions. No decision of the board shall be modified or reversed because the board or any of its divisions has failed to consider evidence not adduced before the board or division."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MADDEN. I do it for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] a question or two.

I was very much interested in the statement made by the gentleman from Texas. I am always interested in everything he says. What he says he says well. One of the particular statements of his in which I am interested is the statement to the effect that this bill proposes to relieve the large corporations of $8,000,000, and, if left to the Republicans—he did not say this in so many words, but that was to be inferred—there would be nothing done for the small corporations.

Now, I want to know on what basis the gentleman made his statement that the large corporations were being relieved of $8,000,000 tax?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. In reply to the question of the gentleman from Illinois, I will say that in my judgment, of the $18,000,000 now collected through stamp taxes on the transfer of stock, more than 90 per cent of that tax is collected from the larger corporations doing business either on the stock exchange or on the curb in New York City.

Mr. MADDEN. Do the corporations pay the tax?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. On the transfer they do, when you issue new stock.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, no.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. How do you get it, then?

Mr. MADDEN. They get it from the man who buys the stock. But the corporation does not pay it.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Certainly not. The man who buys the stock buys it on the New York Stock Exchange.

Mr. MADDEN. He buys it at any place.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Ninety per cent of it is sold up there in New York.

Mr. MADDEN. What I am interested in is whether the corporation pays the tax or not.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The man who buys the stock pays it, or the man who transfers it.

Mr. MADDEN. As to relieving corporations, as the gentleman stated, I believe we are relieving the man who buys the stock, not the corporation. For instance, we are relieving the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Certainly, the man who buys it.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, where does the corporation come in?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Corporations are made up of men who own the stock. That is all a corporation is.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman is wrong in that statement. I do not think he intended to leave a wrong impression, but I am afraid he did, because he almost convinced me he was right. I generally follow him on many things because I believe in his veracity. I am sure the gentleman wanted to be truthful when he made this statement and I am sure he would not have made the statement if he did not think he was right.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I am; and I am as certain of it now as I was before the gentleman asked me his question. For instance, you relieve the small corporations of $24,000,000 under the amendment I offered Monday and in doing that you only relieve the stockholders from $24,000,000, because the corporation is nothing but a name. The stockholders are the ones who get the relief and the stockholders are the ones who pay the stamp tax on a transfer of stock.

Mr. MADDEN. I am afraid there is a difference between a small corporation and a large corporation. I do not think the same condition applies. I do not think you have to pay the tax on the exchange in a transfer of the stock of a small corporation. You can do that over the counter in your own office.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words as a pro forma motion only. I rise for the purpose of adding a word of explanation with reference to section 601 of the bill, which amends sections 906 and 907 of the revenue act of 1924 with reference to the Board of Tax Appeals.

The changes made in section 906 (a) and (b) for the most part merely set out what the law heretofore has generally been understood to be and as Congress intended it when the 1924 act was passed. It was not the intention of Congress that the board should be an investigating body or that it should consider any other evidence than that which had been submitted to it or one of its divisions. Its functions were judicial and such as were necessary to carry out such functions. Nor was it intended that a case heard by a division should be tried de novo before the whole board, but only that a review under the rules prescribed by the board should be had when the chairman ordered such review within the time prescribed.

More than all this, Congress did not intend that the board in the exercise of its judicial functions should be subject to mandamus from some court except in cases of such nature that any court might properly be the subject of a writ of mandamus from some higher court. In fact subdivisions (a) and (b) and other portions of these two sections from the 1924 act, which are amended in the bill, are merely declaratory of the law as it now stands and as Congress thinks it ought to be construed, without these amendments being made.

Members will ask why, then, should the amendments be made at all. In answer I would say the situation is as follows:

Certain decisions have been made by some of the Federal district courts or courts of appeal which construe the law differently or from which the inference might be drawn that it should be construed differently. I think that most of the courts, whenever the question has come up, have been inclined to construe the law as I have stated. But be this as it may, an appeal from these decisions which appear to me to wrongly construe the law can not be finally determined for several years, and on account of the difficulty in getting a review of a decision of the circuit court of appeals in the Supreme Court it might be many years before the 1924 act was finally construed in the Supreme Court. In the meantime those that have cases before the board do not know just exactly what rights they have and how they should proceed. If we leave the matter in this confused state litigation will be prolonged, difficulties will arise in the trial of these cases, and no one will be benefited thereby. If the Board of Tax Appeals is obliged to give a trial de novo to every case that is heard before a division, the board might as well be abolished.

In the interest of uniform decisions it is probably best that the most of the cases tried before a division be reviewed by the board and the decision of the division either approved or disapproved. But if all of them were to be given a new trial on demand the delay would be such that many years will elapse before decisions could be rendered. The Board of Tax Appeals was created to furnish a speedy opportunity for appeals from the decision of the commissioner to be heard before a body of trained experts. When about 500 appeals are taken to it in a month there must be some provision for speedy disposition thereof both in the interest of the taxpayer and the Government. The taxpayer wants a speedy disposition of the case, and the Government can not afford to have hundreds of millions of dollars in taxes tied up by appeals to the board.

In order to effectuate this intention and make it perfectly clear we have inserted in the bill a new provision to the effect that the rules and practice of procedure described by the board shall have the same force and effect as Federal equity rules. I suppose Members of the House understand that this practically means they shall have the force and effect of law.

The work of the board is of the highest importance. No other court in the world—for it is practically a court—tries cases that involve such an enormous amount of money, or indeed cases that at all compare in this respect. Cases that involve from $10,000,000 up are not uncommon. In order that Members may understand better how hard the board is working to dispose of the great task that has been put upon it I wish to invite the consideration of the following table taken from the report of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation:

	June 30, 1925	June 30, 1926	June 30, 1927	Grand total
Appeals filed	5,220	12,867	11,338	29,425
Cases disposed of by the board in formal decisions	616	947	1,080	2,643
Cases disposed of without rendering formal decisions	1,110	3,022	4,176	8,308
Total number of cases disposed of during each year	1,726	3,969	5,256	10,951
Total number still pending at close of each year (including cases reopened)	3,494	12,392	18,481

You will observe in the fiscal year of 1927 the board disposed of more than 5,000 appeals. I am informed that it is likely to do better this year.

It is not likely that in the future there will be so large a number of appeals. For reasons that are not necessary to explain here there was a flood of appeals last year. At present the board is disposing of cases about as fast as appeals are taken, and undoubtedly as the decisions on difficult matters are promulgated and as we get rid of the old excess-profits cases, where a large portion of the appeals come from, the appeals will greatly decrease and the board will have its work current.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 604. SUITS TO RESTRAIN ENFORCEMENT OF LIABILITY OF TRANSFEREE OR FIDUCIARY

No suit shall be maintained in any court for the purpose of restraining the assessment or collection of (1) the amount of the liability, at law or in equity, of a transferee of property of a taxpayer in respect of any income, war-profits, excess-profits, or estate tax, or (2) the amount of the liability of a fiduciary under section 3467 of the Revised Statutes in respect of any such tax.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Before the House votes to accept the amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole increasing this tax reduction by $60,000,000, I think we should pause and consider where the estimates of the surplus available for tax reduction purposes came from. Yesterday the gentleman from Illinois tried to show that the Treasury Department had been seriously in error in previous estimates. The gentleman did not, however, tell the House that such excesses as appeared in previous estimates came from unforeseen collections, such as from the sale of capital assets, disputed tax items, and nonrecurrent items that made up the total amount.

The present estimate of the Budget is a surplus of $252,000,000, and in that estimate is included $75,000,000 of nonrecurrent items. We must pause and consider the details of our available surplus. Here is the manner in which the Ways and Means Committee reached this agreement of $232,000,000 for tax reduction: We called before us the Undersecretary of the Treasury and a request was made by certain members that his statement be taken down stenographically. He explained to the committee, as shown in his testimony, where the estimate came from. Three of the leading experts on financial matters made the estimates independently. These experts were representatives of the department, the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and the Actuary, being Messrs. Ebersole, Nash, and McCoy. The Treasury arrived at its figures as the result of those independent estimates. The question was asked Mr. Mills whether the probable amount of appropriations by this Congress had been taken into consideration and his reply was that no extraordinary expenditures had been considered whatever. We face in this Congress appropriations of an extraordinary nature. Yesterday we received the estimate of a naval building program; we were informed that large expenditures are also possible for flood control, Muscle Shoals, Boulder Dam, the public buildings program, the payment of German war claims, and farm relief. I ask the Members of this House in sober judgment to consider where the money is coming from to pay those extraordinary appropriations unless we incur a deficit.

If we adopt the three pending amendments calling for a further reduction of $60,000,000, we have three courses before us: We can pass the bill with full knowledge of the likelihood of a deficit, or we can have no tax reduction at this session, or we can eliminate the items of reduction which have been added to those recommended by the Ways and Means Committee in submitting this bill.

I appeal to the good judgment of the Members of the majority who are responsible to the country for legislation and urge them not to be carried away by specious arguments and popular clamor for special items of reduction. The people of the country want tax reduction, but they do not want it to the extent of creating a deficit in the Treasury. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, much has been said in an attempt to explain the mistakes made by the Treasury Department in estimating receipts for fiscal years. There was a time in the history of this country, and it was not very long ago, when estimates made by the Treasury Department had a real value. I remember that the Treasury Department estimated the amount of money we would get out of the Payne-Aldrich bill during the first year of its operation and missed it less than $6,000. The Treasury Department estimated the amount of money we would get out of the Underwood bill during the first year of its operation and missed it less than $10,000. The Treasury Department estimated what the population of the United States would be under the census just before the last census and missed it less than 15,000. The Treasury Department estimated the population as it was indicated by the last census of the United States and missed it just a few thousand.

So we have kept on making accurate estimates in the Treasury Department until the present administration of the department, and their mistakes have all been most fortunate mistakes for that side of the House.

I remember that in 1922 when we had up the question of a soldiers' bonus bill and when they wanted something better than the graveyard insurance which we did give them, Secretary Mellon sent a letter down to the Ways and Means Committee and told us there would be a deficit for that year. I have forgotten the amount, but twenty or thirty or forty million dollars, and a deficit for the next year of $250,000,000, and stated that this was not the time to engage in new enterprises, to wit, a bill like the soldiers' bonus bill, which made a charge on the Treasury.

The result of this estimate—and it was grossly inaccurate, and I am using a moderate term, indeed, in describing it—the effect of that estimate was to defeat the soldiers' bonus bill, and the estimate showed a mistake of over $500,000,000, and we did not apply that tremendous surplus to the debts of the United States. An election was approaching and we gave it back to the taxpayers of this country, and it formed a most valuable political document for that side.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question at that point?

Mr. RAINEY. I will yield later if I have the time.

The Treasury Department so arranges these reductions that they come just before national elections. Under the present administration we always effect a reduction of taxes just before a national election. The Treasury has a method of carrying over a tremendous surplus for the benefit of the party now in power, and it makes a tremendous burden upon the business men of this country.

Why, talk about reducing taxes and expenditures!

In 1920, the last year of Democratic control, we reduced the expenditures of this Government $13,000,000,000, and if the Democrats had remained in control, we would have completed the reduction of taxes long before now, and we would have reduced these burdens upon the people of the country to the amount they ought to have been reduced.

I think it might be proper for me now to call attention to the fact that in 1923, when Secretary Mellon himself was before the Committee on Ways and Means, I asked him how the mistake occurred in the estimates of 1922 and in the estimates of 1923 which resulted in the mistake to which I have called attention for one year alone of at least $500,000,000. In fact, the mistake was much greater than that. He turned to one of his Assistant Secretaries to answer the question, and the answer made was that in 1922 and in 1923 "we had overestimated the expenditures and underestimated the receipts," and with this very clear statement the matter was gladly dropped by the Treasury Department. In other words, the explanation was to the effect that they made one mistake in grossly overestimating the expenditures and they made another mistake in grossly underestimating the receipts, and the result was the tremendous error to which I have called attention. The use of these flexible figures and this flexible and convenient method of estimating the expenditures and receipts resulted, first of all, in the defeat of the soldiers' bonus bill—and that is what the administration wanted. It also made it possible in the next year to rebate to taxpayers all over the country a very considerable part of the taxes they had already paid and which many of them had evidently "passed on," and this rebate occurred just before a national election and contributed much to the success of the administration in that election. The most powerful campaign argument a voter can receive is a check just before the election. It had the effect to an appreciable degree of corrupting the electorate of the United States. Later on I might also say that when we had Mr. McCoy, the Government actuary, on the stand, I asked him if he furnished the figures which led to the mistake in the estimated revenues of 1923. His reply was that he furnished figures, but his figures were not used. The figures used were the figures furnished by some employee of the revenue section of the Treasury Department, whose name to this day remains undisclosed, but they were the convenient figures upon which the Treasury Department relied, and they were the figures which led to this tremendous error. As I explained yesterday in my speech on the floor, these convenient errors have continued.

The surplus for 1926 was $300,000,000 more than they said it would be and this mistake is more than the amount of reduction they say we can now make. The inexcusable but convenient mistakes of the Treasury Department are disclosed always just after an election. This method of making reductions in the tax burdens of this country results in a piecemeal reduction, so that the administration can say before each election, "See how much we have reduced your taxes; give us another chance and we will reduce them some more"; but the time has come when this method of imposing a continuing burden upon the business of the country for purposes of securing partisan victories each two years at the polls is drawing to a close. Fortunately, we have operating here in Washington a great organization, the United States Chamber of Commerce. They function with economic experts, whose conclusions are much more reliable than the conclusions reached by the Treasury Department. The figures they have prepared through their committee of experts on taxation show that the revenues and the expenditures of this Government will sustain a tax reduction this year of $400,000,000. After the approaching national elections we will find that the estimates of the United States Chamber of Commerce are correct and the estimates of the Treasury Department we will then again find are grossly inaccurate. This will make it possible two years from now to promise another tax reduction, and that will be on the eve of another national election. We are escaping slowly, indeed, under this administration from the burden of war taxes, and the business men of the country are beginning to rebel, and they ought to rebel. The reason for the continuance in power of a party which makes these convenient mistakes is not now as apparent to the real business men of the country as they seemed to think it was two years ago.

The present prosperity of the country is not due to anything the party in power has done. It is due to the Federal reserve system, which inaugurated in this country a correct banking system. It is due to our system of income taxes, which the party in power have tried so hard to destroy. It is due to the constructive measures of the Wilson administration. The present administration has simply inherited the wealth-creating factors of the Wilson administration. The Federal reserve system, the estate tax, the income-tax system, the hours lessening the labor of the men who toil—all of these would have been impossible under a Republican administration, and all of these and many other propositions to which I might call attention have resulted in the favorable economic position we now occupy among the nations of the world. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. TEMPLE). The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 606. CLOSING AGREEMENTS

(a) Authorization: The commissioner (or any officer or employee of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, including the field service, authorized in writing by the commissioner) is authorized to enter into an agreement in writing with any person relating to the liability of such person (or of the person or estate for whom he acts) in respect of any internal-revenue tax for any taxable period ending prior to the date of the agreement.

(b) Finality of agreements: If such agreement is approved by the Secretary, within such time as may be stated in such agreement, or later agreed to, such agreement shall be final and conclusive, and, except upon a showing of fraud or malfeasance, or misrepresentation of a material fact—

(1) the case shall not be reopened as to the matters agreed upon or the agreement modified, by any officer, employee, or agent of the United States, and

(2) in any suit, action, or proceeding, such agreement, or any determination, assessment, collection, payment, abatement, refund, or credit made in accordance therewith, shall not be annulled, modified, set aside, or disregarded.

(c) Section 1106 (b) of the revenue act of 1926 is repealed, effective on the expiration of 30 days after the enactment of this act, but such repeal shall not affect any agreement made before such repeal takes effect.

Mr. ROY G. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, since the question of the reliability of the estimates of revenue and financial conditions of the Treasury has been questioned, the House ought to know how very wrong some estimates have been.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] has said that the Treasury Department, advising President Harding and causing the veto of the soldiers' bonus bill, was mistaken only $500,000,000 on its estimate of the condition of the Treasury.

The statement made by the President in his address based upon the Treasury estimates, to justify the veto of the soldiers' adjusted compensation or bonus bill, was followed later by an analysis made by a Member of this House, a former Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. It indicates that the Treasury Department in its estimate for a single year made a mistake of over $1,200,000,000. This is the reason I wanted to ask the gentleman from Illinois, in extending his remarks, to look into the matter more closely in the interests of accuracy.

The Clerk read, as follows:

SEC. 608. EFFECT OF EXPIRATION OF PERIOD OF LIMITATION AGAINST TAXPAYER

A refund of any portion of an internal-revenue tax (or any interest, penalty, additional amount, or addition to such tax) made after the enactment of this act, shall be considered erroneous—

(a) if made after the expiration of the period of limitation for filing claim therefor, unless within such period claim was filed; or

(b) in the case of a claim filed within the proper time and disallowed by the commissioner after the enactment of this act, if the refund was made after the expiration of the period of limitation for filing suit, unless within such period suit was begun by the taxpayer.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, this is a new clause in the bill, and something that I do not think received proper consideration from the Ways and Means Committee. I am hoping it may be possible for the chairman to accept this amendment. Under the law as it now stands, a test suit can be brought in a matter of a refund and the practice is such that a great many other claimants do not file suit but await the issue of the pending suit, which involves exactly the same question. If the decision settles the question then they are permitted, at the discretion of the Secretary, to come in and put in their claims for a refund.

Under this clause as it is drafted, none of the claimants can await the issue of the suit; they must all bring suit, although there may be 100 or 500 and the result will be a clogging of the docket with proceedings which might be avoided if this clause were not in the bill.

I have recently, within the last few hours, received a letter from John F. McCarron, attorney at law in this city, making an analysis of this clause in the bill, and which I send to the desk to be read. It presents the case in favor of the amendment better than I can hope to present it.

The Clerk read as follows:

DECEMBER 14, 1927.

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
United States House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. RAINEY: With further reference to my telephone conversation with you in regard to subparagraph (b) of section 608 of the new tax bill (H. R. 1), which is set forth on the top of page 212 of said bill, I have to say that in my judgment the entire paragraph of subsection (b) should be stricken from the bill. The subsection will certainly bring about a multiplicity of suits. Under the law at the present time when a claim is filed within the statutory time and is rejected by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, or if not acted upon by him within six months after the date of the filing of the claim, suit may be commenced within two years from such date or from the date of the rejection of the claim. Under subsection (b) if a test suit is pending in court and there are 500 other cases involving the same point it will be necessary to file a suit in each of said cases in order to protect the rights of the taxpayer. This ought not to be, and it will mean greatly increased work for the Department of Justice and the general counsel's office of the Bureau of Internal Revenue as well as added expense to the taxpayer. It is bound to bring about a great congestion of the dockets in the courts and can serve no useful purpose. The present practice of reopening a refund claim filed within the statutory time where the erroneous ruling is overturned by a court decision or by a subsequent ruling of the commissioner is very satisfactory. The Government does not lose anything, because if it is an erroneous ruling it should be corrected, and if the ruling is correct there will be no need to reopen the refund claim. Furthermore, the small taxpayer who is unable to afford the expense of filing suit in court will be denied relief in the event of a favorable court decision in a test case involving the same situation as in his claim.

I call your attention to this paragraph in the hope that something may be done toward eliminating it from the bill, as it is bound to work an injustice to a large number of taxpayers, causing them added expenses, and it is also bound to cause a large expenditure by the Government in defending such suits.

Very truly yours,

JOHN F. MCCARRON.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think if we allow the lawyers of Washington to dictate the provisions of this bill we will have a long one and an unjust one. This matter was fully considered by the Ways and Means Committee. The provision is fair, but quite technical, and I do not need to go into it at this time. The matter presented by the gentleman from Illinois was passed upon by every member of the committee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Why should every individual be compelled to bring a suit on precisely the same question that is before the court?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Why does the gentleman from Tennessee assume anything of that kind? That is simply a statement in the letter. This simply means that individuals can not sit back and wait until after the limitation expires and come in at a later date.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There might be a provision drawn to have them file some claim. I am talking about the filing of the suits. It looks to me as if it could be framed so that it would not require the institution of a lawsuit. It may be right to require them to make some claim, but this language requires them to bring a suit.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Their claims have already been filed and rejected; why should not they bring suit?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. You are here making permanent law, covering perhaps a large class of cases. I can see the desirability of there being some record of the claim being made in the department. What strikes me is that in this language you are requiring every individual to institute a lawsuit—they can not combine to bring a test case. I am addressing myself to the matter not because of what was said in the letter but from common reasons.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Why should not the right of the taxpayer be reserved, so that he can get the benefit of the court's decision if he has filed a claim or protest? Here is a complete innovation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I do not think so.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Yes; heretofore if you filed a claim, even though it was overruled by the commissioner, it gave you a standing, so that if the court decision came along in a test case which sustained the contention you made the amount of the additional tax that you had paid would be refunded to you. This is a complete reversal of the present practice as I understand, a complete innovation in practice. I can see no reason why they should not be allowed to do so.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. If the gentleman from New York will permit, here is the result in practical work: If the test case is brought and decided against the Government—and there are numerous cases where suits have not been brought and are therefore barred—that will naturally compel an appeal to Congress to consider the equities of this plan, and we will be confronted with that question.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. It seems to me that the present practice is simpler, when your rights are protected by having filed your claim, rather than in all these cases where there will be thousands of taxpayers involved, going to the United States court in all the various districts with suits. In order to protect his rights everyone would have to bring suit and, I assume, file a complaint.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think the gentleman from New York is eminently correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We might just as well in a great many cases do away with the statute of limitations, if we are going to strike out this provision. I do not know what the statute of limitations is for if it is not to provide that people must present their claims, and if not respected commence suit. It would mean that somebody might put in a claim and hold it there for 5 or 10 years or a longer time and then come in, notwithstanding the statute of limitations, and get his refund. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WAINWRIGHT] is aware that in State taxes no such practice is invoked or used. There is not a State in the Union that permits anything of that kind, and there is no reason why it should be done with reference to Federal taxes in my judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAINEY) there were—ayes 70, noes 121.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 611. COLLECTIONS STAYED BY CLAIM IN ABATEMENT

If any internal-revenue tax (or any interest, penalty, additional amount, or addition to such tax) was, within the period of limitation properly applicable thereto, assessed prior to June 2, 1924, and if a claim in abatement was filed, with or without bond, and if the collection of any part thereof was stayed, then—

(a) the payment of such part (made before or within one year after the enactment of this act) shall not be considered as an overpayment under the provisions of section 607, relating to payments made after the expiration of the period of limitation on assessment and collection; and

(b) a distraint or proceeding in court for the collection of such part may be begun within one year after the enactment of this act.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 611. I think I understand what this section means, and if I do understand it correctly, it is a question that has two sides to it and I am anxious to find out just which is the right side. As I understand it, where these claims in abatement have been filed they were filed because it was a practice which grew up in the department. It was permitted.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It was permitted for quite a while.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And it had not the express sanction of law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is correct.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It was a practice. Eventually, however, the courts in passing upon some cases held that the statute of limitations applied.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Treasury Department was of the opinion that as long as this claim of abatement had been filed and the case was still pending the statute of limitations did not apply as against the Government in proceeding by distraint. In that connection, if the gentleman will permit, I would like to make a statement. There is no amendment that has been offered here that would reduce the revenues of the Government so much as the amendment which the gentleman offered, though he may have offered it just as a pro forma amendment.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What I want to know is, how it is going to affect the revenues and what effect it is having on the statute of limitations. I said in the beginning, if the gentleman heard me, that I thought it was a two-sided question and I am anxious now to find out just the right side. I am asking for information.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It would cost the Government somewhere from $100,000,000 to $150,000,000, and the provision that is inserted here does not require anybody to pay any taxes which he does not justly owe. The only persons required to pay taxes are those that the courts hold and must hold liable for the taxes, while on account of this unexpected decision by the Supreme Court, because the most of us did not expect it—at least I did not—the statute of limitations has now run, and it has run by reason of the taxpayer getting an extension on his own request through this claim of abatement—not on account of any delay by the Government.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Perhaps it was on account of a suggestion by the Treasury Department.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No. They were given this privilege of filing a claim in abatement, both sides at the time thinking that the case would still be kept open, and that if it was found that the taxpayer was really liable to pay the taxes, even after the statute of limitations had expired by a number of years, the levy or distraint might still be made.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will this apply as far back as 1917, 1918, 1919, 1920?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, yes. All it does apply to are old taxes under the excess-profits tax, at a time when people were making enormous sums, in some cases unsconscionable profits; and by reason of filing these claims in abatement the whole case was carried along, almost everyone thinking that the statute of limitations was being tolled by this agreement; but the Supreme Court held otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. BULWINKLE. I just want to ask the gentleman this question. We all want these matters settled. The taxpayers want them settled. The time has about come when a citizen of the United States, a taxpayer, should be free from having some one look into his office and say that he wants to go through his books. I know of cases where the books on the same account have been examined as many as eight times.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We are trying to correct that.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Will this open up the question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This will not enable anybody to look over the books. This is to take things exactly as they are and stop the Government from refunding $100,000,000 to people who made enormous profits, people who got extensions that everybody supposed would toll or extend the statute of limitations.

Mr. BULWINKLE. That is the only thing we want to find, because we want some time to have these things settled. We do not want our constituents bothered or deviled all the time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, if I may have a moment. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Iowa as to the effect upon the Treasury, I do not feel like taking the responsibility of insisting upon this provision going out of the bill. My attention was directed to it by reason of the fact that it was evidently a move to repeal a decision of the court, and except in very rare instances I do not much believe in repealing a decision of the courts of the country. But it is a very important matter, and the facts and the figures and its effect upon the Treasury we are not in possession of except as given to us by the gentleman from Iowa. I accept his statement, and therefore shall not take the responsibility of pressing the amendment and will withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 616. COMPROMISES—CONCEALMENT OF ASSETS

Any person who, in connection with any compromise under section 3229 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, or offer of such compromise, or in connection with any closing agreement under section 606 of this act, or offer to enter into any such agreement, willfully (1) conceals from any officer or employee of the United States any property belonging to the estate of a taxpayer or other person liable in respect of the tax, or (2) receives, destroys, mutilates, or falsifies any book, document, or record, or makes under oath any false statement, relating to the estate or financial condition of the taxpayer or other person liable in respect of the tax, shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. McSWAIN offers the following amendment: At page 218, end of line 25, strike out period, insert semicolon, and the following proviso: "Provided, That such tax or penalty shall not be collected under threat of criminal prosecution, and any claim or charge that the taxpayer has committed a crime shall not be employed to aid in collecting any tax or penalty, and no criminal charge, action, case, or indictment shall be ended on condition that a certain sum of money be paid as tax or penalty, but all such criminal actions shall proceed in the regular way to final judgment in open court."

Mr. McSWAIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, gentlewomen, and gentlemen, the purpose of that amendment is not to defeat one copper cent of lawful and proper revenue to which the United States Government is legally entitled. The purpose is simply to separate the matter of crime from the matter of a civil tax liability. The United States Government does not need to collect tax money in the form of what is virtually blackmail, nor should the United States Government be engaged as a matter of practice in aid of collecting taxes in the custom of compounding a crime and agreeing that it will not prosecute a case that it claims by an officer is a crime, if the taxpayer will pay so many dollars as penalty.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McSWAIN. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not believe I understand what the gentleman is getting at. This is a criminal section. A case has to be proved beyond all liability of doubt or otherwise the man could not be found guilty. The man is entitled to a jury and entitled to have this evidence showing that beyond all reasonable doubt he is guilty. To what is the gentleman objecting?

Mr. McSWAIN. Yesterday I tried to explain the purpose of this amendment, and I have written it pretty carefully. It is this, if the gentleman will permit me. An officer representing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue should not be permitted to go to a taxpayer and say, "Here, if you do not pay 50 per cent penalty, or 10 per cent penalty of the tax liability, we will prosecute you in the courts criminally; but if you pay, as one who has made a futile effort to conceal your income and thereby defraud your Government of a part of the revenue, we will accept it and not prosecute you." You need not say that is not being done. I not only know of one flagrant case where it was done, but I submit I have information of numbers and numbers of cases where good citizens have been virtually blackmailed out of their money by the threat of criminal prosecution.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think anybody could blackmail me in that kind of a way.

Mr. McSWAIN. Did the gentleman hear what I said yesterday?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; but this is a criminal provision here. What the gentleman proposes to put on would emasculate this provision.

Mr. McSWAIN. The gentleman has not heard the amendment read. This is a qualification upon the Government through its district attorney in prosecuting these criminal propositions and it is to this effect, that when you make a charge criminally you have got to go to judgment in the case in open court; that the Government by district attorney and the officer representing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue can not go behind closed doors in a little office somewhere and whisper around and say, "Oh, well, if you will pay $30,000 penalty we will let you out."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McSWAIN. Just a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. McSWAIN. The purpose is this, if a man has committed a crime, seeking to defraud his Government of revenue, he ought to be tried to judgment, and if he is innocent, rather than be blackmailed and the press taking up the matter of his being under charges for defrauding the Government, let the Government not start, but if it starts it must go to judgment in open court. So that, gentlemen, the purpose is this, to make it impossible for the criminal machinery of the Government to be used as an engine of collection of civil liabilities, because the Government is protected in its lawful tax money; there is the property of the taxpayer to secure the Government its money. The Government makes its levy upon his property, and it is a lien above any other lien and prior to purchase money, mortgage, or otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like a division on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. A division is asked for. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 40, noes 92.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Hawaii is recognized.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, section 701, paragraph 9, as you will notice, includes the Territory of Hawaii. Two thousand one hundred-odd miles out in the Pacific lie the Hawaiian Islands, a Territory of the United States and an integral part of this Union. We have a population down there of three hundred and thirty thousand and odd people. We pay income and internal-revenue taxes. In the year 1921 we paid more than 17 States of this Union. In 1922 we paid more than 19 States of this Union, and in the last year we paid more than 13 States. We have more population than 3 of the States. We are painfully aware of the fact that we are still a Territory and have no vote in this House. We have to rely on the sympathy of this House.

And in that connection I wish to call your attention to one of the paragraphs that have been passed over. That paragraph refers to teachers in Alaska and Hawaii. They are exempted from the income tax, and we, through our legislature in the Territory at its last session, asked that not the teachers alone should be exempted but that the officers and employees of the Territory of Hawaii should be exempted, in order that there might be a parity between the States and the Territory and that they might be relieved of paying an income tax on the salary paid to them by the Territory.

Now, it has been said that the people of the District of Columbia would perhaps be disturbed by such a situation. May I call your attention to the fact that in the paragraph you have adopted yourselves you use this wording:

This section shall not exempt compensation paid directly or indirectly by the Government of the United States.

The officials, officers, and employees of the District of Columbia are in receipt of at least $9,000,000 from the Federal Government for the support of the administration of the District, whereas the Territory of Hawaii is not in receipt of any such contribution.

I thank you for your attention. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 706. TAXABILITY OF TRUSTS AS CORPORATIONS—RETROACTIVE

If a taxpayer filed a return as a trust for any taxable year prior to the taxable year 1925 such taxpayer shall be taxable as a trust for such year and not as a corporation, if such taxpayer was considered to be taxable as a trust and not as a corporation either (1) under the regulations in force at the time the return was made or at the time of the termination of its existence, or (2) under any ruling of the commissioner or any duly authorized officer of the Bureau of Internal Revenue applicable to any of such years, and interpretative of any provision of the revenue act of 1918, 1921, or 1924, which had not been reversed or revoked prior to the time the return was made, or under any such ruling made after the return was filed which had not been reversed or revoked prior to the time of the termination of the taxpayer's existence.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. OLDFIELD: On page 226, after line 17, insert the following new section:

SEC. 707. REORGANIZATION OF INTERNAL-REVENUE FIELD SERVICE

(a) The President is authorized to reorganize the field service engaged in the administration of the internal revenue laws, in such manner as he determines necessary for the efficient administration of the internal revenue laws and in order that there will be at least one collection district in each State. In making such reorganization the President is authorized to abolish, consolidate, or create internal-revenue districts and offices, to assign any officer or employee, if he determines him qualified, to any office created or consolidated, and to do such other things as in his judgment may be necessary to effect such reorganization.

(b) Collectors of internal revenue and all officers and employees in the field service shall, after the date of the enactment of this act, be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury in accordance with the civil service laws and regulations.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that amendment is not germane to any provision of the bill or to the bill itself, and that in effect it will be, as construed by the courts, a repeal of certain laws that are not mentioned either directly or indirectly in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has indicated the ground of his point of order. Does the gentleman from Arkansas desire to be heard?

Mr. CRISP. I would like to submit a few observations on the point of order if the Chair is in doubt. I do not care to address the Chair if his mind is made up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, parliamentary law, like all law, is supposed to be common sense.

What is the purpose of the bill? It is to raise revenue. The Chair and Members of the House are of necessity familiar with the various provisions of the bill, because the bill has been read through. It is apparent that the bill deals with all phases of the collection of internal revenue. It deals with a Tax Board of Appeals. It changes the classified service as to the personnel of the department by allowing them to appoint a great number of employees at salaries in excess of what the classification law authorizes. It deals with every phase of collecting our internal revenue.

What does this amendment do? It simply authorizes the President and the Secretary of the Treasury to reorganize the internal-revenue force. For what? For the purpose of collecting over $2,000,000,000 of revenue that is to be produced under this bill.

I could talk on further, but it is impossible, to my mind, to have an amendment that is more germane to a revenue bill than the personnel and machinery for the collection of that revenue.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Is there anything in the bill at all that deals with the power of the Executive? That can be answered yes or no.

Mr. CRISP. No; it can not. There is nothing in the bill which especially deals with the power of the President, but this proposition authorizes the President, who is the head of Government—and, of course, his action will be based on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury—to reorganize his personnel for the collection of this revenue; and the amendment goes on to say that the appointees, when this reorganization is effected, shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the official of the Government whose duty it is to look after the collection of this revenue. That is the effect of the amendment. I can add nothing more, but I could repeat. As I said at the beginning, parliamentary law is common sense, and it certainly will be straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel to say that this amendment is not germane to this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I regret to differ from my esteemed friend, Mr. CRISP, who is an authority on parliamentary law and who has had long parliamentary experience, but I think he has worked himself into believing that this proposition is germane rather than from anything he has stated in his argument.

As has already been stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG], the bill does not refer to the power of the President. This proposed amendment actually repeals laws that are not mentioned directly or indirectly in the bill.

Mr. CRISP. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. Are there not many provisions in this bill that repeal existing law?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But no point of order has been made against them, so far as that is concerned. Besides, they were within the jurisdiction of the committee.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. If the theory is that a point of order could be made against a bill of this character because it repealed existing law, then we could not bring in a bill which contained any provision repealing existing law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the theory is that every time you refer to the revenue law in the bill that is now before the House you open up the whole revenue law for new amendments, then you could not get anywhere with the particular bill under consideration.

Mr. CRISP. I will answer the gentleman's question by saying there are precedents in this House that where you bring in a bill dealing with a general subject matter, like a general tax revenue act, and amend sundry and divers provisions of it that then the whole act is open for amendment; that if the bill is dealing with one particular section or schedule you can not affect the other, but that when you have a blanket bill dealing with the entire matter germane amendments are in order.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is not the universal rule by a great deal. I do not think I need to refer to the decisions. The Chair has probably looked up this matter and gone over them, so that it would be a waste of time to read from the decisions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear from the gentleman.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This amendment confers special power on the President with reference to the Internal Revenue Bureau. As to a bill amending a general law on a specific point, it was held that an amendment relating to the terms of the law rather than to the bill under consideration was not germane. That was held by Speaker Clark and Speaker Reed. This amendment relates to the terms of a certain law which now do not authorize the President to make this change and it does not relate to anything that is in the bill. In fact, it does not relate to the terms of the bill at all. It comes clearly under those two decisions made by Speaker Clark and by Speaker Reed.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Suppose the committee in its wisdom had seen fit to bring this in as an integral part of this bill, would it have been in order?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the committee can report anything that comes within its jurisdiction.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then, does the gentleman wish to bring the House to a situation where the Committee on Ways and Means will have more power than the House itself?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The committee has more power than the House itself under its rules in a great many instances, I will say to the gentleman. I should not say more power but more jurisdiction.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I never heard of the Committee on Ways and Means having more power than the Committee of the Whole. I thought the Committee of the Whole had as much power as any other committee of the House. I never heard it suggested before that an agent of the House had greater power than the House itself.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. According to that, if the Committee on the Judiciary brought in a bill, then the Committee of the Whole would have the power to put on anything that related to the revenue.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. It is very true that the Committee on Ways and Means has rather broad jurisdiction. It can bring in one bill under one part of that jurisdiction and another bill under another part of its jurisdiction—a dozen different bills that may not be germane to each other at all. So in this case the committee has brought in a bill on one subject and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD] attempts to hitch on a matter which might be germane to some other bill that this committee might have brought in. Because this committee has jurisdiction over the matter proposed in the amendment is not a good reason why it should be germane to this bill or to any bill the committee might report.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. CRISP. My friend, if he reads the amendment, will be forced to the conclusion it is an amendment for a more efficient and economical collection of the revenue which is to be raised by this bill, the title of which is to raise revenue. Therefore, how can my friend urge that an amendment which provides for the personnel to do this is not germane.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Suppose they should bring in an amendment of the tariff act over which we have jurisdiction, would the gentleman contend such an amendment would be germane?

Mr. CRISP. But this is not a tariff bill and this amendment seeks in no wise to deal with the tariff. The amendment simply seeks to give your own President and your own Secretary of the Treasury the right to reorganize his personnel to collect the duties provided for in this bill.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, if I understand what this bill does, it attempts to equalize and reduce taxes. It says nothing about the appointment of collectors.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TILSON. Now the gentleman wishes to bring in as an amendment a provision regarding the President's power to appoint personnel.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TILSON. Yes.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Why, under the very next section, section 707—the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to fix the compensation, without regard to the provisions of the classification act of 1923, of the following officers and employees of the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

Mr. TILSON. It says nothing whatever about appointments.

Mr. OLDFIELD. But he can fix the salaries and disregard the civil service act.

Mr. TILSON. But where does it say anything about appointments or increasing the power of the President to make appointments?

Mr. OLDFIELD. In the same section.

Mr. CRISP. May I correct my friend as to the title of the bill:

To reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Now, listen to line 24, page 226:

In accordance with the civil service laws: Twenty-three assistants to the general counsel at a compensation not in excess of $7,500 a year each; 26 administrative or technical employees at a compensation not in excess of $7,500 a year each; and 50 administrative or technical employees at a compensation not in excess of $6,000 a year each.

Mr. TILSON. Does the gentleman wish to change their salaries? If so such an amendment would be germane to the section.

Mr. OLDFIELD. But under this provision he can get these employees from any place and does not have to select them from the employees of the Treasury Department.

Mr. TILSON. But where does it say anything about appointing these men?

Mr. OLDFIELD. That language gives him such authority because he does not have to go to the Treasury Department to get the men, but can appoint men not in the Government service if he thinks they are the men that ought to be appointed. There is no question about it.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair is ready to rule, I do not care to take any further time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be pleased to hear the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BEGG. I simply want to make the observation that the whole purpose of the bill, the wording of it from beginning to end, is dealing with the tax-collecting machinery as to the quantity of taxes and the salary of the employees under the established machinery. There is not a line or a word in the whole bill from first to last that either seeks to add to or substract from the power which the Chief Executive now has. The amendment, in its very first line, seeks to confer additional power on the Chief Executive or else the amendment is meaningless. It has to be one or the other. It says the President is authorized by the adoption of this amendment which presupposes that without the amendment he has not such power. Going on that assumption, there is no question in my mind at all about the lack of germaneness of the amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. NEWTON). The Chair is ready to rule.

The question is not without difficulty, as is true of a great many questions pertaining to germaneness; but upon reading the amendment it seems very clear to the Chair that it proposes to inject into the consideration of the bill a foreign subject matter.

The amendment provides:

The President is authorized to reorganize the field service * * * in such manner as he determines necessary * * * and in order that there will be at least one collection district in each State.

Then the amendment goes on to say—

In making such reorganization the President is authorized to abolish, consolidate, or create internal revenue districts and offices—

And then to assign officers and employees in that connection. Then the next subdivision provides—

Collectors of internal revenue and all officers and employees in the field service shall, after the date of the enactment of this act, be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, in accordance with the civil service laws and regulations.

The Chair is very clearly of the opinion, from the sweeping character of the amendment which is proposed, that this is attempting to confer upon the Executive tremendous powers for purposes of reorganization, affecting not only the powers of the Executive but also going into the question of their status as civil-service employees, they not now being civil-service employees or officers.

The question now comes whether or not with this sweeping language in the amendment, under the precedents, it is germane. Fortunately for the Chair, he was given a copy of the amendment by the gentleman from Georgia and has had an opportunity to go over the precedents quite carefully. The Chair has also gone into the history of the legislation pertaining to revenue agents, their powers and duties. This dates back to the Revised Statutes of 1878, section 3152. Then further on in the history of the development of legislation pertaining to revenue agents the Chair finds at 37 Statutes at Large, page 434, an appropriation bill extensively enlarging and changing the powers of revenue agents; and then, of course, the various laws pertaining thereto are found in the code compilation which was adopted in the preceding Congress.

No reference is made in the amendment itself to a repeal of any of these specific provisions, but in effect and in substance it does repeal those provisions by changing them and enlarging them, and the Chair is unable to find any change in the bill which is now before the committee to which a change in the laws to which the Chair has just referred would be germane; and after going over the various precedents, and going over them carefully, and also bearing in mind an experience which the present occupant of the chair had when he first entered this Chamber, when he offered an amendment in reference to a measure for the control of prices of food, clothing material, and so on, and was of the opinion that when he offered an amendment to include raw cotton that that was clearly germane. Much to his surprise it was ruled not germane by the Chair, and the House accepted the decision without question.

So after going into the matter thoroughly, the Chair is of the opinion that in line with the general policy of the House to be strict on this question of germaneness the point of order must be sustained.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I ask the indulgence of the committee during this five minutes to discuss the merits of the proposed amendment of Mr. OLDFIELD. In the first place, while I acquiesce in the decision of the Chair and know that the Chair is sincere, I desire to say this. Of course, the amendment was legislation, but I thought it was germane.

Now, here is an amendment that does not add to your tax reduction; it makes no drain on the Treasury, but, on the contrary, according to the Treasury, it would save to the Treasury $2,000,000 and would effect a more efficient economy in the administration of the revenue laws and would be of great benefit and saving to the American citizens who are taxpayers.

What are the conditions to-day? You have 64 internal-revenue collectors. You have 36 revenue field agents. There is a duplication of work. The taxpayer goes to the collector of his State to inquire about his taxes. He is sent by the revenue agent's office somewhere else—frequently in another State. The department at Washington desires information as to a taxpayer and writes to the collector of the internal revenue of the State. He gets his information by writing the revenue field agent and then sends the information to Washington. There is a duplication. Many unnecessary letters are written and useless time consumed.

Here is another illustration. The States of Idaho, Montana, and Utah each have an internal-revenue collector. There is one revenue field agent for the three States with an office in Salt Lake City. An Idaho taxpayer files his return with the collector in Boise and an additional assessment is levied against him in Washington and is sent to the collector in Boise. If any question arises as to the tax, he—the taxpayer—must go to the Salt Lake City office to the revenue agent to have it adjusted. It simply entails unnecessary work, labor, and duplication upon the taxpayer and the Government.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRISP. I will.

Mr. BEGG. If the supposed abolition of some of these officers is going to make such a wonderful reduction, why not abolish all of the State revenue officers and let the business be done in Washington? I do not believe the Government in its tax laws should go to the point of disadvantage to the taxpayer. In other words, I believe the Government owes the service to the taxpayer and should bring the point of collection as nearly to the individual's place of business as it is possible to bring it.

Mr. OLDFIELD. They can not do that under the law as it is now.

Mr. CRISP. I am going to agree with the gentleman, and the effect of this amendment will do it. In the illustration just given by me the taxpayer in Idaho could go to the collector in Idaho to have his tax adjusted and handled and would not have to go to the revenue agent in Salt Lake City.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRISP. Now, gentlemen, I am not going to discuss anything that took place in the Ways and Means Committee in executive session. I am going to discuss things that were given to the public. When we began the executive session on this bill it was agreed that the chairman was to give out to the press such matters as he thought advisable. What was given out to the press? That the Committee on Ways and Means had adopted an amendment for the consolidation of these offices. Look at the bill to-day and that provision is eliminated. There is no use in stating what took place in the committee; your own common sense will tell you that the action of the committee on this amendment was reconsidered. Why? There can be only one answer—they were afraid that some good Republican office-holder might lose his job in the consolidation.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. CRISP. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman remembers that a while ago there was an effort made through the work of a joint committee to reorganize the departments of the Government and that the bill was introduced to carry out the committee's recommendations. The gentleman also remembers that following the failure of the reorganization bill, which Mr. MAPES introduced, it was understood that in administration circles there was a strong desire that the President should be authorized to effect reorganization by changes which he might think proper to make in any department to do away with duplications, promote efficiency, and so forth.

If the attitude of the administration was correctly represented in the newspapers, and I think it was, this proposition offered by the gentleman is certainly in line with the policy which the administration favored.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, when I was interrupted by my friend I had just come to the proposition that the advisory tax committee recommended this provision. Mr. Nash, the deputy collector of internal revenue before the Ways and Means Committee, in the presence of the very able and delightful Undersecretary of the Treasury, Mr. Mills, advocated this consolidation as in the interest of the taxpayers, as in the interest of the efficient administration and collection of internal revenue, and he stated that if it was put into effect, of course the department would retain in its service the most efficient of its employees. That it would save the Government $2,000,000 and be a convenience and great monetary saving to the taxpayers.

I do not want to burden the House. The Secretary of the Treasury is a very able man, a man for whom I have the highest respect. In none of his private affairs, in none of his business organizations would he permit these duplications. If he had the power, I do not think that he would permit this constant annoyance of the taxpayer, shuffling him from one Government office to another. Any sane business organization would put into effect this economical provision. There is only one reason why you gentlemen do not do it. It saves $2,000,000 a year, but you fear that some good Republican might lose a job.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. This amendment permits the President to exercise his discretion?

Mr. CRISP. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] for whom I have not only the highest respect, but who is one of the most useful legislators in the House, I think has unwittingly conveyed a wrong impression with reference to this situation. As I say, I think the gentleman from Georgia is one of the most useful legislators we have in the House, and I have for him a personal respect. I think a warm personal feeling exists on the part of both of us.

Mr. CRISP. I will say that it is reciprocated.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. This amendment was never really properly considered by the committee and the whole subject was not properly considered by the committee. That is the reason the committee reconsidered its decision. This amendment in my judgment would work a great deal of harm. It would take out the public service some of its most efficient and useful servants, viz, the general field agents whom the public invariably consults with reference to these matters, and who I am sure are more familiar with the revenue law than anyone else. It is not because I wish to oppose any efficiency in the department, but I want this subject to be further considered, and I say now to the House that I expect as soon as there is opportunity for the Ways and Means Committee to consider it to offer a bill upon this subject which will not, however, coincide with the terms of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD]. I hope it will be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and that that committee will consider it.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. But this amendment is not mandatory. This amendment simply authorizes the President to do certain things in his discretion. He could leave it just as it is or consolidate it. Are you not willing to trust your President?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman think that we would direct the President what to do?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. This amendment does not direct him to do anything. It merely authorizes him to do it, and you are afraid to trust your President.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is the term that we always use when we wish him to do something, and that is the reason I object to it.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Does not the gentleman know that the Treasury and the administration are for it?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No. The Treasury is not in favor of it.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 708. BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE—DETAILS TO WASHINGTON

The commissioner may order any officer or employee of the Internal Revenue Service engaged in field work to duty with the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia, for such periods as the Secretary may prescribe, and to any designated post of duty outside the District of Columbia upon the completion of such duty.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 707, paragraph A.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to make a point of order against my friend, but I think he has slept on his rights, because we have read section 707.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, I was following with the bill, but somebody tore out the last two pages.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman from Illinois was on his feet.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Oh, no; they had read section 708. I merely want to warn my friend, when he is in charge of one of the appropriation bills and the Clerk is reading very fast and somebody overlooks a bet, not to be too technical.

Mr. MADDEN. I never yet objected to a man having all his rights.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I shall not make the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out paragraph (a) of section 707, on page 226 of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman that that section has been passed.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, they read a word or two on the other one before I could get the eye of the Chair. I was on my feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to return to section 707.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not admit that we have gone by it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 707. BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE—PERSONNEL

(a) The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to fix the compensation, without regard to the provisions of the classification act of 1923, of the following officers and employees of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, appointed (whether before or after the enactment of this act) in accordance with the civil service laws: Twenty-three assistants to the general counsel at a compensation not in excess of $7,500 a year each; 26 administrative or technical employees at a compensation not in excess of $7,500 a year each; and 50 administrative or technical employees at a compensation not in excess of $6,000 a year each.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, a year or two ago, at the earnest solicitation of everybody employed by the Government, we enacted what is known as the classification law, under which a classification board was authorized to fix the compensation of all of the employees of the Government.

Here we have a proposal from the Ways and Means Committee in a revenue bill to take 100 men or women, as the case may be, out from the classified act and to increase their compensation beyond that paid to anybody doing like work anywhere else in the Government. Now, why this preferential class? Why shall we create an aristocracy in the Treasury Department, and particularly in the Revenue Service of the Treasury Department? In days gone by these men employed in this section in the Treasury Department have been especially favored. We have had their compensation fixed at higher rates than the compensation of anybody else in the Government service. Their work is no more important than the work of other people.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I will undertake to give the gentleman some reason. He has asked the question and is entitled to an answer.

Mr. MADDEN. I would be glad to do so. I may have to ask some more time afterwards.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman can get more time. Here is the situation as I understand it in the Treasury Department. I have never been in favor of increasing salaries; the gentleman knows that. I have stood on the floor of the House and fought them, but we have in the Treasury Department a condition now that is absolutely indefensible, and it can not be attributed to anything else except inefficiency, say what you please. You can not have 19,000 cases unsettled at the present time with the taxpayers and say the Treasury Department is functioning. Now, we made inquiry in every instance, "Why is it, Mr. Secretary of the Treasury, you can not bring about a more efficient service in the Government?" and the reply was this: "In the first place, you do not give me authority to make closing agreements." We give it in this bill. It is the most far-reaching section of this bill.

Mr. MADDEN. I think that is an answer to the whole business.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Then he said this: "If you will give me salaries so I can keep my men, we can turn off 25 per cent more work than we are now doing." I said, "How can you do it?" He said, "The turnover in the Treasury Department in the last three years has been 70 per cent, because men have gone in and gone out because of getting better salaries." And so it was my thought that if you are going to collect two and a half billion dollars and you are going to give them discretion to close the case with the taxpayer, you have to pay a higher salary to the employees, and that was my reason for supporting the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, about four years ago, as I recall—I may be wrong as to the number of years—the Treasury Department came to the Committee on Appropriations and wanted $10,000,000 to employ auditors, and an investigation showed that if they got the $10,000,000 to employ auditors they could employ them for an average of about $3,000 a year. They got the $10,000,000, and then there was another condition imposed upon them; that if they get that $10,000,000 that they would devote the force to be employed as a result of this appropriation of $10,000,000 to a rapid audit of schedules that had been filed since 1917, up to that time, and they promised to collect $500,000,000 a year from back taxes and on unpaid schedules if they got those auditors. They got them. They collected the money.

The money has been coming into the Treasury. It has been one of the great sources of revenue. Nobody asked $7,500 a year for those jobs. Nobody asked for $6,000, but now they come with a special mandate from the Ways and Means Committee to set them up as a superior class, making the Revenue Bureau of the Treasury Department into an oligarchy, taking them out from the reclassification act, placing superiority on the brows of these men over that of any other men or women employed by the Government.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I will.

Mr. BEGG. Does not the gentleman believe that it is simply affording an opportunity for every other department to ask that their salaries be raised?

Mr. MADDEN. Of course. I maintain there is no justification whatever for this. I maintain and say that in the Appropriations Committee it keeps close track of appropriations, both in the Treasury and in other departments of the Government. And I make bold to say that there is no justification whatever for this increase of salary, notwithstanding what the men in the Treasury may say to the contrary.

Moreover, I say that it is not the question of the amount nominally involved here. The nominal amount involved here is a bagatelle. But the ultimate amount involved as a result of this action it is impossible to calculate.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. Does not the gentleman think this is a discrimination in favor of the Treasury Department?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. That is what I say.

Mr. CONNERY. I disagree with the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG] when he says this is a drive for increased wages everywhere. I am in favor of that, but I say it is simply for the Treasury Department.

Mr. MADDEN. It is unfair to the people in the other departments of the Government. There is no higher order of intelligence possessed by those employed in the Treasury Department than that possessed by the people in the other departments of the Government. I undertake to say without fear of successful contradiction that the people of the Treasury Department are no better, no more able, and no more patriotic than those in other departments, and the turnover in this department is no greater than there may be in other departments. And if you talk about the turnover, much of the turnover is due to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations has demanded, and successfully demanded, the discharge of an overload of people on the pay roll of the Treasury Department. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is no feeling between myself and the gentleman from Illinois, whom I usually follow. But in this instance the gentleman has drawn an entirely wrong picture of the case. We are not talking about the discharged employees. In the last four years several thousand of these men have resigned to accept places elsewhere at larger salaries.

Mr. MADDEN. They were not fired, but they were allowed to resign.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In some places they get several thousand dollars more than they received in the Treasury.

Now, what is the situation? So far as the amount of these salaries is concerned it is a fly speck; only about $70,000 is involved. But what is really involved is the sum of $550,000,000, involved in the collection of tax returns. There is $550,000,000 involved in cases pending before the Board of Tax Appeals. We pay members of the Shipping Board $20,000 to act upon cases of less importance than these cases. We lose men off the Board of Tax Appeals because they will not stay at the salaries provided. We do not have enough proper men to prepare these cases. We lose ten times the amount of the salaries in a single month.

Mr. MADDEN. How many cases have been tried by the Board of Tax Appeals?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Many thousands.

Mr. MADDEN. No; only about 300.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not mean 300,000, but I say more than 3,000. The Board of Tax Appeals has disposed of cases lately at the rate of 500 a month. That is the situation.

Now, what does Mr. Nash want in the Treasury? He wants to preserve his key men, not these auditors at $3,000; but these men who are competent to take up cases involving millions of dollars, to come up against men who sometimes make in a single case as much as is involved in this matter—as much in a single case. Those are the men they have to combat—men of long experience and of the highest rank. It is folly to go on as we have been doing in that matter heretofore. What we want is not to increase the expense in the department. Mr. Nash told us that if he could keep those key men he would not ask for an increased appropriation.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what they say all the time, but nevertheless they come in and ask for it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then I say keep it down. I will join with the gentleman from Illinois in keeping it down. With competent men they can properly dispose of these cases. Without competent men they lose money nearly every day. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] just asked the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means if there had not been 400 cases before the Board of Tax Appeals. On page 554 of the committee hearings the chairman of the Board of Tax Appeals, Mr. Littleton, testified that 10,000 cases had been decided by the Board of Tax Appeals. I submit that the description by the gentleman from Illinois of the work of the Board of Tax Appeals and of these salaried men is about as right as his estimate of the number of cases that have been before that board for adjudication. There are about 19,000 cases pending before the board at the present time.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman assert that the men whose salaries he is proposing to increase are going to have much to do with the Board of Tax Appeals?

Mr. TREADWAY. I do. I say the greater part of the cases these men will handle as key men will never reach the Board of Tax Appeals, and therefore money will be saved by the taxpayers and less time will be consumed in the settlement of the cases before the board in the Treasury Department.

Further, I want to call attention to the error of the gentleman from Illinois, where he contends that for like work some of the auditors have been kept down at $3,000 a year. I assert that no auditor can undertake to do the work of these men on the Board of Tax Appeals.

It is a different kind of work entirely than that of figuring up and auditing accounts. That is not the question involved. A question of legal judgment is involved. When one man can handle cases involving $360,000,000 in behalf of this Government, it seems to me we are stooping very low to say that that man's services are not worth $7,500 per year.

Further than that, no matter has been investigated more carefully by the department, by your advisory committee, and by the joint committee on taxation than this subject of salaries for a few special employees. While my time does not permit me to quote in detail I refer the House to the report of a survey made by the Treasury Department, a very carefully prepared survey, in which this is one of the outstanding requests it makes in behalf of simplification and in behalf of efficiency of service.

We can not complain, gentlemen, if we refuse these salaries to men of judgment and they resign from the service in order to enter more profitable employment. There are 11 men left in the department to-day who have been there seven years. That is all. Four thousand seven hundred have resigned to go into other lines of work. We can not compare the work of these men with the work done by auditors, a clerical position. There is no such thing there. The duties of those men require an extreme exercise of judgment and a knowledge of intricate laws. It is that type of men which is required for this work, and I am surprised that many of them can be retained even at the advanced salaries suggested in this paragraph. For efficiency, prompt adjudication of many claims, and simplified administration these increases should be made. The result will be the saving of many thousands of dollars. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MADDEN) there were—ayes 88, noes 158.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 708. BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE—DETAILS TO WASHINGTON

The commissioner may order any officer or employee of the Internal Revenue Service engaged in field work to duty with the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the District of Columbia, for such periods as the Secretary may prescribe, and to any designated post of duty outside the District of Columbia, upon the completion of such duty.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 709. SALE OF REAL ESTATE—RETROACTIVE

If in the return of a taxpayer for the taxable year 1924, 1925, or 1926 there was included income from the sale of real estate, and part of the consideration received upon such sale consisted of evidences of indebtedness, and it appears that the fair market value of such evidences of indebtedness, on the date of the enactment of this act, is less than 50 per cent of their face value, then, at the request of the taxpayer, the tax for such taxable year shall be redetermined, so far as relating to the income from such sale, substituting the fair market value of such evidences of indebtedness on the date of the enactment of this act for their fair market value on the date of their receipt by the taxpayer.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa and Mr. CHINDBLOM reserved a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped a point of order would not be made against this amendment. I do not think it is subject to a point of order. Briefly, I want to say this, perhaps, affects more people in your districts than it does in mine. Many people in New York, Ohio, Tennessee, and other States have written me calling my attention to the injustice that is being done the taxpayers.

Briefly, I want to give you an illustration. A lot costs you $2,000 and you sell it for $10,000; you take $2,500 in cash and $7,500 in notes. The gain reported for tax purposes would be $8,000, and the assessment is made on that basis. The notes have not been sold; they are still in your hands, and the notes are now only worth $1,500. Then his gain would be recomputed by reducing the actual price to $4,000, and there would be a gain of but $2,000 as the amount actually realized on the transaction. You can take $50,000, or any amount, and work it out by the same principle. I call your attention to this one case, and then I will leave it to the committee, because I know you are restless. I know of one case where a party paid the Government $28,000 in taxes—this a partial payment—on the sale of real estate. It was found that he had overpaid the Government $8,000, and the Government now is threatening to place a lien on all of his property in the sum of $18,000 additional on worthless notes, when, as a matter of fact, he overpaid the amount actually due the Government, as stated, by $8,000. If these conditions are not remedied many people will be ruined.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SEARS of Florida. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We have a provision in the bill with reference to those liens.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. On real estate?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. And on worthless notes?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; we do not go that far.

Mr. SEARS of Florida. You may have a lien on the land; but I am talking about where they have threatened to place a lien on all of this person's property and where in that particular case he has actually overpaid the Government. Besides I am told there is nothing in the bill to give relief to those who made out income tax reports on sale of real estate for the years 1924, 1925, and 1926.

Now, I will be frank with you. I would like to phrase my amendment so it would give them all the amount they are entitled to; but I was informed by the Treasury Department if I made it more than 50 per cent or worded it covering worthless notes that perhaps the House would not consider it. Therefore, against my better judgment, I made it 50 per cent, believing the House would treat equitably with the citizens of our country. For myself I believe the Government above all others should be the last to take taxes it is not entitled to. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, the Government should refund all moneys collected on income taxes, from whatever source, which were wrongfully collected, or afterwards discovered were wrongfully collected, and to which the Government has neither a legal nor moral right.

However, my colleagues are tired, are anxious to vote on the bill, and I am satisfied no further amendments will be adopted, regardless of the merits.

When the income tax bill was before the House in 1925 I stated I could not vote for it because of the inheritance-tax feature and because that part of it was an invasion of State rights. I therefore voted against the bill. This bill does not have that feature in it. We made the fight to repeal that feature and also repeal the 80 per cent refund, but were not successful. This bill as amended materially reduces the tax on small corporations; repeals many nuisance or excise taxes, such as the automobile tax, and so forth; and I will therefore vote for the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, this amendment perhaps ought to be called an amendment to exempt a lot of real estate speculators in Florida from taxation and from the operations of the statute of limitations. That is about all there is to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the reservation of a point of order by the gentleman from Iowa or the gentleman from Illinois withdrawn?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think we will dispose of it quicker by withdrawing the point of order.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. My point was that the amendment is not offered at the right place in the bill. We have passed the section to which it should be offered, but I do not care about pressing the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 710. SEPARABILITY CLAUSE

If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

Mr. HOUSTON of Hawaii. Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent to turn back to section 116 (b), page 83, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, may I have the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN]? Do I understand it is to be the policy to have unanimous consent requests to return to various portions of the bill? I have a number of such requests on this side, and if that is to be the policy of the gentleman, I think we should know it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman from Texas, or any Member, can object if he so desires.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Is it the gentleman's policy to permit one to return and not permit others?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I have not agreed to this, so far as that is concerned. This gentleman was not present at the time this portion of the bill was read, on account of an accident that detained him.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. There are some Members who have come to me and have wanted to get unanimous consent to return to a section of the bill in order to have an amendment considered. I think if the gentleman is going to pursue the policy of permitting one gentleman to get unanimous consent to return, the gentleman can hardly refuse unanimous consent to the membership of his own committee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Why does not the gentleman object then?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I ask the gentleman to take the responsibility. The gentleman is chairman of the committee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Of course, I am.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. And the gentleman ought to take the responsibility of saying whether you want to return or not.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not want to return.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Then why does not the gentleman say so?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But I think we might give the gentleman a fair chance.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. NEWTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for permission to file the conference report at any time up to midnight to-night on the deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think there will be a full agreement?

Mr. MADDEN. There may be some items in disagreement; we can not tell.

THE REVENUE BILL

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the Garner amendment to section 13 of the bill relating to the tax on corporations; on the Garner amendment striking out section 118, relating to affiliated corporations; and on the McLaughlin amendment to section 421, repealing the excise tax on automobiles.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, after line 6, insert:

"(b) Taxable income, not more than $15,000. If the amount of the net income in excess of the credits provided in section 26 is not more than $15,000, then in lieu of the rate described in subsection (a) the rate shall be: (1) Five per cent if such amount is not more than $7,000; (2) 7 per cent if such amount is more than $7,000 and not more than $12,000; (3) 9 per cent if such amount is more than $12,000 and not more than $15,000."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 212, nays 182, not voting, 33, as follows:

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I desire again to announce the necessary absence of my colleagues Mr. CAREW and Mr. O'CONNOR, and desire to state that if they were present they would vote "aye."

Mr. CELLER. I desire to make a similar announcement on behalf of the gentleman from New York, Mr. DICKSTEIN.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; was read the third time.

Mr. DRANE. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit the bill.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the bill as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and being the minority on this side, I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, and on that I move the previous question.

Mr. CLARKE. If a second is necessary, put me down for a second.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I did not know that the gentleman from New Jersey was going to be converted in such a short period of time. He is a member of the committee. I do not know what the custom is. I know it is——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I make the point of order——

Mr. GARNER of Texas. I know it is customary to recognize this side of the House, as I recall it, but I am not sure as to who has the right to make the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The question on a motion to recommit is not a question of a division politically.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Not at all.

The SPEAKER. But in general practice if a member of the committee announces to the Chair that he is opposed to the bill and makes a motion to recommit, he is recognized.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. In other words, he has preference over every other Member.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. The gentleman from New Jersey moves to recommit the bill.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. BACHARACH and Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.

Mr. BACHARACH. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. They are demanded by the gentleman from New Jersey. Evidently there is a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 94, nays 300, not voting 33, as follows:

Until further notice:

Mr. Shreve with Mr. Carew.
Mr. Anthony with Mr. Dickstein.
Mr. Hancock with Mr. O'Connor of New York.
Mr. Beck of Pennsylvania with Mr. Doyle.
Mr. McFadden with Mr. Lyon.
Mr. Michaelson with Mr. Corning.
Mr. Britten with Mr. Wingo.
Mr. Beedy with Mr. Taylor of Colorado.
Mr. Moore of Ohio with Mr. Combs.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, may I again announce the necessary absence of my colleagues Mr. CAREW, Mr. O'CONNOR of New York, and Mr. DICKSTEIN. If they were present, they would vote "aye."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

On motion of Mr. GREEN of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. In view of the fact that the minority has predominated in the consideration of this bill, and the rules of the House requiring the majority to have a majority of the conferees to carry out the will of the House, I want to ask the Speaker whether or not he will consider the question of appointing as a majority of the conferees those who are in accord with the views of the House as expressed to-day?

The SPEAKER. For the time being the Chair would say he would regard that question as being more Democratic than parliamentary. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Let me say to the Speaker that the Democrats having succeeded, it becomes the majority of the House of Representatives, and the majority ought to have a majority of the conferees to carry out the wishes of the House with reference to this legislation. I beg the Speaker to take into consideration the universal rule in this House for the last 25 years, that where the minority becomes the majority they are always given a majority of the conferees in order to carry out the wishes of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair always gives consideration to questions, no matter how propounded.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman from Texas sure he will find he has a majority of the votes on his side when it comes to the final passage of the bill?

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Well, we had to-day, because we just passed the bill.

Mr. TILSON. No; I do not think so. I think the gentleman will find, upon an examination of the roll call to-morrow, that more Republicans voted for the bill than Democrats.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. Oh, well, you were forced to that because one of the members of the Ways and Means Committee made a motion to recommit and members of the Ways and Means Committee, including the gentleman I am looking at, voted to recommit.

Mr. TILSON. Certainly a number of Members on this side voted to recommit the bill in the hope that the Ways and Means Committee would soon report out a new bill without some of the amendments which the gentleman from Texas and his colleagues on that side were responsible for placing in the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then the gentleman from Texas also had in mind a majority that was really for the bill and not a paper majority.

Mr. TILSON. I think we may leave this matter to the record; but at any rate when the bill comes back to us again it may be a very different bill; at least, we hope that it will be in some respects.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Let us hope that when the bill comes back from the Senate it will be in such shape that we will all be able to support it.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the reading of the Journal and disposition of the conference report to-morrow, I may address the House for 15 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, there was a conditional consent given to the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. CONNERY.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The request is subject to that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The condition on his request was that the alien property bill was not up. I understand now the alien property bill is to be up for consideration to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would think the request was contingent upon following the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The consent given the gentleman from Massachusetts was contingent on the alien property bill not coming up.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I had in mind in submitting my request to follow the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York would follow under any circumstances.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, let us include the three requests in one, that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY], the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA], and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD] each may have 15 minutes. I believe that is the time they have asked for.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Thirty minutes was allotted to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. TILSON. Thirty minutes for the gentleman from Massachusetts and 15 minutes each for the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Nebraska, to follow immediately upon completion of consideration of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ALIEN PROPERTY BILL

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that immediately following the flood of oratory just scheduled, the House begin consideration of H. R. 7201, being the bill known as the alien property bill; to be considered under the rules of the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it has been stated to me that it has been impossible to obtain copies of the report on the bill. I do not know whether the print is exhausted or what the difficulty is, but I wanted to call attention to that.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The report was only put in to-day and the Printing Office has not the copies out; but I would say that the report is practically the same as the report on the bill which passed the House before. It is simply brought up to date.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That was my understanding, but some gentlemen are very much interested in getting the report before we have to finally pass on the bill.

Now, one other question, if I may. It is not expected, I understand, that this bill will be completed to-morrow?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] and myself had an understanding that if agreeable to the House we would take to-morrow for general debate. We may now, perhaps, need a little longer time, but I think we may get through general debate in that time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That means that the bill will probably not be again before the House until next Tuesday.

Mr. TILSON. I should hope that the bill might come up again Monday. We have only a few bridge bills on the consent calendar and two suspensions, which I understand will not be contested, so that half of the day Monday ought to be available for the consideration of the alien property bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. At any rate, it will not be up on Saturday.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. TILSON. I now ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-morrow, Friday, it adjourn to meet on Monday next at 12 o'clock. I think many of the Members would like to have an opportunity to buy Christmas presents and attend to other matters. We have had a very strenuous week thus far.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question.

Mr. TILSON. If the gentleman will permit, has consent been given to consider the alien property bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; it has not been granted.

Mr. TILSON. Then I should like to have that consent granted first.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent that it be in order to consider to-morrow the bill H. R. 7201—the alien property bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my request that when the House adjourns on Friday, it adjourn over until Monday next at 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Iowa with respect to the report which was published to-day. I have not seen the report, but I understand it is practically the same as the report we had when the bill was under consideration last year.

I have had only one request for time from a gentleman who is opposed to the bill. This gentleman has not seen the report, and, furthermore, by reason of being on a committee which has been meeting both during the day as well as holding night sessions, his time has been very much occupied.

Not having seen the report, he does not feel prepared to go on to-morrow. Now, the request I wish to make is that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] may use 30 or 40 minutes on Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not like to make any objection to that.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman will probably not more than finish general debate to-morrow.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Very well; I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut that when the House adjourns on Friday it shall stand adjourned until Monday next?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 16, 1927, at 12 o'clock noon.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, December 16, 1927

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

He that cometh unto Thee with an honest heart, blessed Heavenly Father, Thou wilt surely harken. Encourage us to draw near with our needs, with our limitations, and with our appeals for wisdom. Make us able to bear the vision of the truth and may we have the determination to dedicate ourselves to it. Oh, the love of truth secures ineffable peace, when the flower of life's summer lies withered and dead. We would not seek love of praise, hope of gain, nor delusive happiness, but the stability and the good of the Republic. May Thy plan and purpose be shadowed in our deliberations. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE RESOLUTION RESPECTING REPRESENTATIVE JAMES M. BECK

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, my attention has been directed to a rather humorous error which I think should be corrected. Whether it is in the Journal or the RECORD or in both I can not say, but here is the matter.

There came to me from the document room a few moments ago House Resolution 1, which purports to have been introduced on December 5, 1927, by "Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee," and it reads as follows:

Resolved, That the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BECK] be now permitted to take the oath of office.

[Laughter.]

It will be recalled, Mr. Speaker, that I introduced a resolution touching that subject, but that was not the tenor of my resolution. My recollection is that the resolution which I have just read was introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], and in view of the fact that that is the only matter upon which we have had a roll call in which the Republicans have won a victory during this Congress, I think it ought to be credited where credit is due, to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]. Therefore I ask that the Journal be corrected, if the error be there.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, both the Journal and the RECORD will be corrected.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I suppose the Speaker has no authority to order the print of this resolution destroyed.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the resolution is in proper form. The original Resolution No. 1 was introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and was amended by way of substitute by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]. The resolution as amended was passed. That was Mr. GARRETT'S resolution amended.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the resolution, so far as I know, which was introduced by myself, has not been printed in bill form. This which I hold in my hand is printed in bill form. I do not understand that you can attribute to me a resolution which I never introduced at all. I do not know what the Journal shows about this matter, because I have not had an opportunity to look at it.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The resolution should show how the gentleman introduced it.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Is that the resolution as introduced, or the resolution that passed?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This shows the introduction of the resolution and not the passage.

Mr. GARNER of Texas. The gentleman from Tennessee introduced a resolution, No. 1, and the resolution itself, it seems to me, ought to show the language introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee and the amendment placed on it by the House. That is the only way in which you can properly reflect it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The theory, of course, is that the resolution was dropped in the basket.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And thereafter on the floor an amendment was offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]. Therefore the original printing should be in the form in which the gentleman from Tennessee presented it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course I do not know whether the resolution that I introduced has been printed in bill form or not. The RECORD shows the text of the resolution that I introduced. There ought not to be a print in bill form showing the introduction by a Member of a resolution that he never introduced at all.

The SPEAKER. The resolution might be printed in the form in which it was introduced by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There could be a star print making it correct.

The SPEAKER. Which would show the resolution that was introduced originally by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I want done whatever is necessary to give the gentleman from New York credit, because there credit is due, and to eliminate me as the author of this resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Is not the gentleman from Tennessee unduly solicitous this morning about giving credit to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think the author of a resolution is entitled to credit for it.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman from Tennessee recognizes his resolving clause, does he not? So much of the gentleman's original resolution was left and all the rest stricken out.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. All I see here that I recognize is "Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee" and the word "Resolved." [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will confer with the clerks as to the best method of making the correction.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 48) providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Senate Resolution 70

Resolved, That the President of the United States and the House of Representatives be notified of the election of Hon. GEORGE H. MOSES, a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, as President of the Senate pro tempore.

Senate Resolution 72

Resolved, That the President of the United States and the House of Representatives be notified of the election of Edwin P. Thayer, of Indiana, as Secretary of the Senate.

BRIDGE ACROSS BAY OF SAN FRANCISCO

Mr. WELCH of California. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I introduced the bill (H. R. 7467) granting to the city and county of San Francisco a permit to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Bay of San Francisco from Rincon Hill, in the city and county of San Francisco, to a point near the south mole of San Antonio Estuary, in the county of Alameda, State of California, which bill was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a communication from the city and county of San Francisco in respect to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing an official communication from the city of San Francisco with reference to the bridge about which he has introduced a bill. Is there objection?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how long is this?

Mr. WELCH of California. It is very brief—four small pages.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has it been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce?

Mr. WELCH of California. It has.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is a rather unusual thing, Mr. Speaker, to have propaganda resolutions put in the RECORD. I will not object, although it is a rather bad practice.

Mr. MILLER. If the gentleman will yield, this contains the conditions under which the city of San Francisco desires to build this bridge?

Mr. WELCH of California. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WELCH of California. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to leave granted me, I extend my remarks by inserting a communication from the city of San Francisco.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO,
CLERK'S OFFICE, BOARD OF SUPERVISORS,
December 14, 1927.

Hon. RICHARD J. WELCH,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, by resolution adopted in regular meeting December 5, 1927, authorized me as chairman of the bridge committee of said board to deliver to you with a request for presentation to the Seventieth Congress of the United States a bill granting to the city and county of San Francisco a permit to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Bay of San Francisco from Rincon Hill, in the city and county of San Francisco, to a point near the south mole of San Antonio Estuary, in the county of Alameda, State of California.

In accordance with the instructions contained in said resolution, I herewith hand to you a certified copy of the proposed bill and respectfully request that you introduce the same in the Congress. I also hand to you herewith a certified copy of the report of Robert Ridgway, Arthur N. Talbot, and John D. Galloway, board of engineers, which report is referred to in said proposed bill as being on file in the office of the Secretary of War of the United States.

In support of its application for a permit to construct a transbay bridge, San Francisco cites the following reasons:

1. The bridge is necessary for the safety and convenience of the public.

2. The bridge is indispensable to the financial and economic growth of northern California.

In amplification of the above, permit me to call attention to the following facts:

San Francisco Bay is overcrowded with ferries. Shipping in San Francisco Bay is second in point of volume only to that of the harbor of New York. Over 11,000 vessels passed into and out of the harbor last year. Eighteen lines of ferries, making an aggregate of over 850 crossings daily, convey 50,000 people over the bay twice a day across the main lines of commercial shipping. In 1926 ferry trips of interurban type between San Francisco and Eastbay cities numbered 43,550,678; main-line passenger trips numbered 1,686,518. This bay ferry traffic creates a navigation menace. The menace is great and is constantly increasing. It is enhanced by frequent and sometimes very heavy fogs. The time required to cross the bay by ferry, 18 minutes, is unduly long. This constitutes a distinct detriment to business and a grave hardship upon business people. Automobile traffic, now so important to the growth of city and State, is impeded. In 1926 over 2,500,000 automobiles were transported by ferry between Oakland and San Francisco. Congestion of automobiles in highway approaches to and from the city is frequent and often acute. San Francisco and adjacent cities and towns of the peninsula suffer from lack of direct and unbroken road connections with highways across the bay.

The bridge as planned by a board of engineers, the personnel of which was recommended by the presidents of four universities of the State of California, represents months of intensive study. It will be of double deck and will accommodate foot and vehicular travel as well as suburban trains to which may be diverted traffic from all main lines of passenger transportation. It will be 12,000 feet long, will have 20 spans, 2 of these with horizontal clearance of 1,250 feet each. It will have a vertical clearance of 150 feet over 2½ miles of deep water of the bay. This vertical clearance is 15 feet greater than that of the four bridges over the East River at New York and the Philadelphia-Camden Bridge over the Delaware River. There will be one movable span which it is expected will be used only on rare occasions. Shipping men are agreed that the bridge will not interfere with shipping. Indeed they approve of and urge the bridge on the ground that it will be an aid to shipping. The bridge will not interfere with the proposed United States naval base at Alameda. The city of Alameda, by proper resolution, has indorsed the proposed bridge and is joining in the application for a permit to construct the bridge at the location specified. There will be no interference with Oakland Harbor or with present plans for the development of that harbor. On the San Francisco side of the bay most of the wharves, and by far the largest wharves, lie north of the bridge and are not affected thereby. The members of the board of engineers are emphatic in saying in their report that there will be "no interference with shipping in any part of the bay." San Francisco Bay, with its area of 463 square miles, is one of the largest natural harbors on the globe; the area of deep water available for anchorage is sufficient to accommodate the navies of the world. Clearances provided by the proposed bridge are more than sufficient to pass the largest ships in the United States Navy. The line of the bridge crosses over the northern portion of the United States Fleet anchorage as that anchorage is depicted on paper; this can be obviated by moving this anchorage about 1,000 yards southward where ample deep-water anchorage exists.

Within the last two years 26 applications for a franchise to construct a bridge across the bay have been made to the board of supervisors of San Francisco. Perhaps every possible route and every possible type of bridge have been suggested. Voluminous maps, drawings, engineering digests and blue prints have been filed. Discussion of and arguments on these various applications progressed before the board of supervisors for over six months. Many noteworthy engineers prepared or contributed to the plans and discussions. The entire subject matter, therefore, has been inquired into most exhaustively. Much money has been spent in research. San Francisco itself has spent some $50,000 of municipal moneys in an endeavor to determine the very best type of bridge and the very best location. It is the sincere belief of city officials that the bridge as now planned between Rincon Hill and Alameda Mole represents the very best of engineering advice and legal counsel.

This San Francisco transbay bridge enterprise is neither provincial in its conception nor local in its significance. San Francisco is the financial center of the great Pacific coast. Her bank clearings are greater than those of any city west of Chicago. Nearly 2,000,000 of people are concentrated within 50 miles of her borders. With her destiny is bound up vitally the destiny of many, if not most, of the populous communities of the West. Her success is their success; her prosperity is their prosperity. The transbay bridge will promote the growth and serve the convenience of them all. Indeed, it is the expectation and the hope that it will be of service and advantage to the entire country. The Chief Executive of this Nation in one of his first and most important utterances since the opening of the present Congress stressed the fact that "It can not be too often said that this is all one country, agriculture, industry, transportation, and finance should realize." He stated, "That they are interdependent and that each may prosper by extending its services to the others."

San Francisco wants to extend its services to others in this matter of transportation. She wants to make straight and safe the path that leads to her door. She is not fearful of the financial burden that she may have to bear or the construction problems that she may have to solve. She is serene in her confidence that she can meet all these. She wants to be brought into closer contact with her sister cities and towns of the Nation; she wants these cities and towns to be brought into closer contact with her. She aspires to make contribution to the convenience, safety, and prosperity of the people of city, State, and Nation. Her aspirations have been fostered and encouraged by the entire State of California; they have received particular encouragement from the people of northern California.

The cities and towns of the entire San Francisco Bay region are in complete accordance with her bridge plan and route. From no civic body, from no political subdivision, from no commercial organization has come any word of dissent. San Francisco has the hearty and undivided cooperation of her sister cities. All she now asks is congressional permission as defined in the accompanying bill. Granted this she will proceed with all possible expedition to construct across San Francisco Bay a bridge which will serve millions of people of the present generation and anticipate the needs of added millions of people of generations to come.

Very sincerely yours,

JAS. M. SHEEHY.

Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a couple of questions. I should like to ask the gentleman if he will make a very brief statement stating clearly what is meant in relation to the brick plant that is provided for at the Chillicothe Reformatory, and if there is any change in the established law as to other penal institutions in employing prisoners?

Mr. MADDEN. The conferees wrote a proviso into the appropriations act, which is section 6 of the substantive law authorizing the creation of the Chillicothe penal institution, and I would like to read that; it is short:

That the inmates of the United States Industrial Reformatory shall be employed only in the production and manufacture of supplies for the United States Government for consumption in the United States institution and in duties necessary for the construction and maintenance of the institution.

And the conferees understand that to mean that no inmate shall be employed in any other capacity than that described in this proviso, and that the bricks to be made under the appropriation shall be used as far as we know only for the construction of buildings connected with the institution itself.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman is entirely satisfied that by no interpretation of the general law in reference to prison labor with this proviso could they manufacture brick in this institution and sell to a school district to build a schoolhouse in Ohio?

Mr. MADDEN. I am quite sure they could not. They can not deal with anything except the United States institutions.

Mr. BEGG. I am perfectly satisfied.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the conference report. Before doing that I desire to make a short statement. The amount of the bill as it passed the Senate and which is now pending before us is $210,411,668.02. The amount of the bill as it passed the House was $200,359,997.40. The net sum added by the Senate is $10,051,670.62. The House recessions embodied in the report, which has been read, amount to $450,670.62, and the Senate recessions amount to $6,350,000. The items in disagreement are Turtle Mountain Indians, relief of distress, $15,000. Officers' quarters at Fort Riley, Kans., where they had a serious fire, $126,000. Removal of ammunition at Curtis Bay, Md., and Raritan, N. J., $3,110,000. Total disagreement, $3,251,000. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask for a vote on the conference report, and then we will take up the matters in disagreement.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 19: Relief of distress among certain Indians: For relief of distress among the needy Indians of Turtle Mountain Band of North Dakota, fiscal years 1927 and 1928, $15,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House further disagree to the amendment of the Senate. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next one.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 23: Any moneys received from the Republic of Mexico for the purpose of securing information on which to base a treaty between the United States and Mexico relative to the use of the waters of the Rio Grande, Lower Colorado, and Tia Juana Rivers as authorized by the act of March 3, 1927, shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur. I would like to explain it for a moment.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Is that the amendment I was interested in?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

As the matter came to the House in the first instance, it was proposed that a certain amount of money to be paid by the Republic of Mexico should be paid into the hands of the joint commission having jurisdiction over the boundary waters. But the Committee on Appropriations demurred to that, because it would not be wise to put money into any less unit or authority than the Treasury of the United States and then have it reappropriated to meet the needs of the activity. That is just what this does. I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House recede and concur. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment No. 32: For transportation of the Army any its supplies, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the War Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1928, approved February 23, 1927, for expenditure in connection with removing high-explosive ammunition from the Curtis Bay and Raritan ordnance reserve depots, fiscal years 1928 and 1929, $2,200,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a suggestion for a compromise on this subject.

The SPEAKER. What is the motion of the gentleman?

Mr. MADDEN. My motion is to recede and concur with an amendment.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I have a preferential motion. I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not think it is in order now. My motion has not yet been reported.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion to recede and concur would take preference over the motion of the gentleman from Illinois. However, the gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, the amendment has not yet been reported to the House by the Clerk.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the motion of the gentleman from Illinois will be reported first.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, or will make the point of order when the time comes, that it is not germane to the subject.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment 32: Mr. MADDEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 32, and agree to the same with the following amendment: In lieu of the matter inserted by such Senate amendment insert the following:

"The Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy, through a joint board composed of persons appointed by them, shall make a survey of the points of storage of supplies of ammunition and components thereof for use of the Army and Navy, with special reference to the location of such ammunition and components as are in such proximity to populous communities and industrial areas as to constitute a menace to life and property. The result of such survey shall be embodied in a joint report which the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall make to Congress, not later than March 15, 1928, with their recommendations as to what changes, if any, should be made in such storage facilities and their points of location and the feasibility of the joint use thereof by the Army and Navy. Such expenses of the survey as may not otherwise be chargeable to current appropriations may be defrayed in equal parts from current appropriations for 'Ordnance and ordnance stores, Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department,' and 'Current expenses, Ordnance Service, War Department.'"

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the motion.

The SPEAKER. The motion has been read only for information.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to explain the whole situation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. LINTHICUM. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from Maryland can not take the floor without my yielding it anyway.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to ask if the gentleman from Illinois retains the floor when my motion is a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois retains the floor, but the gentleman from New Jersey will have an opportunity to make his motion.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this is one of the most extraordinary proposals I have seen for a long time. The proposal here, including Senate amendments 32, 36, and 37, is to appropriate $3,100,000 to transfer the ammunition now stored at Curtis Bay, Md., and at Raritan, N. J. They propose to send this ammunition across the country to other places and to expend this money for that purpose.

There are 50,000 tons of ammunition to be removed, the value of which is $60,000,000. The people of Baltimore, in the vicinity of Curtis Bay, object to having the ammunition stored there. The people at Raritan, N. J., object to having it stored there. The Committee on Appropriations went thoroughly into this case. It is proposed to send some of this ammunition to Charleston, S. C.; part of it to Ogden, Utah; part of it to Pig Point, Va.; and part of it to Savanna, Ill. We gave a very careful hearing to the War Department on this question. General Williams, the head of the Ordnance Department, testified before the committee quite elaborately twice, and said that there is very remote danger of explosion where the ammunition is stored, but if there is serious danger where it is stored steps will be taken to remedy the situation and eliminate that danger. Then we gave a hearing to the delegations in the House from both Maryland and New Jersey.

Some of these gentlemen testified that there would be danger to life and property for a distance of 20 miles from the point of storage. And yet they propose to force the removal of these explosives to Savanna, Ill., and other places where it will not be much more than 5 miles away from large cities.

What the Committee on Appropriations wants to do is to protect both life and property and to be sure that when we do remove the ammunition from where it is stored, if we should do it, we shall remove it to some place where it will not have to be removed again the next day. That is a fair proposition, and that is what we propose, and to which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] wants to make a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The only objection I have to the gentleman's proposition is this, that he is proposing to have the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy create a new board and not a board made up of officials within the Army and the Navy.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes; of the Army.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman's amendment does not read that way.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what it means.

Mr. BLANTON. But that is not what it says. It says "persons," not "officers." If the gentleman will so word it that the personnel of this board must be selected from officials of the Army and the Navy, I will not make the point of order against it. If we leave it as the gentleman has written it, we all know that civilians will be put on this board, and we will then have to provide salaries for them; and we will never be able to get rid of the board. I will have no objection to it if you will require this board to be made up of officers, but I am against creating new outside boards, and I hope the gentleman is, too.

Mr. MADDEN. That is what we intend.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will read this language, he will see that the board is simply to be made up of "persons," which means civilians.

Mr. MADDEN. It probably does not say so, but that is what it means. I have no objection to amending it in that way.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman offer an amendment requiring the personnel of the board to be officers from the Army and the Navy?

Mr. MADDEN. We could change the word "persons" to "officers."

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the gentleman will offer that amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. I will be glad to do that.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. All we want to do is to insure the safety of life and property. If we can not get an amendment of this proposal we are going to move to insist on our objection to the Senate amendment, which will be to strike out the appropriation altogether. We do not want to do that, and we come here with this proposal as the result of a well-thought-out plan in which the conferees of the Senate and the House are in unanimous accord. I submit we have given evidence of a desire to dispose of this question and surround it with every safeguard. We have manifested no selfish disposition in the settlement of the problem. I am authorized to say to the House that this proposal represents the unanimous opinion of the Senate conferees and the House conferees, and we ask you, if you will, to adopt it in place of one of the items in dispute. If that is done, we will then move to strike out the appropriations for the other items, and we will be in a position, not later than the 15th of March, to come back to the House and to the Senate and know what we are doing.

Why should Maryland insist on imposing upon Illinois, on Virginia, and on South Carolina, and why should New Jersey propose to insist upon imposing on these States, a thing which they do not want themselves, and why should they not join us in an effort to solve the problem so that it will be satisfactory to everybody in the United States and safe at the same time?

Mr. BLANTON. I suggest that the gentleman now move that the word "persons" be stricken out and the word "officers" inserted.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I think my motion takes precedence.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will change the word "persons" to "officers."

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I notice that in the bill we passed there is an appropriation to rehabilitate the Picatinny Arsenal in New Jersey to the amount of $2,300,000. Why should we rehabilitate and start up those arsenals anew if the people are opposed to them, do not want us there, and will not allow us to store our products after they are made? That is the same general proposition, so why not move them all and get them away from New Jersey?

Mr. LEHLBACH. If the gentleman will permit, the Picatinny Arsenal is not in the same class with the Raritan Arsenal. There is no objection to Picatinny Arsenal. It is located in an isolated spot, and the only town surrounding it is made up in large part of the population that is employed in the arsenal. They have no objection to anything stored at the Picatinny Arsenal.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield me five minutes?

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, this is merely postponing the consideration of this subject until the 15th of March. The War Department can deal with it just as effectively at this time if we make the appropriation as it can if you form a commission and have that commission report in March. The whole intent and purpose of the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois is that you appoint a commission of the Army and of the Navy to consider this matter and report. If you are going to leave it to the Army and the Navy, why can you not trust it to the Army now and let them remove the menace and not wait until the 15th of March and then follow along with legislation, so that no one can tell when an appropriation will be made? If you would only appropriate the money now and give it to the Army, or give it to the Army and the Navy, so far as that is concerned, and then go ahead with the work that would be all right. This is merely to form a commission to report in March, and the same people who would determine it now are the ones who will report it to Congress in March. Why, then, wait for a commission report?

I have tried to impress upon this House and I have tried to impress upon the people generally how important it is to the city of Baltimore, a city of 850,000, at whose very gates this menace lies, consisting of 25,000,000 pounds of high explosive, and yet we can not get enough money to remove even the high explosives from this depot.

I do not know how you gentlemen feel about it, but they have mentioned General Williams and have stated what he said before the committee. What could General Williams say? I ask each man in this House, What could General Williams say? Suppose he had said, "Mr. MADDEN, this ammunition is very dangerous; it may go off at any time; it may explode at any time." How many people do you suppose would be living around Curtis Bay to-day? He could not tell just how dangerous this situation is. If word should go out to the people of Baltimore city generally that the War Department had stated how dangerous this is, you would not be able to keep the people within 5 miles of the place. General Williams did the best he could under all the circumstances.

I do not think we are asking too much, because we only ask you to leave it to the Army, giving them an appropriation and letting them remove it to some safe place. I am sure the War Department will not endanger any locality.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that the people of Baltimore have even more confidence in the gentleman from Maryland than they have in General Williams, and yet the gentleman from Maryland has said that this is dangerous, but we have not noticed any hegira of people from Baltimore.

Mr. LINTHICUM. We brought here a number of people who have stated how dangerous it is, and we had an explosion there in September which demonstrated how dangerous it is, and yet it seems impossible for us to have you meet the situation.

History tells us Nero fiddled while Rome burned, and I think Congress is going to fiddle on this matter, perhaps, until we have some great disaster there, and then we will all wake up to the situation. It is true old Nero never expected the modern and beautiful part of Rome to burn. He perhaps only expected to burn that part which was not much good and very unsightly, but the wind changed, and, just so, an electric spark may strike this magazine at any time and destroy the magazine and likewise destroy a vast amount of property and a great number of people.

I plead with you to help us by your vote and not delay by a commission and its report.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, the committee on conference was confronted with a difficult situation. We appreciate the attitude of the gentlemen from Maryland and the gentlemen from New Jersey upon this matter, although personally, in view of the statements made by General Williams, I do not think the danger is quite as serious as they seem to think. But I am frank to say if these explosives were situated anywhere near my section I would want to see them moved under the circumstances.

However, the situation that confronted your committee is this, and I want the gentlemen of the House to understand what they are doing if they vote to recede and concur on this amendment. It is not a question of the $3,100,000 which is necessary to move these explosives, but it is a question of whether you are going to take these explosives from their present location and place them in the neighborhood of other congested centers of population or of other cities.

The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM] asks why not adopt this amendment permitting the Secretary of War to dispose of them or to move them. The Secretary of War has stated to the committee that he proposes to move them only where he can move them under present legislation, down here within 4 or 5 miles of Norfolk, Va., to Charleston, S. C., and over to Savanna, Ill., and, of course, a great quantity to Ogden, Utah. When you send them to Norfolk, to Charleston, or to Savanna, of course, you are going to be met with the same sort of situation, and certainly, while we want to relieve the fears of the people of Baltimore and of New Jersey, we do not want to do other sections and other congested centers an injustice.

So your committee did the only thing it could do. It proposes the amendment which the gentleman from Illinois has offered, which provides that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy shall make a survey and jointly report to Congress not later than March 15 some locality where these explosives can be stored without danger to citizens. It seems to me it is a perfectly reasonable proposition. They can not report to-morrow or next week, but we provide that this shall be done by March 15.

I think the gentleman from Maryland and the other gentlemen who are interested in this proposition ought to appreciate the fact that other sections of the country are involved and accept the proposition which the gentleman from Illinois has offered and which meets with the entire approval, as the gentleman has stated, of the Senate conferees as well as the House conferees.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Has not Senator ODDIE, of Nevada, asked that this ammunition be sent to his State, where it will not be dangerous?

Mr. BYRNS. I understand they have asked that it be sent to Ogden. But the War Department and the Navy Department, or rather, in this instance, the War Department, naturally does not want to send all of its explosives beyond the Rocky Mountains. It is necessary to keep some of these reserves this side of the Rocky Mountains, and they do not propose to send them all there. They propose to store at the places I have mentioned the reserves they want on the east coast, and we think before any action is taken and before any money is expended this survey ought to be made, so that when they are moved they can be stored permanently or so long as the two departments may keep them.

Personally I approve very heartily the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], which proposes a joint survey, because I can see no reason why the Government should expend millions of dollars for the storage of explosives of the War Department in one place and then spend millions of dollars to purchase land to store the explosives of the Navy Department in another place.

This is a reasonable proposition and the only proposition that could be proposed under the circumstances, and I hope the gentleman will accept it and the House adopt it.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, representing territory that has been repeatedly stricken through explosions that have been attended by a tremendous loss of life and property, I want to say that I am ready to go along with the amendment proposed by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. MADDEN] in the thought that it will provide some permanent relief for a condition under which the War Department continues the storage of high explosives in populated sections of the country.

At Camp Raritan to-day there are stored nearly one and one-half million high explosive shells and other munitions embodying in the gross aggregate over 1,000,000 pounds of T. N. T. It is my belief that there are more explosives stored to-day in Middlesex County—an industrial county—than anywhere in the United States. This is generally known; it keeps the people of my district in continual fear that they may suffer a repetition of the disastrous Morgan explosion of 1918, or of the ammonite disaster that took a toll of 20 lives—yes, and because of the quantities stored they know that the results of an explosion at Raritan may be far more appalling. We want these explosives removed. Yet I recognize, gentlemen, that the weakness in our request is that we are asking the removal of these explosives to existing Government arsenals where they may endanger the people of other municipalities.

With the exception of the Ogden depot, in Utah, the other arsenals suggested by General Williams in his testimony before the Appropriations Committee—Savanna Proving Ground, Ill.; Pig Point, Va.; and the Charleston depot, Charleston, S. C.—are so situated that the storage of explosives there would place other cities in an area of danger. It must be admitted, gentlemen, that there is danger—this has been agreed to by the President, by General Lord, Director of the Budget, and by the Secretary of War, who, in a letter to the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, dated January 20, 1927, referred to the high explosives as "constituting a real menace."

We do not want other municipalities to be subjected to the same fears that are now entertained by the people of New Jersey and Maryland. For 10 years we have been advocating the removal of the explosives from Camp Raritan; to-day we have a constructive idea advanced that holds out hope of bringing this about. It will bring it about through the medium of a survey by Federal officials to determine where these explosives, now at Curtis Bay and at Raritan, may be moved without endangering the welfare and economic progress of other communities. When the location is determined, I feel sure that Mr. MADDEN and other members of the Appropriations Committee will aid in procuring funds for the removal of explosives to that point.

The report is to be made before March 15 next, and it is my hope that at this session we will secure legislation that will not only give relief to the localities affected, but will forever commit the Government to a policy under which the storage of explosives will no longer endanger lives and property of its citizens.

Appreciating this evidence of friendly cooperation on the part of the committee, I feel that all the Members of the New Jersey delegation will support the sane and constructive thought advanced in this amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DEAL].

Mr. DEAL. Mr. Speaker, I understand that it is the purpose and expectation to move some of these high explosives to the Army magazine at Pig Point, Va. Pig Point lies on the outskirts of Portsmouth and Norfolk, with 250,000 people. We should object to the storage of any considerable amount of high explosives at Pig Point. We have St. Julians magazine, belonging to the Navy, that lies on the other side of the city of Portsmouth, at which point there has heretofore been stored a large amount of high explosives. Our people have been complaining of that, although we have made no demand that it be moved.

We do not want to increase the danger of that situation by bringing any large amount of explosives to Pig Point. We feel that it would be a menace to the lives and property of our people. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland to recede and concur.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I understood the gentleman from Illinois to ask for a division of the question. The motion to concur with an amendment would have priority over a motion to recede and concur. But that is not true until the question is divided. However, I will withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LINTHICUM) there were 16 ayes and 118 noes.

So the motion was lost.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 33: Page 86, line 1, after the figures "1927," insert: "without reference to sections 1136 and 3734, Revised Statutes, including also in connection with the erection of barracks at Fort Jay, Governors Island, not to exceed $30,000 for the employment, by contract or otherwise, of the services of architects, or firms, or partnerships thereof, and other technical and professional personnel as may be deemed necessary without regard to civil-service requirements and restrictions of law governing the employment and compensation of employees of the United States."

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, could not the gentleman consider those three amendments at one time, with the consent of the House?

Mr. MADDEN. I can not until we act upon each separately. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 34: Page 86, after line 14, insert: "For construction and installation of officers' quarters at Fort Riley, Kans., including utilities and appurtenances thereto, as authorized by an act entitled 'An act to authorize appropriations for construction at military posts, and for other purposes,' approved March 3, 1927, without reference to sections 1136 and 3734, Revised Statutes, $126,000, to remain available until expended."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment in disagreement.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, before the Clerk reads I ask that amendments 36 and 37 be considered together, and also ask unanimous consent that the proposal for the appointment of a commission apply to all.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Could not the gentleman get unanimous consent that 32, 36, and 37 be considered together?

Mr. MADDEN. No; we could not do that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that amendments numbered 36 and 37 be considered together, and without objection the Clerk will report both amendments.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Amendments 36 and 37: Pages 87 and 88, after line 22 on page 87, insert:

"Ordnance service: For the current expenses of the Ordnance Department in connection with purchasing, receiving, storing, and issuing ordnance and ordnance stores, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the War Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1928, approved February 23, 1927, for expenditure in connection with removing high-explosive ammunition from the Curtis Bay and Raritan ordnance reserve depots, fiscal years 1928 and 1929, $340,000.

Repairs of arsenals: For repairs and improvements of arsenals and depots, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the War Department appropriation act for the fiscal year 1928, approved February 23, 1927, for expenditure in connection with removing high-explosive ammunition from the Curtis Bay and Raritan ordnance reserve depots, fiscal years 1928 and 1929, $570,000."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, that is all.

AFFAIRS IN MEXICO

The SPEAKER. Under order of the House the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] for 30 minutes.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, ladies, and gentlemen of the House, through paid representatives, propagandists, and publicity agents, including its own consular agents and diplomatic representatives in our country, the Calles government of Mexico has been distributing in the United States books and pamphlets and other carefully prepared material for the American press, all designed to justify and defend before the American public a system of laws totally subversive of the fundamental principles of human liberties. In this way and through interviews published in the daily press and in periodicals of great influence in our country, President Calles has appealed to public opinion in the United States to support his attempts to subjugate the Mexican people and deprive them of their spiritual heritages and of their natural rights.

In his efforts to secure the sympathy and approval of the American people President Calles has sought to create the impression that the Mexican people themselves support his government and approve his interpretation of the laws of that country and his drastic decrees for their enforcement. By imposing a policy of rigid censorship over the Mexican press and over international news agencies he has kept from the American public all knowledge of the real attitude of the people of Mexico toward his government. Thus little has become known in our country of the protests of the Mexican people against the policies of the present government of that country and of the attitude of the Mexican press toward the Calles régime. The truth is that the Mexican people have valiantly and persistently resisted all of President Calles's attempts to destroy their liberties and have sought by every lawful means to secure a modification of the laws.

The crisis grows more intense in Mexico. The tyranny of Calles has been challenged by the people of Mexico. Issues have been more clearly defined, responsibilities more precisely established. Catholic men and women in Mexico have refused longer to tolerate a system which denies to them the human rights and dignity which, in civilized nations, are deemed to be inalienable and of the very essence of justice.

Unmoved by the protests of his people, Calles is enraged. He defies that people; he defies public opinion throughout the world, and announces that the fight which he is waging upon religion is to be a fight to the finish.

Thus, at last, on the American Continent, we are witnesses of a new phase of that age-old struggle between liberty and tyranny; between those who hold that man, as man, is endowed with certain rights: Freedom of conscience, freedom of the press, freedom of worship, freedom of education, equalities before the law, the right to life and to the pursuit of happiness, and that these rights are inalienable and may not be denied by any human authority; and those who hold that man, as man, is nothing, that society is everything, that government, alone, has rights that are supreme; the doctrine of absoluteism; the doctrine enforced by Carranza and the red flaggers, which they, refusing even to march under their own national banner, embodied in the constitution of Mexico in 1916, and imposed upon a prostrate people in 1917.

There are still some who hold that this contest between liberty and tyranny concerns only Mexico and the people of Mexico, that it does not concern the United States; that hands off Mexico is the only attitude and policy which the people of the United States and our Government may, in justice, assume toward Mexico.

The Mexican question is more than a rivalry between the Catholic bishops and priests of Mexico and the government of President Calles. It is more even than a contest between the Catholic Church and the Government of Mexico.

The constitution and laws of Mexico are a challenge to our institutions.

No man who has a love for the free institutions which we have inherited can look with complacency upon this movement. Through 50 consulates, maintained by the Government of Mexico, in continental United States, through a press that is owned or subsidized, and through other agencies, the advocates and defenders of this system are attacking our own institutions and seeking to engender national hatreds, the evil consequences of which no man can foresee. We are interested not alone in defending the person and the property of American citizens in Mexico; it is our patriotic duty to defend our institutions against the insidious attack to which they are subjected.

But we have a responsibility even more direct than this. The Government of the United States, by acts, direct and indirect, over a period of years, has thrown itself deliberately and unmistakably into the very heart of the Mexican problem. The Wilson administration violated the sovereignty of Mexico, actually waged war on Mexican territory, invading by force the ports of that country, in order to prevent a shipment of arms and supplies of war from reaching President Huerta. Huerta could not stand up against the opposition of the United States; his supporters abandoned him. He was driven from Mexico.

Our Government entered into relations with Villa, Zapata, Carranza, and no man knows just how many other insurgent chieftains in Mexico. The United States supported Carranza and, by arbitrarily imposing and lifting the embargo on arms, it gave force to its moral support and Carranza came into power and the constitution of 1917 was enacted.

Our State Department similarly gave its support to Obregon and again to Calles when there seemed a likelihood that they might not be able to resist successfully the opposition which their arbitrary acts and tyranny aroused. The people of the United States have a responsibility to the people of Mexico and to the world for the acts of a Government which, in truth, owes to us its very existence.

No doubt you will be interested to know what a famous international correspondent, Francis McCullagh, noted for his remarkable series of articles on Russia, has to say, in part, about the Mexican situation:

THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO[1]

By Francis McCullagh

The American press prides itself on letting the limelight of publicity penetrate into every nook and cranny of public life; nevertheless it maintains a strange silence about Mexico, although that country is in a worse state of disintegration than ever it was. Mexico has, in fact, reached such a condition that sometimes an impartial foreign observer like myself can not help asking himself, "Are we witnessing the break-up of a nation?"

[1] From the National Review (London Tory monthly), October.

Of this condition I myself was an eyewitness during six weeks that I have just spent in Mexico, through which I traveled "on my own," in the same way as I traveled through Bolshevist Russia in 1920.

I found that the critical condition of the country was admitted by all the foreign diplomatists, and especially by the American diplomatists. I was shown incontrovertible proofs of general disintegration, chaos, murder, misgovernment, and unbelievable financial corruption—proofs which make me fear that the condition of Mexico is more hopeless than even that of Russia, where, at all events, the existence of the Russian race is not in danger. These proofs I shall try to present in a few words; but, incredible as the picture may seem to be, it is weak and neutral in comparison with the lurid canvas which exists in the American Embassy at Mexico City, in the State Department at Washington, in the British Foreign Office, in every foreign office in Europe, and in the private offices of the great newspaper owners here in New York.

For once in the amazing history of the American press you have the New York reporter telling a much more restrained and dignified "story" than that which is told by the elderly, sedate diplomatists—and by fact itself!

You have in Mexico City American "news gatherers" with a talent for irresponsible writing and a thirst for the sensational sending dull and monotonous narratives of events south of the Rio Grande, wiring descriptions of presidential election meetings which (judging from these descriptions) seem to have been so irreproachably correct and stagnant that, in comparison with them, the dullest county council meeting that ever sat in Shropshire would seem riotous and even revolutionary.

And, on the other hand, you have old, experienced, and scholarly diplomatists, men with an ingrained habit of understatement and a professional hatred of journalistic exaggeration, writing secret dispatches calculated to make one's flesh creep and one's hair stand on end.

To describe a few of the amazing things that are happening in Mexico: The Catholic churches are all closed, and the people who go to mass in private houses are frequently arrested by the police, but are released on paying fines which provide something for the Government and about a thousand pounds weekly of private "graft" for certain police officials.

Even the Government statistics show an alarming decrease in the population, already most dangerously small. President Calles is robbing foreigners and Mexican landowners of their land for the sake (he says) of the workman and the peon; but the workman and the peon are rushing out of the country like people escaping from a house on fire. According to Mexican statistics, Mexicans are leaving Mexico at the rate of 5,000 per day.

There are now 3,000,000 Mexicans permanently established in the southern part of the United States, and their places are being taken by Japanese and Chinese. Thirty-three Japanese families landed at Manzanillo while I was on the Mexican west coast. They are to colonize the hacienda of Estranzuela in Jalisco and other haciendas in adjoining States. Twenty-seven Japanese families were due to arrive a few days later.

In some places there are more Orientals than Mexicans; in Mexicali, for example, there are 7,000 Chinese to only 4,000 Mexicans. President Calles tried hard to get Jewish agricultural colonists and managed to get 50 Jewish families from Europe; but no sooner did they have a look around than they all disappeared in the direction of the United States.

As for the political situation there is every sign of a three-cornered civil war and a general smash up before the end of the present elections. A fight between Obregón, Serrano, and Gómez is certain to take place before the middle of next year.

Though the "election" will not be held till July, 1928, everybody is getting ready for trouble, which may come sooner and quite suddenly.

With characteristic foresight the British community in Mexico City has just decided to enlarge its cemetery, and with that object in view has started a vigorous "drive" for subscriptions; while, in view of the federal capital being isolated before the end of the year, the American Club is busy importing alcoholic refreshments.

The head of one diplomatic mission expressed to me his regret that "we shall be cut off from the sea when Gómez takes Vera Cruz. No more mail, no more supplies from home. Very awkward! I am doubtful if the wine we ordered will get here before the trouble begins.

The law of the ejidos, enabling any set of ruffians to carve a choice bit out of an expensively irrigated and developed ranch, and the agrarian law permitting the confiscation of part of the ranch, have ruined agriculture.

Every Mexican recognizes the imminence of a dreadful crisis. Callista and conservative alike, when they have been able to do so, have sent their families and their funds to the safety of the United States. The hotels of Los Angeles and San Antonio are filled with Mexican guests, and the American banks are bursting with Mexican money. Many of Calles's own relations, much of his fortune, are north of the border.

Mines are closing down all over Chihuahua and Durango. Oil production is falling off. In June, 1926, it was 9,400,000 barrels; in June, 1927, it was 5,500,000 barrels, though the production should have been doubled instead of halved. Owing to the operation of the ley de estranjeria, the breath of life which American enterprise breathed into the Mexican west coast is leaving it again, and the land reclaimed from the great Sonora Desert is going back again to its primitive wildness.

I do not maintain, of course, that there has been absolute silence in the press, for on several occasions a corner of the curtain was lifted. But on such occasions there was always some unseen but agitated interference from behind that curtain—and the corner was hastily dropped again. There was a tussle behind the scenes and vigorous whispering—then silence as before.

America is an amazing country, but it never before presented such an amazing problem as this. For the last hundred years it has been scolding Europe about freedom of the press—and, lo, its own press is shackled. For the last 50 years it has been denouncing secret diplomacy—and now we find the secret files in the Mexican section of the State Department at Washington guarded with a care worthy of the Tsardom. For the last nine years it has been lecturing Europe on the mess it was making of its foreign diplomacy and explaining how it, the United States, would manage if it were in the Balkans or on the Polish corridor, or master of Trieste. But meanwhile the appalling situation on its own southern border has been rapidly getting worse—and, instead of tackling that situation, the United States hastily buries its head in the sand like an ostrich.

Its newspapers, now the richest in the world, sent scores of the best American journalists to China, although the State Department has formulated no definite policy on the Chinese question, except the policy of doing nothing. It will leave England to protect American interests in China, but it will see that a good-sized crowd of American reporters are there to criticize her while she is doing it.

But in Mexico City, where there is not a single British journalist, the United States has only one regular correspondent, and, unfortunately, he writes for the World, a paper which constantly takes the part of Calles against Coolidge and of the Mexicans against Yankees—a paper whose attitude on the Mexican question reminds me of the attitude of the London Daily News on the Transvaal question about a quarter of a century ago. Consequently this correspondent has a double reason for caution—the Mexican censor and his own editor. He has already been expelled once, and is determined not to send news that will lead to his expulsion again.

A week ago there was another American correspondent in Mexico City, a Mr. Joseph de Courcy, but, though he was extremely cautious, he was summarily kicked out on August 12, after having been arrested and lodged in a cell whose walls were pitted with bullet holes (having been evidently used as a place of execution). When a member of the American Embassy tried to see him the police denied that he had been arrested, but the embassy, the State Department, and the New York Times bore the insult with touching humility. The whole story will be found in the New York Times of August 13. It is that of a man who has been beaten and kicked by a bully and has no redress.

One asks one's self in amazement if this is the America which used to be so fond of tail twisting.

The British Foreign Office adopts a different policy. When the Soviet Government imprisoned Mrs. Stan Harding, who was the correspondent, not of any English newspaper, but of the New York World, Lord Curzon made the Soviet Government apologize to her and pay her $15,000 compensation. The result was that English correspondents in Russia felt that they would not be punished for telling the truth—and they told the truth.

Apart from the one regular, but muzzled, correspondent, there are, of course, the usual news agencies, which, as in other countries, accept official news and circulate it without examination.

If a Massachusetts missionary is captured by brigands on the Acroceraunian Mountains, or if the Estonian Navy fires a salute of only 19 instead of 21 guns in honor of the American representative at Reval, or if there is one star missing in the American flag displayed at the Quai d'Orsay on the occasion of Colonel Lindbergh's official reception at Paris—well, the U. S. A. will want to know why such things are possible in the twentieth century, and from New York to San Francisco the famous Sunday supplements will be full of Albania and Estonia and the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs; but if Mexico confiscates half a million acres reclaimed from the wilderness by mere American farmers, or the Governor of Puebla has French families slaughtered in order that he may seize their land, then the State Department strikes a sphinxlike attitude and America's one panic-stricken correspondent in Mexico City is sternly warned to say nothing (as if he would dare to open his lips, poor fellow!).

* * * * * * *

Some months ago Mr. Ybarra, an able American journalist, was sent to Mexico by one of the leading American newspapers, and began a series of articles on the situation. Having a complete command of Spanish, he was able to get a perfectly true picture, and, being an honest journalist, he started to paint that picture in a series of articles such as that which I am now writing, only far stronger and better. The situation was so critical, the condition of affairs so frightful, that he sent the whole of the first article by radio from the steamer whereon he left Vera Cruz for the United States. That article appeared exactly as it had been written. A corner of the curtain had thus been lifted. But then took place the amazing performance which I have already described, and which has taken place more than once under similar circumstances. There was a mysterious scuffle behind the scenes; the corner of the curtain went down suddenly. There was an interval of silence, after which the rest of the articles began to appear. But how different from the first article! They were like Ella Wheeler Wilcox after Homer, like In the Gloaming after Chaikovskii's 1812. They had been rewritten and so severely edited that they might all have been taken from some placid old guidebook.

Part of the responsibility is due to high finance; part of it is due to sundry great American capitalists who have land in Mexico; and, strange to say, part of it is due to the State Department at Washington.

There are Wall Street financiers who are getting interest from Mexico and can offer opposition to any exposure of the Mexican situation. There are American landowners who have Mexican ranches that are not touched by the agrarian law—as the estates of Calles himself, of his sons and his generals, and of Obregon, are not touched by it. Finally, the State Department, which tried, with extraordinary inaptitude, to raise an anti-Mexican storm here last winter, has now gone to the opposite extreme. Not only has it prevented attacks on Calles from appearing in the American press; it has actually prevented them from appearing in the European press! This latter fact I discovered while negotiating the sale of a series of articles on Mexico to the representatives in America of great foreign newspapers. These men told me bluntly that what I said was true, but that they could not afford to offend the State Department. The curious part of the story is that American consuls and diplomatists now in Mexico, or who recently were in Mexico, take exactly the same view of the Mexican problem as I take in this article—only that their detestation of the Calles régime is infinitely stronger than mine.

But religion, of course, plays an important part in producing the journalistic reticence to which I have alluded. In the United States the religious issue—that is, the good old Protestant versus Catholic issue—is as strong to-day as it is in Belfast. It is a thousand times stronger than it is in England, from which, if we except Liverpool, it has almost died out. * * *

America is a Protestant country, in the same sense as England is, and her Protestantism has always tinged very strongly her relations with Mexico. For the last century she has hailed with joy the appearance in Mexico of any "liberal" and anticlerical leader, just as England, from whom she inherited her prejudices against "Dagos" and Catholics, hailed with joy the appearance of Garibaldi. Save in the time of Porfirio Diaz, she invariably helped such anticlericals, because she honestly believed that if Mexico only became Protestant all the ills from which she suffered would at once be cured. Moreover, if she became Protestant, there would no longer be any danger of her setting up a monarchical system of government, dangerous to her great northern neighbor.

Consequently, the United States allowed Mexican "liberals" and anticlericals to launch revolution from Texas and Arizona, but she sternly prevented Mexican conservatives from doing so. She raised the arms embargo in favor of Juárez, Madero, and Carranza, but she slammed it firmly on Victoriano Huerta, on Adolfo de la Huerta, on Felix Diaz, and on the Mexican conservatives who are at present engaged in gun running along America's southern border.

* * * * * * *

But what of the radical newspapers in America? Strange to say, it was from one of them, the New Republic, August 17, 1927, that the worst attack on President Calles came; but the American radical press is not prepared for such a strange state of things. Calles professes to be a radical, and, if the capitalistic papers refrain from attacking him, there is all the more reason why the radical papers should refrain.

"But," I hear the reader ask with a malicious chuckle, "what about oil?"

Some of the American oil barons in Mexico are undoubtedly rich, corrupt, powerful, and extremely unscrupulous, but those very qualities make the American public distrust them, as a section of the British public, 28 years ago, distrusted the gold barons of the Rand. The oil scandal and the tales that filter north about the crime and corruption in American circles in Tampico * * * have helped to bar Mexican news from most American newspapers. It does not, however, excuse the editors who have repeatedly sent trusted members of their staff to Mexico but afterwards refused to publish their articles because they condemned the Calles régime. Surely the best course for the American press to take would be to send its "star" men, not to China, but to Mexico, to make a determined investigation of the whole Mexican question, and not to ignore it.

Last but not least, the American newspaper reader is "tired" of Mexico.

There are still other causes, which I have not time to analyze; but here I might say that this hush-hush policy is not only un-American, pettifogging, and unworthy of a great Nation, but it is also dangerous. Indeed, it is extremely dangerous, because of the bolshevist and anti-American turn which events have taken in Mexico during the last six months. I have been traveling for the last two years in Central and South America, and my conclusion is that in Central America, at all events, the Russo-Mexican poison is working so well that all these little Republics may go Red within a few years. And it will not be the ordinary Latin-American revolution this time; it will be an economic bolshevist revolution, entailing partial expropriation of foreign property—as in Mexico. Nicaragua was a foretaste. The United States was able to deal with Nicaragua, but she will not be able to put out the flames if they involve a dozen republics at once and are encouraged by the very large, powerful, and wealthy army of pacifist cranks who are rapidly becoming as strong in the United States as the prohibitionists.

In the very hotel where I am writing this article one of the guests is the notorious Luis N. Morones, the Mexican Minister of Industry and Labor, and the head of the great bolshevist organization known as the Crom.

New York City may look back on this visit of Morones with the same feelings that London looks back on the visit Lenin paid it in 1903, when he first organized his party.

And while Morones is enjoying the luxury of the Waldorf-Astoria and receiving innumerable, swarthy visitors, a different scene is being enacted not five miles off, on the Hudson River, where a gun-running steamer is being rapidly equipped by a number of revolutionaries from Colombia. And this is not the only gun-runner which South American revolutionaries are fitting out at present in the United States. A Venezuelan gun-runner was seized some time ago by the United States police. Others are under observation. Some, perhaps, have escaped suspicion.

Most New Yorkers laugh at these preparations. "We have always had them," they say joyously. "New York has always been a center for the South American revolutionist. We do not suffer by it. We are used to it."

You are not used, however, to the new or bolshevist brand of revolution, which is the only kind you are going to get now. You refrain even from sending a stiff note to Mexico lest it should lead to expense and annoyance and should affect the markets and should lose you, perhaps, several hundred thousand dollars. But this a "penny wise, pound foolish" policy, bad even in a small New England store, but fatal in the Government of a great Nation. The result of your inaction may be a conflagration involving the loss of the $3,000,000,000 worth of investments which you have in Latin America, and perhaps of another $3,000,000,000 spent by you on the naval and military measures necessitated by this situation.

The situation in Mexico is very different in many ways, of course, from the situation in China, but these two countries have one thing in common—huge foreign investments. Taught by Moscow, the Chinese have discovered that the confiscation of these investments is not only possible but can be justified by texts from Karl Marx and converted into an act of heroic patriotism by the waving of the nationalistic flag, and will be applauded by various humanitarian and religious associations in the country whose nationals are thus plundered.

There are three billions of American dollars in Latin America (I seem to hear Comrade Morones murmur the words "Oh, joy!" from the apartment underneath me).

There are, I repeat, three billions of American dollars in Latin America, and poor old effete, much-lectured Europe is not likely to help Uncle Sam to keep hold of them. Moreover, Europe has been sternly warned off by the United States, which undertook, in effect, to protect European interests in South America, since she will not let Europe do so herself. But the United States is powerless to keep that implied undertaking even in Mexico, where, during the last 10 years, there have been innumerable outrages on Europeans and much confiscation of European property. Europe has said nothing officially, because she owed America money, was otherwise occupied, and saw that the Yankee in Mexico was more neglected by Washington than the European. But Europeans whispered among themselves some extremely pungent—though unofficial—comments. One European diplomatist in Mexico City spoke to me most irreverently of "Uncle Sam Micawber" waiting for something to turn up in Mexico and save him from the trouble of taking a decision. Another drew a humorous picture of a water-logged State Department manned by cowboys and country lawyers, sailing around in circles, without map or course or compass or any clear idea of their destination. A third pointed out the remarkable resemblance between the State Department under Kellogg and the Most Holy Synod under Pobydonostsev.

But the matter has now got beyond the jocose stage, and the European diplomatists accredited to the court of Chapultepec are becoming genuinely alarmed at the prospect of Mexico's example being followed by all Central America.

The powder train is being lighted in Mexico, while Uncle Sam looks with determination in another direction.

For America the year 1927 is the calm before the storm.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I wonder if, before the gentleman concludes his own part of these remarks, he is going to tell us what he thinks we ought to do with regard to Mexico.

Mr. CONNERY. I would say now that with the conditions as they are in Mexico I am not one of those who desire to interfere with the President of the United States or with the State Department in suggesting to them exactly what they shall do in respect to Mexico. I do not wish to interfere and I do not think any good American wishes to interfere. We want friendly relations with Mexico, but we want the truth from Mexico, coming from the Mexican people and not the propaganda of their despotic government. We do not want this paid propaganda spread throughout the United States, falsely telling the American people that the people of Mexico are in accord with their Government, that they are behind the Calles government, and are satisfied with that Government, when the people down there in Mexico are struggling and suffering under tyranny and oppression, persecution and murders.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I say to the gentleman that I think his statement is very proper and a very temperate one.

Mr. CONNERY. Furthermore, let me say a word to the gentleman with respect to Colonel Lindbergh, that distinguished and wonderful young man [applause], who was so charmingly introduced to this House by the Speaker a few days ago. I hope that Colonel Lindbergh's visit to Mexico will do much to help relations with the people of Mexico as distinguished from the Government of Mexico. Colonel Lindbergh, a hero, modest, every inch a man, well might say to the Mexican people, if the State Department would allow him to, "The American people from the bottom of their hearts are with you in your fight for liberty and freedom of conscience." I understand also that Will Rogers is down there in Mexico or has been there. To divert for a moment, you gentlemen will recall that only the day before yesterday we defeated an amendment here calling for the repeal of the admission tax. We have down there in Mexico, or we did have until lately, an unofficial ambassador, Will Rogers, of the United States, who came from the American stage, and who represented the spoken drama, which we are penalizing by keeping on the admission tax. Mr. Rogers, together with Colonel Lindbergh, are on a sort of unofficial visit to cement friendly relations between the United States and Mexico. I can not believe that the State Department by this move contemplates telling the world that it approves of Mexico's present Government. If they do mean that, then they are deliberately fooling the American people and using two honest Americans as cat's-paws in their game.

All thinking Americans have the friendliest of sentiments for the Mexican people, but must condemn unreservedly the Mexican Government, which subjects the people of that unfortunate country to tyranny and has taken away from them the last vestige of freedom and liberty.

You know they say laughter is good for the soul. Medical men tell us laughter lengthens life; that it is good for the body, good for the muscles, and is a tonic. If this be so, let us hope that Mr. Rogers's good humor and laughter may develop a soul in Calles that will bring forth other attributes than cruelty, rapacity, and persecution of the Mexican people. These seem to be the most apparent attributes of his soul at the present time.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I will yield.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Does not the gentleman think there is an indication on the part of the Government of Mexico to change its policy, and the fact that they have received these Americans is it not part of that indication? May we not hope that there will be a gradual change and finally a complete one?

Mr. CONNERY. That is what I am hopeful for. I hope the visit of Colonel Lindbergh to the Republic of Mexico will bring about an understanding such as we have never had before. Gentlemen of the House will remember the President of the United States, Mr. Wilson, sent a note to the German people over the heads of the German Government asking the German people to believe the United States was fighting for democracy. I hope the Mexican people will realize that the people of the United States are in sympathy with them and not their Government.

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Certainly.

Mr. BOX. The gentleman indicates that the American press had suppressed the truth.

Mr. CONNERY. I do.

Mr. BOX. Will the gentleman indicate to the House who he thinks is responsible. Is it the Mexican Government or the American Government who did it?

Mr. CONNERY. Later on we will see about the American Government. Right now I will say the Mexican Government, the American press, some big oil interests, and other big moneyed corporations who have interests in Mexico are responsible for suppressing the real news.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Is it really Mexican money you speak of, corporations doing business in Mexico, money being employed in Mexico?

Mr. CONNERY. I do not quite get the gentleman's question. Does he refer to Mexican money spent in the United States?

Mr. SCHNEIDER. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. I believe it is Mexican money; yes.

There, gentlemen of the House, you have the opinion of an unbiased critic.

Those who defend President Calles and the program which he is imposing on the Mexican nation ask the people of the United States to accept as valid the claim that, after all, the oppression which is being practiced upon the people of Mexico is nothing more than the natural consequence of an honest effort to enforce the law in a country where people are lawless by tradition.

We have a right to expect that men who claim to be directing a program of law enforcement will themselves respect the law, and, above all, that they will administer justice with scrupulous honesty and impartiality. That this is not being done in Mexico is evident to anyone familiar with recent events. Under the flimsiest pretexts, peaceful and defenseless men and women are being arrested, tortured, thrown into jail, deported, and even put to death. This is done in open violation of the constitution and the laws of the country.

Fragmentary reports of atrocities committed under authority and even by direction of the Government have come to the American people, but a rigid censorship makes it impossible for our news-gathering agencies to keep us adequately informed of what is really happening in Mexico. A partial and sometimes a false presentation of the facts has misled public opinion in our country.

The following statements presented by me are taken wholly from the editorial columns of Mexican newspapers of wide circulation in that country. They are the deliberate statements made by responsible men having full knowledge of the facts. These spokesmen for the Mexican nation have a right to be heard in our country. The force of public opinion in America acting on the Government and people of Mexico will aid in solving the problems which confront that unfortunate nation.

The verdict of the Mexican press itself is that those who control Mexico's destinies are holding the nation captive; are drying up its sources of virtue and morality; are erasing its traditions and leading the nation straight on the road to tyranny; that democracy lies rotting in Mexico.

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION IN MEXICO—THE VERDICT OF THE MEXICAN PRESS

THE MEXICAN PROBLEM STATED

There are in Mexico those who hold that everything in our national life which in any way has been derived from Christianity or from Spain must at once be discarded. They are willing to brook no delay. Their fanaticism is such that it does not stop even at violence and bloodshed.

In their madness, these "liberals" are not to be satisfied until they have torn from the soul of our nation all of her traditions; until they have brutally cut the people adrift from its past to launch it, without rudder or compass, into the uncertainties of a reform which can hold nothing but shipwreck. * * * They have convinced themselves that in this way alone can happiness be brought to the nation or the national welfare assured. Obstinate in this conviction, they devote themselves with a zealous fury to a work which can end only by drying up the very sources of virtue and morality; turning back the currents of civilization and of culture to set up in their place a secularism, primitive and obsolete. * * *

To suppress the past of the people is to suppress the people itself, to erase the traditions of the nation is to destroy the life of the nation, to turn our backs on our spiritual heritage is to march straight on the road to tyranny. (El Pais, February 22, 1926.)

November 20 we will celebrate the sixteenth anniversary of the first shot fired in the revolution. Sixteen years ago the revolution received its first holocaust of blood. How frightful has been the conflict! How agonizing the convulsions! How bloody the sacrifices! Following that tragic day at Puebla, what dreams have remained unrealized! What projects defeated! (La Prensa, November 12, 1926.)

Our public men look to material force for everything. They never have recourse to the arts of persuasion. The revolution sought neither to convince nor to persuade. It knew nothing but physical force. It sought only to impose its will at the point of the bayonet. The governments set up by it have never sought to govern with the approval of the nation. They have sought only an approval that is partisan, excluding everything not of the revolution. Can we in this way ever bring peace to men's consciences, ever restore that union of souls which to a true republic is as the blood of life and alone can sustain its vigor? * * *

Few pages indeed in the history of Mexico exhale such rottenness as do those written since 1913. We search them in vain for anything bright. Crimes, ambitions, assaults make up the tragedy which is our national life.

What moral conquest has been won since the fall of Porfirio Diaz? Do you say respect for the suffrage? Recognition of the rights of State governments? Honesty in public administration? The independence of the courts from pressure by the executive? Greater culture in the legislature? Greater respect for public opinion? Greater personal security guaranteed to the people? Look where we will, we search in vain for any evidence of real progress. * * *

The spiritual breakdown of the revolution is apparent. The revolution has failed to bring happiness to Mexico because it has chosen brute force for its idol, because it has held the people of Mexico in such low esteem as to disdain to seek its approval. * * * Such a revolution is not progress. It is retrogression, degradation. (El Universal, December 14, 1926.)

In our country there is but one political party—the victorious. Its sole preoccupation is to surround itself with men who will support it, enabling it to go on gleaning the profits to be derived from its control of the nation. (El Universal, November 19, 1926.)

The most discouraging fact in our public life is the fact that nothing is done to check our descent to standards that are ever lower and lower. Beginning with the revolution of 1910, that lowering of standards has been in progress until to-day its results are apparent to all. * * * Day by day the exercise of the suffrage is being abandoned. * * * (El Universal, September 29, 1926.)

We know only too well that the suffrage is a lie, a mockery; the vote of the people decides nothing in Mexico. * * * In the States, the officer who is in command of military operations has the last say in deciding the results of an election and, in this he is supported by orders received from headquarters. Our Federal Republic no longer, in reality, exists. (Excelsior, December 27, 1926.)

People do not vote in Mexico, because they are not encouraged to vote. Our election machinery is complicated. The ballot is not respected. * * * The suffrage has been converted into a public calamity by the brutality of the ruffians who actively engage in politics. Far from being schools from which civic action is to be learned, the polls harbor only rottenness and violence. Responsibility for this failure to realize the aspirations which grew up around the revolution of 1910 belongs to those professional politicians who, unable to understand the aspirations of a people, have failed to give to these that direction which the common good required. Had they devoted themselves to that task intelligently, they would never have trampled under foot the hopes that were born of the revolution, and Mexico to-day would be holding elections in which the will of the people would find an adequate expression. (El Universal, July 3, 1926.)

Power is in the hands of a minority who hold the nation captive to be exploited. * * * Corruption is on every hand. The dead body of democracy in which the men of 1910 thought they still could see the spark of life lies rotting to-day in Mexico where, like Lazarus, but, in vain, it hopes for the miracle that is to bring it to life again. (El Universal, September 29, 1926.)

ANTIRELIGIOUS DECREES

In the debate which preceded the delegation by Congress to the President of authority to revise the criminal code, the support of public opinion was won for the project because it was at the time declared that the purpose was to so amend our laws as to adjust them to the tendencies of modern jurisprudence and make them more adaptable to the practical conditions of present-day life. It was publicly announced that a committee of experts would have charge of the work of revision. Now, to our surprise, long before the work of codification is completed, without any plan that can be considered scientific, a law is promulgated changing the penal system with regard to acts of religious worship, creating new crimes in both the common and the federal order. * * *

We are astounded at this amendment of the criminal code. It breathes the spirit of harshness. In article after article it sets down new penalties, imprisonment, arrest, fines, one year, two years, even six years in jail, as punishment for acts which, by the moral standards publicly accepted amongst us, can not be held to be criminal. * * * If a stop is not put to this practice of stretching the scope of the constitution by the acts of the courts and of the police, we are bound in the end to set up a system as inhuman and inquisitorial as that which long ago was condemned in our own history. * * *

The great difficulties as well as the great hopes which fill our national life to-day are the difficulties and hopes of reconstruction. They are industrial, commercial, social, agricultural, educational. Anything which breeds dissension and controversy or leads to a disturbance of the public order or to the revival of the religious problem is not only profitless but can be accounted for only on the grounds of personal feeling and intolerance. (El Universal, July 5, 1926.)

LAWS REDUCING THE NUMBER OF PRIESTS UNCONSTITUTIONAL

The attempt to enforce the State law reducing the number of priests in the State of Michoacan has resulted in an appeal to the courts for an order restraining the State authorities.

The constitution, as is well known, guarantees to all Mexicans, without distinction, the liberty to exercise the profession of his choice and that "the exercise of this liberty can not be denied excepting by judicial order when the rights of third parties are infringed, or by executive order issued under the conditions prescribed by law when the rights of society are violated."

In Fraction VI of article 130 of the constitution the ministry is declared to be a profession. The exercise of that profession can not be said to injure the rights of others or to violate the rights of society. The prohibition, therefore, which the state legislature has decreed is a flagrant violation of the law itself. It is, moreover, a violation of the liberties guaranteed by both the law and the constitution. * * *.

The district court has denied the petition for a restraining order in the following terms: "* * * The court finds the decree to be within the authority of the State legislature." * * * But the provision of the constitution by which this authority is granted to the State legislature is not a mandate by which the legislature is obliged to restrict the number of priests. On the contrary, the constitution itself clearly states the limitations within which this authority should be exercised and provides that in all cases due consideration be given to local conditions and necessities. * * * From the capital of Michoacan down to the last village in the State this antireligious law is protested by the people, and this hateful regulation, far from corresponding to any public necessity, is a serious injury to the spiritual interests of the whole people. (El Pais, April 23, 1926.)

TYRANNY IN THE MEXICAN STATES

Yesterday we published the news that a group of women circulated for signature a petition which this morning they are to present to the State legislature. The petition circulated in the city of Chihuahua alone carries thousands of signatures, and it is apparent that sentiment is unanimous against the enactment of a law regulating article 130 of the constitution. * * * Later dispatches show that numberless telegrams are being received by Congressmen from all parts of the State. From Cusihuiric and San Antonio alone 250 telegrams were received yesterday and five petitions with more than 3,000 signatures. The same is true of every section of the State.

One of the telegrams from Cusihuiric reads as follows:

"We command the chamber to let the religious question alone. We withdraw our confidence from our own representative."

The Knights of Columbus, Chihuahua Council, filed a protest from which we quote the following:

"In the name of the 250 citizens members of this council of the Knights of Columbus, we request that, acting as becomes true representatives of the people, you turn not a deaf ear to the voice of the great majority of the people of Chihuahua who do not want any law regulating article 130 of the constitution."

* * * The deputies, if they insist on the enactment of this regulatory law contrary to the religion of their constituents, will justify the charge that is made that they have repudiated their character as representatives of the people. * * * (El Correo de Chihuahua, May 29, 1926.)

LOCAL AUTONOMY SUPPRESSED

The life, the public administration, the prosperity of every State of the Union, in spite of everything our so-called politicians say, depend upon whether or not the Secretary of Gobernacion gets up in the morning in good humor. * * * The all-important question is, How do the scribes and pharisees who surround the secretary feel toward the parties to any controversy? No one can be so stupid as not to see that the system he has adopted of recognizing and refusing to recognize governors who have been elected in the States can have no other consequences than the complete repudiation of our federal system. (Excelsior, February 9, 1927.)

PERSECUTION OF THE PRESS—LIBERTY OF THE PRESS IN MEXICO

Liberty is as necessary to the press as breath is to life. Without liberty there can be no press. * * * Liberty of thought and expression, guaranteed though it is by our laws, has in reality been suffocated by the censorship. Great daily papers capable of supporting themselves from their own resources, looking to the Government for neither orders nor subsidies, having no resources apart from the good will and material help of the public, are only now beginning to make their appearance in Mexico. * * *

Let us never lose sight of the fact that liberty has made possible the development of the press in Mexico and that without it the press can not subsist. We are performing only our duty when we repeat and insist that any censorship, no matter how it may be disguised, and which men dare not write into our laws because to do so would bring upon them the charge of being reactionary, of having repudiated the spirit of the revolution, is the poison which in the end will inevitably bring death to the young and vigorous organism, the new-born periodical press of Mexico. (El Universal, June 14, 1926.)

Article 13: "No religious periodical publications nor any other periodical publications of a marked religious tendency, manifested either in the name or in the policy of the publication, shall comment on questions of national politics nor report any acts of the public authorities of the country nor of any private person when these are in any way directly or indirectly related to the public administration." (Diario Oficial, July 2, 1926.)

Regardless of the opinion held by the Secretary of Gobernacion, this paper maintains and will continue to maintain that this article 13 is a violation of the constitution. * * * The provisions of the decree of July 2 are such that the agents of the Department of Justice may interpret them so as to include newspapers which can by no stretch of the imagination be fairly held to be "confessional" and this they can do with no other justification than the charge made by themselves that the periodical has published news or comment of a religious nature Article 130 refers exclusively to "periodicals of a confessional character." (Excelsior, July 23, 1926.)

If the press of the Republic were subject to no restrictions but those justified by a strict interpretation of the constitution, the liberty of the press would be practically assured. * * * But article 13 of the law of July 2, 1926, because of its indefinite phraseology, will make it inevitable that the press subject itself to a restraint which is wholly unworthy of the epoch in which we live or the degree of culture to which we have attained. Hereafter, no writer will have the courage to face the dangers in which he is inevitably exposed by this grant of authority to agents of the Attorney General. * * * There is no gainsaying the fact that hereafter the press is to be a puppet in the hands of the Secretary of Gobernacion and his agents. (El Universal, July 21, 1926.)

Assaults on the liberty of the press are now taking place all over the Republic. What has happened at Chihuahua, Tampico, and Guanajuato leaves no doubt of the dangers which now threaten the press. The persecution to which El Correo Del Centro has been subjected is but a symptom. The arrest of the editors and even of the pressroom employees leaves no ground for hope. These humble men, imprisoned in the historic castle of Granaditas, speak with greater eloquence than could ever speak the inflamed paragraphs of any protest we might make. (El Universal, Aug. 31, 1926.)

Not even the constitution is complied with. Those who are loudest in their demand that the opposition obey the constitution are the first themselves to refuse to obey it. * * * We need only mention the closing of 70 printing establishments, under orders not yet made public, in violation of the expressed command of the constitution, which in article 7 says: "Under no circumstances shall a printing press be sequestrated as the corpus delicti."

In these cases, there certainly has been sequestration, * * * and, what is even more serious, defense under article 103 is impossible. That article is no longer in force, because no one to-day obeys orders issued by the district courts, nor even those issued by the supreme court. Federal justice, so called, is a toothless old lady, besmirched and decrepit, gone out of style, at the point of toppling into the grave which has been opened for her. (Excelsior, July 16, 1926.)

We could count on the fingers of one hand the cases in which our history has been written otherwise than in the service of some usurper. In our schools, in our books, in our press, on the platform, everywhere, we have had instilled into us a well-defined official interpretation of our national life. * * * And if, perchance, there has ever arisen a man with courage to study the facts and interpret them contrary to the official standards, * * * he has had to pay for his temerity by rendering homage to the liberty we so loudly proclaim, being sent into exile, as was Bulnes, or thrown into prison, as were the editors of El Tiempo on July 18 of the present year. (Excelsior, December 15, 1926.)

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION SUPPRESSED

There were recently made public two documents of unusual interest. Both documents are extensive. The discussion is ample. The one represents the general conviction not alone of the teachers but of the thousands of families which have been outraged by the imposition on the private schools of the regulations prescribed for them by the Department of Public Education. The other is the expression of the Government's position which, without regard for social standards or even for the most elemental principles of equity, of liberty, and right, is bent upon enforcing in all its severity the law, inflexible and unchanging, with a zeal that is truly fanatic and in strange contrast with the refusal of the authorities themselves either to obey or enforce other precepts of the same constitution. * * * The constitution of Queretaro, forged as it was from metal heated in the flames of the basest passion at a time when fanaticism was at its height, has been the law of the land since 1917 under administrations none of which can be said to have been reactionary. * * * By none of these has the law ever been strictly enforced, because it has been realized all along by them that to enforce such laws would meet with determined opposition and, if successful, would put an end to the work of the private schools, whose cooperation no patriotic Mexican can reject so long as 95 per cent of our people are illiterate.

The secretary contends that neither the regulations prescribed by him nor the constitution itself interferes with the natural right of parents to direct the education of their children. * * * His error is fundamental and lies in his contention that laicism is neutral and that therefore the regulations in no way violate the rights of parents to direct the education of their children. These regulations remove the education of children from all parental control precisely at the time when the very foundations of all education must be laid. (El Pais, April 16, 1926.)

But even if we accept the claim of the secretary that laicism is nonsectarian, his action loses none of its despotic character. Education begins in the cradle. At his mother's knee the heart of the little one is formed. * * * How can the secretary contend that this sacred right of the parent is preserved and not violated by a decree which, in its enforcement, tears the child from the school which the parent controls to send it to the school conducted by the state, to be returned to the parent only when it has been prepared to enter high school, with its mind loaded down with prejudices, with habits that can never be eradicated, and with its moral standards forever determined? (El Pais, April 17, 1926.)

Our education is laical, atheistic, antireligious if we are to call things by their true names, not because the people demand that it be so but because a minority in power despises the religion which the people of Mexico profess. They care nothing for the protests by which parents assert their right to direct the education of their children. (Excelsior, February 11, 1927.)

In the schools it would be well if there were more work and less display. It may be all right for boys to have Babe Ruth for their model in baseball and Kid Martinez for their football hero. It may be all right for girls to dance the shimmy with the agility of Eleanor Smith and sing the Borrachita more rhythmically even than Lupe Rivas Cacho. But this should not be allowed to interfere with their learning to read and write. It may be all right for girls to have their pals, their chums, and their friends, but that does not signify that they should not learn to cook and to sew. * * *

In the primary schools the things that are being done would be ludicrous if they were not so tragic. Little boys in the fourth and fifth grades are obliged to memorize the "lay sermon." We are told that this lay sermon is a rival for the letters of Melchor Ocampo to a bride, and the suppression of these is one of the most praiseworthy and most profitable achievements of the revolution. * * * (Excelsior, January 31, 1927.)

To-day we wish to dwell briefly on what we consider the reason for the failure of our public-school system. We have before us a textbook. Its use is prescribed for boys and girls of 10. It was prepared by Jose Maria Bonilla. Its title is "Civics." It costs $1.50. Its use is compulsory for second-grade pupils in all government schools of the "third group."

It treats of such intricate problems as easements, leaseholds, mortgages, and company organizations. It does not leave untouched even such controversial questions as divorce. * * * What can a boy or a girl of 10 do with our civil code, no matter how thoroughly abridged or how well explained? He is totally without preparation for such a study. Even his knowledge of language is inadequate. He may read and reread the text of Mr. Bonilla; he may even commit it to memory, but he will never understand or master it. His time and effort will have been wasted and, what is even worse, the little scholar may become injured from the effort he has made. At the age of 10 he can have neither the physical nor the spiritual maturity required for work of this kind. But even this is not all nor even the more serious. On ethical grounds alone the book is not fit to be in the hands of children. The chapter on the conditions for the granting of divorce in the hands of these children is nothing short of a poem to indecency. How are teachers of the public school going to explain to boys and girls 10 years old the things which in our laws and in this book are listed as conditions for the granting of divorce.

We may be charged with being reactionary, but we are sure that the fathers and mothers of Mexico would a thousand times prefer to have their sons and daughters preserve the innocence of infancy even at the sacrifice of having to remain in ignorance of some of the realities and indecencies of life which, alas, they need not go to school to learn. (Excelsior, February 11, 1927.)

The constitution of 1857, regardless of everything said to the contrary by those who call themselves constitutionalists, has been completely supplanted by the constitution of 1917, prescribing that education be laical, gratuitous, and compulsory.

The new constitution given to the people of Mexico to elevate and enlighten them contains changes which are revolutionary. It says, simply and boldly, "in the public schools primary education will be gratuitous." That is to say, secondary and higher education may be paid for by the student.

And they are paid for to the scandal of all who, with us, hold that education is a public service of first importance and should be absolutely gratuitous.

We are not speaking of insignificant charges, but of charges which are a heavy burden to the poor who are most in need of the help of the government in their effort to provide for the education of their children.

In the high schools a matriculation of 40 pesos is collected, and that certainly is a sum not easily within the reach of a day laborer with a family to support on his low wages.

But what is worse, Juan Holgium, a teacher in one of these schools, is the author of a textbook on experimental physics which he sells to second-year students for 5 pesos. A pupil who fails to buy this textbook is not permitted to attend the courses.

Another, Mr. Diaz, sells an arithmetic, of which he is the editor, and which is prescribed for first-year students. It is not at all improbable that the purchase of this book is required as a condition for entrance to the school. * * *

Is it not ridiculous to pretend to the nation that unheard-of efforts and sacrifices are being made to promote education while, at the same time, 40 pesos are collected as a matriculation fee in the high schools and a book on physics is sold to the students at 5 pesos? (Excelsior, February 5, 1927.)

THE CATHOLIC RESISTANCE TO THE CONSTITUTION AND DECREES

The reason why we have had so often to amend our constitutions, both in their form and in their substance, is due, above all else, to the attempt that has been made to embody in them things which have no place in such a charter. Instead of making a simple declaration of principles and outlining a general plan of organization, an effort has been made to elaborate an all-embracing code like the Pentateuch, the Gospel, or the Koran. Things which are properly material for organic laws, for secondary codes, and for administrative regulations are engrafted into the constitution in a futile attempt to justify the classic name of Magna Charta applied to it. The result is a confusion of details, and when the written code comes face to face with the realities of practical life it is found to be a tissue of incompatibilities and a fruitful source of controversy and hatred.

The provisions of the constitution of 1917 are not yet all in force, and already there is a demand for amendments of a substantial character. We hold that the constitution not only can but should be amended whenever the welfare of the nation or the voice of a majority of the people expressed clearly and regularly requires that it be amended. (El Universal, April 19, 1926.)

The orders that have lately been issued have provoked a collision between the civil and the ecclesiastical authorities. * * * The church exercising the right, which, by human as well as by divine law, belongs to her, with a moderation that does her credit, asks that the laws be modified; that the constitution be amended so as to remove effectively every obstacle which prevents the full exercise of the authority which properly belongs to either power, preserving at the same time intact the rights and prerogatives of both.

In our opinion the demand for the amendment of the constitution is entirely reasonable. And there should be no difficulty in reaching an agreement because the method that has been proposed is both simple and fair. The demand is made in a spirit of justice which requires that to everyone be given and made secure that which by right is his.

Time and again it has been charged that the church interferes with things not properly belonging to her sphere of action. Why do those who make the charge never refer to specific cases? If they did this, it would be possible to bring out the facts by discussion and thus determine who is right and who is wrong. So long as the charge is general and vague there can be only uncertainty, nothing can be proved, and no definite conclusion can be arrived at. * * * How are you ever going to prove that the church goes beyond the sphere of her legitimate action when she demands liberty to teach? Who can deny that the clergy have a right to be interested in education? * * * And what we say with regard to education can, with equal justice, be said with regard to every question that has been raised in this controversy. The church is in no way seeking to invade a field that does not belong to her. Standing firmly on her own rights, armed only with justice, repudiating all violence, the church demands that to God there be given "that which is God's." * * * (La Controversia, September 26, 1926.)

The Attorney General in a recent circular interprets (?) the second paragraph of article 24 of the constitution, which reads: "Every religious act of public worship shall be performed strictly within the churches and these shall be at all times under Government supervision."

Worship is of two kinds, public and private. The constitution orders that all acts of public worship be "performed strictly within the churches." The constitution is silent with regard to acts of private worship.

With what authority, therefore, does the Attorney General hold it to be an offense against the law, a crime, for a priest to perform an act of worship such as the celebration of the mass, the marriage ceremony, baptism, etc., in private homes from which the public is excluded? (Excelsior, February 18, 1927.)

We hold it to be illogical and unsocial to make of the constitution an idol, as do some Mexican politicians, who look upon it as a thing too sacred to be touched by man, like the Koran, before which the faithful bow in daily homage, * * * There can be no such thing as an immutable human law, as some pretend. All laws enacted by man are subject to change. Every act of man is subject to error, and, therefore, to correction, and with far more reason is this true of an act performed under excitement as was the drafting of our constitution in surroundings which precluded the very possibility of keen judgment and by men who acted under impulses which sprang from basest of passions.

There are those who seem to think that the standards of civilization can be changed by law, that the spirit of a people can be altered by the imposition of this or that precept as if the law were a mold into which the soul of the nation can be formed. Nowhere in history do we find a single example of legislation which, being imposed upon an unwilling people, has had the power to bring about its own infusion into the spiritual nature of that people. (El Pais, April 21, 1926.)

Once more the teaching of history is confirmed and the Catholic Church is again, as she has always been, the staunch defender of human rights and liberty.

The bishops of Mexico * * * have addressed themselves to competent authority demanding, as they have a right to demand, liberty and justice not for themselves alone, but for all. * * * "What is it that we ask," they say, "not tolerance, not condescension, above all, not favor nor privilege. We demand liberty, we demand liberty alone, and we demand that liberty for every religion." * * * The church demands only liberty, liberty with justice and law, liberty of thought, liberty of conscience, liberty of education, liberty of worship, liberty of property. (La Controversia, September 12, 1926.)

One of the first acts of the new Chamber of Deputies has been the rejection of the petition in which the Catholic bishops ask for the amendment of the constitution of the Republic. This action is a surprise to no one, certainly not to the bishops who signed the petition. What would have been a surprise would have been for the Congress to have devoted itself to the study of that document with the care and zeal demanded by its importance. But it never occurred to us that the deputies would reject this petition on grounds so futile, so unworthy of a body which speaks of itself as the representative of the nation, but which, in reality, represents nothing but the ambitions of a few men without principle and without ideals. * * * Eulalio Martinez was the only deputy who made any attempt at an argument. Deputy Martinez had a suspicion that those who signed the memorial had compromised themselves in the manner prohibited by the constitution and, therefore, he argued that they had forfeited their citizenship and with it their right of petition. This argument is sophistic, and the man making it is ignorant of the first principles of justice. No one should be judged without a hearing and certainly not condemned on mere "suspicion." * * * Before anyone can have the right to declare that Bishop Mora and Bishop Diaz have forfeited their Mexican citizenship, a formal investigation must be held to ascertain the facts and there must, at least, be a definite charge that the bishops have pledged themselves in a manner prohibited by the constitution.

But such "little things" as these, although in other countries they are held to be of great importance, among us are ridiculed as absurd scruples, which, like withered leaves in the whirlwind, are to be swept away by the onrushing torrent of radicalism which engulfs us.

We are not defending the memorial of the Catholics. That is not the subject of this editorial. We leave that to the million of Catholics, whose names, attached to the voluminous memorials that have been rejected, constitute the best evidence of the low esteem in which the will of the people is held in our Republic.

But one voice of the chamber was raised in opposition. It was the voice of a newspaper man. He, alone, voted against the committee report by which the bishops' memorial was rejected. And, oh, how our colleague was insulted. Never before had he listened to such abusive language even from the tongues of market women. * * * He was not permitted to develop his reasons for holding that the memorial should be considered. He was heckled and interrupted by the members. * * * We have a right to expect that any assembly, and above all, an assembly which pretends to represent the people, adopt for its first rule to be obeyed on all occasions that every member of the assembly be assured an opportunity to speak. * * * How is the chamber to function at all if its members are to be denied the right to speak? (Excelsior, September 27, 1926.)

It has been nine long years since the constitution of Queretaro was published, and even during that time the full scope and significance of that legislation have not yet been determined with precision. None of us, not even the Government itself, have ever doubted that that legislation, like so many others, was destined to remain a mere scrap of paper. Out of this fact springs the conflict. The Government, on the one hand, now contends that laws are enacted to be obeyed and it is the duty of public authorities to enforce them. The church, on the other hand, contends that this law, enacted at a time of great political excitement, never having been enforced, is now no longer applicable and must sooner or later be amended. * * *

As we see it, the best interests of the country require that this controversy be brought to an early close. We do not speak especially of the material interests. The spiritual welfare of the country is involved in this controversy. * * *

Can we be charged with partisanship if we say that our most earnest desire is that an end be put to this disagreement which threatens again to disrupt the union of the Mexican family? Can we be accused of any wrong if we add our voice to that of those who demand a solution of this problem which has again arisen?

A few days ago the press of the United States published a statement by the Bishop of Tabasco. That prelate was quoted as having said: "The bishops, the clergy, and the Catholic people of Mexico hold the fundamental laws and the authority of the Government in as high esteem as any man." This can mean only one thing, and we here make record of the fact that the Catholic Church in Mexico has no intention whatever to rise in rebellion against laws which are in this way, by one of its best-informed spokesmen, declared to be held in esteem by it. This statement eliminates the most serious of all the difficulties of this controversy. * * * There remains, however, another point raised by the Bishop of Tabasco. It is the consideration of the fact that the law violates not only interests, but rights alike, rights which * * * are held to be inalienable in countries having liberal institutions. In a case like this, says the bishop, criticism of the law is in order. It is not illegal. It certainly is not an act of rebellion. Respect for the law can prevent no one from pointing out the defects of the law.

Practically the same thought is found in another statement, that of the President of the Republic, which also was recently published in the American press. * * * Bishop Diaz said: "If, as a result of the progress achieved by the country or for any other reason, it becomes necessary to amend a law, it can be amended and the means for amending it are provided by the law itself."

President Calles said: "The President admits the possibility of amending the law, and it is clear that before the law can be amended it must be subjected to criticism."

Thus, in principle, at least, are brought together the two views which seemed divided and utterly irreconcilable * * *

Fortunately, the day of religious wars is passed. Tolerance is a characteristic of every civilized nation and liberty of conscience is held as a thing sacred and inviolable, the supreme expression of spiritual liberty. The same Catholic Church, having accepted this condition and living in it, makes no attempt to dominate the temporal power even in countries where her followers are in the majority. It is not conceivable, therefore, that she should adopt a different attitude in Mexico. * * * (Excelsior, August 14, 1926.)

What really is at the bottom of this religious controversy is a difference of opinion with regard to our present laws. The Catholics refuse to accept certain clauses of the constitution and certain regulations by which the Government seeks to put these into effect. The proper thing, therefore, was to discuss these laws, as it appears the C. R. O. M. and the League for the Defense of Religious Liberty proposed to do, but to discuss "The Church and the Mexican Revolution," as did Mr. Luis Leon, can have no other purpose and serve no other end than that of inflaming the passions and making the discord even deeper than it already is. Such disputes are utterly futile * * *. Nothing but that which is actually before us should have been introduced into this discussion.

General Calles, himself, in a recent telegram to the Evening Post, of New York, admitted, without reserve, that Catholics in Mexico enjoy the right of petition, and that certainly means the right to ask for the amendment of the law by which their liberty is restricted. If those who defend the policy of the Government really believe that in Mexico there is true religious liberty, true liberty of education, true liberty of worship, there is ample room for an argument dealing only with concrete things and from such an argument much enlightenment might flow as a result. (Excelsior, August 3, 1926.)

There are those who are more Callista than Calles himself. They are to be found in Saltillo, in Cecilia, near Tampico, and in other parts of the Republic. We say this because the policy of the central Government with regard to religion which has been clearly announced by both the President and his Attorney General is to keep all churches open in order that the faithful may in them engage in their exercises or devotion. In the places above mentioned the local authorities have driven the Catholics from the churches with violence and abuses.

The Secretary of Gobernacion in a circular has disapproved this as an excess of Jacobinism, which he holds to be contrary to the policies of the Federal Government. But the secretary should do more than issue this paternal reprimand. It is his duty to enforce the law with the severity he shows on other occasions. * * * Did the alcalde of Cecilia offend against no law when, gun in hand, he drove the Catholics from the church, abusing them in an insulting and cowardly manner? Did the Saltillo authorities commit no crime when they obliged the Catholics to sweep the streets of their town for no better reason than that they had been found assembled in a church? And what has the Secretary of Gobernacion done? He has sent his fatherly counsels to the guilty, who, doubtless, will go on doing the same things every time the opportunity presents itself. (Excelsior, August 21, 1926.)

Perhaps the worst abuse which the Catholics have had to support is to be found in the penalties that are being imposed on those who worship in their homes. This is a violation of the constitution. Article 24 reads: "Everyone is free to embrace the religion of his choice and to practice all ceremonies, devotions, or observances of his respective creed, whether in places of public worship or at home." To defend his rights is the duty of every man. The attitude assumed by the Catholics is in no sense excessive. In taking it they are within the law. They have done nothing which is not permitted by the law when they have organized for the purpose of bringing to bear on Congress all the influence they have in favor of the amendments which they have proposed. As yet we have no clear evidence that the legislators will open their eyes to the real demands of the Mexican people. (Restauracion, September 9, 1926.)

Our constitution prohibits the formation of any political party in whose name there is any word or symbol by which it is related to any religious creed. That constitution does not, however, prohibit, nor can it ever prohibit, to the Catholics of Mexico the exercise of the political rights which are theirs by virtue of their Mexican citizenship.

Under the constitution the citizen is free to profess the religious faith which he prefers. The liberty to believe and to be affiliated with any church coexists with the rights of the citizen to engage in activities of a civil character. These two rights are not in conflict. The one in no manner excludes the other.

Yesterday we published an interview in which the Archbishop of Durango stated clearly the position of Catholics on this question.

Liberty can not long survive in a democracy where there are no political parties, no contest between platforms based on principles and not on personal interests and ambitions. * * * We long for the day when Mexico will enjoy as she should to-day enjoy * * * this, the normal condition of every true democracy. Political parties in Mexico exist only in embryo. There are no platforms; we do not mean one-sided, narrow programs, but programs broad in their scope and embodying the conflicting theories held by their members regarding the manner in which our social problems would be solved; theories which in their definition of, as well as in their mode of handling, these problems are, of necessity, conflicting and thus give rise to controversy which is wholesome and productive of good.

One of these problems, and certainly not the least important, is the demand for the amendment of the religious clauses of the constitution. Therefore, we find both reasonable and opportune the exhortation which the Archbishop of Durango addresses to the Catholics of Mexico calling upon them to do their duty politically and exercise effectively the rights which flow naturally from that duty. * * *

The Catholics have no desire nor intention to organize a political party of a religious character. The action which they have a right to take and which is guaranteed to them as citizens under the law is that of directing the current of public opinion, of which they are an important factor, thus bringing about the inclusion of this demand as an integral part of the program of those secular parties which make up the political life of the nation. (El Universal, May 22, 1926.)

TYRANNY AND CRUELTY RULE MEXICO, THE VERDICT OF THE MEXICAN PRESS

REIGN OF TERROR IN MEXICO

The systematic application of extreme penalties by men subject to no restraint is a thing which we can not accept. * * * Such a thing should be tolerated only in exceptional cases at a time when the national safety is in danger or when the public peace is disturbed. * * * We demand leniency for no one; at times severe measures are necessary for the protection of society. But we do demand that the law itself be respected. * * * An authority which knowingly violates the law, * * * easily becomes accustomed to this and in the end recognizes no law other than its own caprice. Citizens who meekly endure or even who are made to witness such a systematic disregard for law soon lose their respect for all authority. Seeing justice prostituted, they soon lose even the esteem they might have inherited for justice itself.

Thus is public morality undermined, the rule of force set up, and the sense of right destroyed. Thus are men reduced to their primitive savagery. * * *

We demand not only the suppression of all those direct and arbitrary acts which are being imposed contrary to law but we demand that the law itself be respected by those who are called upon to enforce it. * * * (El Universal, April 26, 1926.)

EXECUTIONS IN COLIMA

Yesterday we published a news item from Colima regarding abuses, for which no condemnation is too severe, which had been committed by Gen. Benito Garcia and the officers under his command. At first it was reported that a plot against the Government had been discovered, and that eight of the conspirators had been executed by General Garcia. Such an execution even as this, without trial, without having given the victims an opportunity to make any defense, no matter what may be said in explanation, is simply murder and deserves nothing but our condemnation.

But now we know that no such plot ever existed at all, and that the killing of these men was a bloody orgy, a crime of the worst sort, against which the voice of an outraged society should be raised in protest, demanding that the guilty ones be brought to justice. How are we ever going to convince people in other countries that we are a civilized nation if we confide authority to men capable of murder as these men were at Colima, where eight innocent and peaceful persons were done to death, feloniously and willfully, with malice and extreme cruelty and every aggravating circumstance? (Excelsior, September 14, 1926.)

ASSASSINATIONS AT NAYARIT

Not long ago we brought to the attention of the higher authorities certain murders which had been committed at Colima by a high-ranking officer of the army. We submitted proofs, which the officer accused has never denied, and the criminal continues to enjoy the emoluments and privileges of his office. * * * Now we have to report that the example of Colima has been imitated at Nayarit. * * * The victims this time are not simple, defenseless private citizens. These are assassinated on the most futile pretexts, as happened in Colima, where, in last analysis, the only excuse offered was the fact the assassin had been drinking alcohol to such an extent that he no longer had control of his reason. * * *

We are daily informed in official statements that we are not in a state of revolution, but of full constitutionality; that Mexico is a nation governed under the law by men who are the legitimate representatives of the people. * * * There can, therefore, be no excuse for authorities who commit crimes such as that reported from Nayarit. Although in the Colima case our voice was lost as that of "one crying in the wilderness," we now hope that the Secretary of War will take action against those who are responsible for this new crime. * * *

All bounds have been exceeded by the abuses that are daily being committed on the pretext of conspiracies, later shown to be imaginary. It is, indeed, carrying things to great extremes when an order of amparo is treated as a joke by authorities whose names we do not mention, for whom there is no law but the law of force. * * * (Excelsior, December 16, 1926.)

THE CYCLONE OF POLITICAL CRIME

We can no longer remain silent in face of the wave of violence which, like a veritable cyclone of political crime, is sweeping over the Republic. It may to some seem wasted effort to go on as we have been doing, insisting on publishing the political assaults which day after day are repeated and which, in spite of all the protests that have been made, seem to be increasing.

It is to us a duty, as it is a solemn obligation of every citizen, to do everything within our power to bring to an end the epidemic of murders which, if it goes on unchecked, must in the end reduce us definitely to a state of savagery. No other action being possible, we can appeal only to the courts, but we must never grow faint in that appeal. Weak and ineffective as that defense may seem to-day, in the end it will be irresistible. Respect for human life must be restored if the life of our nation is to be preserved.

In far-off Nayarit the tragedy assumes proportions such as to satisfy even a Cæsar Borgia. A senator and practically every member of his family have fallen, put to death while in the very act of appealing to the military authorities for protection. * * * One crime seems to beget another. * * * We now have a telegram from the officer in command at Nayarit reporting to the Secretary of War that he is in danger of being assassinated by a justice of the supreme court, who, together with a member of the State legislature and other officials of the local government, have threatened him. We can only leave to the imagination of our readers the task of forming their own notion of the fear and anxiety which will be expressed in the telegrams which, as an S O S from some sinking ship, must even at this moment be coming in from the men who have thus been accused.

But even closer to home we have seen carried through our own streets the dead body of one who, only a few days ago, was the representative of labor in congress. The circumstances in which he was killed are not yet fully known. He was shot in the back while he was engaged in the performance of his official duty during the elections that were held last Sunday.

To make this picture complete, we recall the municipal official at San Angel, who, being carried off by a mob, was tied to a tree and riddled with bullets.

We do not desire to be sensational. Far from exaggerating, we have omitted the most shocking details and have limited ourselves to a cold recital of a few simple facts of recent occurrence already known to the public. These crimes can not be justified. * * * They are an evidence of the moral disease from which the nation is suffering. They are to be traced to two causes: The refusal of political parties to comply with the law and the failure of the authorities to bring the guilty to justice. (El Universal, December 16, 1926.)

EXECUTIONS AT LEON

Since the crime committed in Nayarit * * * no further complaint against the army for shootings of this sort have for some time been received, but now, not 1 nor 2 but 11 people are reported to have been assassinated at Leon. In a statement issued by the Undersecretary of War, we are told "the federal troops became involved together with the municipal authorities in a fight against an armed body of Catholics, who are believed to be a part of a band which committed the assault on San Francisco del Rincon," and that the War Department could assume no responsibility nor take any action with regard to these executions because they had been ordered by the civil authorities.

What authority had the municipal officials to order these executions? What authority have municipal officials? What are their duties? What right had they to usurp functions which belong to the courts of justice? How, we demand, is it that municipal officials in a place like Leon, in utter disregard for every other authority, including the army, have had the temerity to destroy the lives of 11 persons, every one of whom, it seems, was a resident of that city? (El Universal, January 6, 1927.)

THE WAVE OF BLOOD

At no time in our history has the death penalty been free from abuses. * * * This fact, greatly to our discredit, is now manifesting itself in a truly alarming manner. All rights and guaranties seem to be suspended. Justice and law are treated as playthings, subject to the caprice and violence of even low-ranking army officers or simple alcaldes in the most insignificant townships.

In recent reports of encounters with rebel bands we no longer find the term "summary." Executions are now described as immediate and their victims are almost without exception civilians. * * * Respect for human life seems to have disappeared altogether in our country. * * *

Shootings are the order of the day. We could cite many cases in support of that statement. We will, however, refer only to one which because of the public scandal aroused and the cruel, barbarous, inhuman, and illegal manner in which it was perpetrated has aroused the most profound indignation of the people.

A correspondent whom we know to be worthy of every esteem, who was an eyewitness of the facts, describes them in a letter we received from Leon. * * * He says an attack was made on the town of Leon on Monday, January 3. The affair, he says "seemed at first to be of no significance, but now it does assume importance when there becomes known some of the blood-curdling details of the manner in which five boys, all under 20 years, were executed."

"These victims were Jose Valencia Gallardo, Salvado Vargas, Nicolas Navarro, Ezequiel Gomez, and one other named Rios. They were boys of good character. Seduced by no one knows what influence, they may have taken part in this adventure, but whether that be so or not, there is no excuse for the fact that they were killed like dogs and subjected to cruel torture before being shot."

These boys were arrested on the morning after the attack. At the time they were not armed. "A detachment of mounted gendarmes," the letter continues, "captured them and, driving them to the center of the town, shot them almost immediately without preferring any charges against them or making any investigation whatever." * * * "Before the volley was fired, one of these boys, losing courage, broke in tears. Valencia Gallardo, who, from the moment of his arrest, had manifested great courage, tried to comfort him. Then, turning to his companions, he called upon them to place their trust in God. Infuriated, the gendarmes seized him and, tearing out his tongue, shot him."

"The gendarmes placed the bodies on public exhibition at the main entrance to the Municipal Palace. It was an awful sight. While the bodies lay there in a great pool of blood, their relatives were scarcely able to make their way to them so great was the crowd that had assembled. No words can describe that scene."

Once more, we demand, Are crimes like this to go unpunished as did those committed at Colima and at Acaponeta? Are they to be repeated at other places in the Republic? Have the authorities finally adopted for their policy the summary execution of their victims without trial or hearing, in defiance of all law and of all the standards of civilization? (Excelsior, January 13, 1927.)

THE CONSTITUTION FLOUTED AGAIN

Can Mexico truly be said to enjoy a régime of law at the present time? Are the acts of Mexicans controlled by and in conformity with the principles of law and justice which our own constitution embodies?

If we may base our judgment on the things which are every day happening among us on the treatment, not only illegal, but immoral, inhuman, brutally oppressive, which the Government is meting out to some Mexicans, we can reach no other conclusion than that the political constitution of the United States of Mexico has been suspended.

Let us look the facts in the face. At Colima, without even the semblance of a trial, men are shot to death; if we are to speak plainly, assassinated. In Nayarit, an entire family perished barbarously; at Leon, to complete the picture of black savagery, there was wanting nothing but the banquet at which the flesh of the victims could have been devoured.

But that is not all. Only yesterday, the public read in our columns the account of the shooting of 27 individuals carried out with no more formality than a simple order from the Secretary of War.

We are not alarmed particularly about the fact that the death penalty is being inflicted in Mexico. Our constitution sanctions the death penalty. But that which does fill us with alarm is the fact that Mexicans are being put to death with no formality or trial whatever, without being permitted to make any defense, in violations of our own laws.

We do not raise the question here as to whether or not those who are being shot have by their crimes merited the death penalty. We are even willing, for sake of argument, to admit that these men who, only the other day, were done to death by the Government, were all criminals of the worst kind. We are willing to admit that their elimination was a service to the public and a credit to the fair name of the nation and a protection to the peace of the community. But even criminals are human beings. They are not savage beasts. They are not mere things to be disposed of at the caprice of those in power and, as human beings, they have a right to the protection of our laws. * * *

How are we to account for this flouting of the law by our Government in its dealings with the people?

Doubtless, there is not a self-respecting man in Mexico to-day but who, in fear and trembling, is asking himself that question, than which none more momentous could be asked. It must be apparent to everyone that this matter is one which affects the very life of our nation which is impossible if there is to be no respect for the constitution and no justice in the enforcement of the law.

What has the Government to say? Will it say anything? Will it remain silent? * * * Whatever it does, there is only one way in which it can restore quiet to the public mind, and that is by giving some tangible and irrefutable evidence of a practical character that here in Mexico the relations that are to exist between the people and their Government are not to be those which are found among savage nations, but those which are found among peoples of enlightenment. It must show by facts that are indisputable that human life is respected in Mexico in the manner prescribed by our constitution. (Excelsior, February 2, 1927.)

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT IN MEXICO

Article 22 of the constitution is perfectly clear. Its third paragraph reads: "Capital punishment is likewise forbidden for all political offenses; in the case of offenses other than political it shall only be imposed for high treason committed during a foreign war, parricide, murder with malice aforethought, arson, abduction, highway robbery, piracy, and grave military offenses."

To demand that this provision of the law be obeyed with the same scruple as is being shown in the enforcement of the clauses referring to education and to religion would be like going to a thorn tree for apples, and we are not so ingenuous as to insist on the letter of the law.

Civilians in great numbers are being subjected to the military law in all its severity. These civilians, we insist, are not armed rebels. They are noncombatants. They have been charged with nothing but conspiracy. Only a few days ago in Michoacan a man whose name was Calderon, a civilian, widely known, was arrested in spite of the fact that he was known to be leading a peaceful life. He was shot in defiance of the law and of the rights which, under the law, are guaranteed to him. * * *.

We have seen reports from army men which would be ludicrous were it not for the awfulness of the tragedy to which they refer. In these reports we find these men gloating over executions, boasting cynically of shootings which they have executed in defiance of the law, as though these were the glorious deeds of some victory won on the field of battle. * * * Unfortunate though it may be, we can only admit the fact that there is left in our country only one foundation upon which national morality stands, * * * respect for the law. If respect for the law is lost, if the laws are no longer obeyed by our army, military discipline will disappear and our army will degenerate until it is no better than a band of marauders attached by fear or favor to some chieftain whom it may desert at any time. More important to the Government and to the nation even than the annihilation of conspirators and the suppression of rebellion is the maintenance of discipline and the respect for law in the army. Experience gained through a long and painful history is proof enough of this. (Excelsior, March 1, 1927.)

SUMMARY EXECUTIONS

If we were to ask ourselves what has the Government of the Republic done in its action against rebellion to extenuate the ferocity which, serving no useful end, invariably is aroused in Mexico by what should not be more than a mere political controversy, we would, unfortunately, find it necessary to confess that it has done nothing, absolutely nothing, of a practical character.

There is no one who does not know the savage violence with which the campaign in Jalisco is being waged. There is no one who does not know the carefree manner in which large numbers of men are being shot in many other parts of the country. Chiefs of operations, commanding officers, even officers of low rank in command of mere detachments, are condemning to death combatants and noncombatants with a nonchalance that one would expect only of highwaymen and bandits. As has always been the case, to-day the number of those slaughtered is far greater than those killed on the field of conflict. * * *

The most recent example of a killing executed many kilometers away from the scene of battle occurred in Morelia, Michoacan. The victim was Mr. Alfonso Arce, a citizen who stood high in that community. The facts reported indicated that, on the 10th of the present month, a band of rebels entered the village of Puruandiro. Mr. Arce, as is proven by the facts which were not disproved, was in Morelia on the 9th and continuously thereafter. He could not, therefore, have been present at the attack on Puruandiro. Nevertheless, it was enough for some one to denounce to the officer in command of the detachment at Morelia Arce as a participant in that attack to cause his arrest on the 12th, followed by his execution within 24 hours without any trial nor any effort to verify the charges. * * *

* * * * * * *

For a government like ours which pretends, above all else, to be a government of law enforcement, the constitution should alone be the guide. If the government holds that the constitutional guaranties stand in the way of the restoration of order, article 29 of the constitution tells it what it must do. By that article, the executive must go to the permanent committee of congress with a request that these guaranties be declared in suspension. It must defend that request before the nation and, in the briefest time possible, put an end to this abnormal condition by suppressing the rebellion. But, if the Government holds that this action is not necessary, it has a solemn obligation to do everything possible to restrain the ferocity of its officers, who, like jackals, are devastating the Republic by giving free reign to their bloodthirsty instincts. (El Universal, April 18, 1927.)

MEXICO A BANKRUPT DEMOCRACY LEGISLATION

We Mexicans make of the law a sort of fetish. We do not indeed always obey the law, but in speaking of it we laud its efficacy to the heavens. No matter what problem arises, our first thought is to pass a new law. We seem to legislate for the sake of legislating, to-day in one direction, to-morrow in another. We seem to feel that the mere inscription of a proposition in our laws is sufficient to work miracles. * * *

Thus, we have gone on passing laws since the day of our independence. Congresses have come and Congresses have gone since the days of Apatzingan and we have pursued our merry course of law making. If we were to stack all of our laws one upon another, we would have a mountain of laws. Constitution upon constitution, regulation upon regulation, reforms great and small, we have never stopped, nor is there now any sign that we are about to stop legislating.

And what is worse, we seem to learn nothing from experience. Even now we are not sure that it is not the law from which national customs spring rather than the reverse. The result is that our legislation, far from serving to standardize and crystallize the habits we have developed, thus having its roots in our traditions and being a true reflection of our national character and the conditions in which we live, is more apt to be the expression of some exalted idealism or, what is worse, to have no idealism at all, being mere schemes of men who, though not generally in office, have great political influence, seeking only their own interests, having no inspiration but that of their own caprice, subject to no control, enforcing their own notions of that which suits their purpose best.

It is not to be wondered at that so many of our laws have been dead letters from the day of their enactment. It could not be otherwise, because of the unjust and unpractical things they embody. It is not strange that in our legislation we find much that is exotic, borrowed from abroad and almost nothing that is original, national, nor are we to wonder when we find that when an attempt is made to enforce these laws, which are utterly out of harmony with conditions, the result is opposition, disorder, and conspiracy. (El Universal, July 15, 1926.)

To-day we publish an item in our news columns which in other countries would go unnoticed, but which among us is truly sensational. The president of the Chamber of Deputies of the State of Nuevo Leon, Rodolfo Hinajoso, has suspended action on a bill providing for the enforcement of article 130 of the constitution until an opportunity has been given to the people to make known their will regarding the provisions of this bill.

With all sincerity we confess that when this item came to our attention we doubted if such a thing could really have occurred anywhere in the Republic of Mexico. We have seen the will of the people treated with such contempt, the petitions of the nation so often flouted, that we could not bring ourselves to believe that there might still be found even one honorable man whose action is a credit to his title of representative of the people.

In our legislation the thing least thought of is the people. Party advantage, the will of caciques, these are carefully considered in the inner circles, but it never by any chance occurs to anyone in our Government to give the least thought to how his action will be received by the people. (El Pais, Apr. 15, 1926.)

THE COURTS

Passing in review the hopes and aspirations around which the revolution of 1910 was fought and which gave to it its truly popular character, we recall the prophetic words of Justo Sierra: "The people hunger and thirst after justice," * * *

The revolution of 1910 inscribed on its banners in flaming characters one reform in demanding which, above all else, the nation was united—the reform of the courts of justice. The solemn pledge was given to the people that thenceforth the rights of all would be safeguarded. It was declared that favoritism was at an end forever and that the new régime would insure absolute integrity, with perfect equality guaranteed to all men before the law. The law thenceforth would be supreme and all the relations between man and man or man and the government made subject to it, without discrimination and without regard to political affiliations. * * *

It is all the more painful, therefore, now that 16 years have passed since the people of Mexico were inspired by that demand to deeds of heroism, to have to record the fact that the people have been defrauded, that all the sufferings have been in vain, useless all the sacrifices. * * * In the administration of justice we have made no advance toward the high ideals of 1910. We are confronted with the same immorality in our courts, the same contempt for the law. We can only confess that in this, as in so many other things, the aspirations of the revolution are still unrealized. We have exhausted our energies in an effort that has borne no fruit, that has been a failure.

To-day we are not only no better off, but our condition is even more deplorable than it was in 1910. Judges, prosecutors, magistrates, all are guilty at least of excessive leniency, if indeed they have not rendered themselves justly liable to the charge of corruption which on all sides is being brought against them. Under the revolution, justice, like democracy itself, is a farce and a fraud, and this we can only confess and lament.

Postrevolutionary justice is in bankruptcy. Corruption dominates many of the courts. In some of these judgments are sold to the highest bidder. The citizen finds himself defenseless, at the mercy of the police and the army. (El Universal, Oct. 2, 1926.)

Justice is sold. It is hired out. No one who cares to take the trouble finds it difficult to violate justice. Justice is cheated miserably. Immorality has reached the point where cases in our courts are no longer won by consideration of the law, but only by the consideration of the size of the bribe that is offered.

This is no idle talk. We are not making charges we can not prove. * * * The officers of the army, especially, have had nothing but contempt for the decrees of the so-called federal courts. So brazenly has the law been flouted time and again that even the supreme court recently found it necessary to order action to be taken against army officers who refuse to comply with the decisions of courts in the federal district. * * * But we have no reason to expect that, in the case of some of these officials, even the supreme court will press for action. We can only feel that, here again, the law is to be enforced only against those who are without influence or without wealth as, for instance, the alcalde of Tepetlaxco, and not enforced against those who have power.

Things can not go on as they are without plunging the nation into lawlessness and anarchy. (Excelsior, October 8, 1926.)

It is absolutely necessary that something be done at once to reform the courts of justice. No action can be too severe against judges who prostitute their office and tolerate corruption in their courts. Their crime is worse than that of the thieves, who without mercy are thrown into prison; it is worse even than the crimes of highwaymen, who are being shot down at sight.

Society can live without paved roads, without agricultural schools, without great irrigation works, admirable and useful as all these are, but society can not long survive the death of justice. (Excelsior, November 11, 1926.)

SUFFRAGE

Accounts which have appeared in the daily press show that already more than 300 men have presented credentials showing themselves to have been elected to the chamber of deputies at the recent elections. There is every reason to believe that when all the credentials issued have been presented there will be on hand enough pretenders to make up two or three chambers. We have grown used to this, and would think nothing of it were it not for the fact that this year the announcement that the chief executive of the nation himself would exercise the most scrupulous vigilance over the elections and that he would suppress all fraud and abuses led us to hope that, at last, we might see a change of the system. * * *

In our country the holding of elections is a difficult and complicated undertaking because of the great mass of citizens are incapable of understanding even the meaning of public suffrage or of manifesting any interest in the exercise of their political rights.

The election laws are complicated. The preelection campaign is a campaign of lies and falsehoods. The freedom of the ballot is always subject to the arbitrariness of subordinate officials and to the violence of those who balk at nothing in their determination to remain in office. The result is that elections held in Mexico are fraudulent and, judged by the standards of our own law, productive of no valid results. That is why conscientious men have ceased to have anything to do with elections, having reached the conclusion that, after all, these elections exercise no influence over public administration. * * * As stated above, 300 credentials have already been presented. Two or three times this number will be presented before the end is reached. How many crimes, how many deeds of violence, how many irregularities have been committed throughout the Republic to make this possible, and what measures is the Minister of Gobernacion going to adopt against those in office and out of office who have committed them? (Excelsior, July 15, 1926.)

To call oneself a democrat is easy, but to be a democrat in Mexico is all but impossible, especially to those in office. Nevertheless, the time has come when the revolution must give some evidence of respect for the will of the people and that, at least with regard to our elections, some advancement is being made. (Excelsior, August 21, 1926.)

Formerly no elections at all were held in Mexico because it was useless to hold elections. People had grown tired of the comedy, knowing perfectly well that the list of deputies and senators who would in the end hold office had already been prepared in the office of the Secretary of Gobernacion.

To-day, likewise, no elections are held in Mexico. The people have learned that the results of the elections are determined not at the polls but in the Office of Gobernacion or by some inner circle of the Congress itself; to-day, whether a pretender has a credential or not, whether he has received votes or not, whether he is qualified or not, provided only that he is looked upon with favor by the powers that be, nothing can prevent him from taking his seat.

Having lost all faith in the integrity of the ballot, the people have no confidence in the elections, and improvement will not be possible until the faith of the people and its confidence in this, the highest function of democracy, is restored. (El Universal, July 15, 1926.)

The all-important thing in our decadent democracy in Mexico is not the ballot. Candidates make little or no effort to win votes. Their only worry is to gain control of the man who presides at the election booth. To accomplish this they are willing to resort to chicanery and even to violence, knowing perfectly well that these men, having authority to pass on the results of the election, will substitute whatever votes may be lacking.

The chairman of the committee is in reality the one elector, the one important agent in this pseudo-democratic function, the election in Mexico.

All the energies of our political parties are devoted to winning the control of these men. Election boards are reduced to servility by bribery and threats. It is commonly said among the people that men on these boards have to face $10,000 or daggers 10. Election booths are assaulted with impunity and ballot boxes openly purloined.

This is not democracy; it is a brutal abuse of the suffrage which our politicians go on committing with utter contempt of the popular will. (El Universal, November 17, 1926.)

CITIZENSHIP

Under the name of Civil Union for the Defense of Liberty there has been organized a new group which proposes to take up the defense of liberty both of the individual and of society. The organizers are conservative men of high ideals. They have already held several meetings and they now make public the principles for which the new organization is to stand.

Social problems, they declare, are not to be solved by war. Strife and violence bring only destruction and are the fruitful sources from which spring crime, poverty, and anarchy.

The deplorable crisis through which the Republic is now passing has come to us precisely as the fruit of bloody revolution and is due, above all, to the fact that those to whom the masses had a right to look for leadership, through cowardice, indifference, and selfishness have held themselves aloof.

We have no just complaint. If we are slaves, it is because we have not known the value nor been willing to pay the price of liberty. Abuses most degrading have been heaped upon us, and instead of standing for our rights we have had recourse only to mean and cowardly grumblings.

Seeing victory go so often to force, we have lost faith in the efficacy of moral measures. We have failed to understand that the victory of material force is never lasting and that in the end liberty and justice are sure to assert themselves.

Tyrannies that seemed impregnable in the past, but which did not stand on the firm foundation of moral truth, have been overthrown by an opposition seemingly powerless, but strong, nevertheless, in the fact that it stood for right. Our defense, therefore, must depend not on arms nor on the shedding of blood but on the development of those forces of morality and culture which, seated in the soul of the nation, alone in the end can do away forever with the rule of force and the imposition of tyranny in the hands of a minority. * * * The Mexican problem is essentially a social, a moral problem. Proposals and plans without number and of infinite variety have been advanced for its solution. All have failed because none in its practical working out has elevated the ethical character of the people. * * *

Throughout our history we have resorted to war as the final arbiter of all our disputes. We have had nothing but contempt for education as a factor of our national progress. We have sought to transform the people on the field of battle, and we have only intensified the instincts of hatred and destruction. * * *

The Civil Union for the Defense of Liberty has been formed for the purpose of undertaking an organized campaign, the purpose of which will be the promotion of citizenship and civic virtue throughout the country in the defense of liberty and rights. The new union is not a political party. It has no desire for office. It has no political purpose. Its action will at all times be in compliance with the law. It seeks to accomplish results that will be lasting. It strikes at the root of our national problem. The means which it proposes to employ, always peaceful, will be directed toward the creation of a condition in which every competent factor of national life will actively participate in the government of the country and in the defense of justice, without recourse to armed action.

To this end the civil union will conduct a campaign of social education through the columns of the press, by holding public meetings, distributing literature, cooperation with the schools, and with every other agency through which its purpose may be accomplished. (La Controversia, September 26, 1926.)

The formation of this new Civil Union for the Defense of Liberty comes as a ray of sunshine and of hope in the confusion to which we have so long been condemned in Mexico.

The campaign to promote civic virtue and civic action will develop public morality and enlighten public opinion, and in the end will render impossible the very existence of laws that are oppressive and unjust, put an end to corruption in public administration, and restore to Mexicans that true liberty which is the fruit of civilization. (Excelsior, September 27, 1926.)

FOREIGN MEDDLERS

A group of Protestants recently visited Mexico. After spending less than a month in the country, they announce that upon their return home they will publish news items in the press, special articles, even books, and that they will lecture on the platform, give interviews, and act as expert advisers concerning the Mexican question. What is even more absurd, the instructors, the women along with the men, who came for the summer school, have promised to make known the truth regarding Mexico, a thing which we ourselves have not yet discovered, and we have grown gray in studying it at close range. * * * The problems of Mexico do not all arise out of oil and land; nor are they all related to the redemption of the Indian. All of these are, of course, serious. But we have problems of race, of language, of climate, of geography, of education, and of a thousand other kinds which are not to be solved by one who has no better preparation than the fact that he has stood with his foot on the rail of some Mexican bar. (Excelsior, September 2, 1926.)

TWO END-OF-YEAR STATEMENTS

The year 1926 has failed to bring the realization of those hopes which, with the suppression of the revolution of De la Huerta, were entertained by everyone truly interested in the rehabilitation and the pacification of our country.

It is not necessary here to pass in review the events which have followed each other or the controversies out of which they sprang. They have all been commented upon in these columns. Why should he now recall the long list of errors, the mistakes, which have filled these 12 months? Every one of them, taken separately as it occurred, has been supported with more or less suffering, but, looking at them all at the same time, we can but wonder that the nation had strength to stand up under such a burden.

The most complicated, as well as the most serious and painful of all these conflicts, is one which strikes at the very life of the nation. It springs from the fact, daily becoming more pronounced, that the Mexican nation is torn by dissension and that new motives for dissension are being daily invented. Not satisfied with the old controversies over politics, out of which sprang hatreds and feuds, daily new fuel is being thrown on the fire and we are faced with a war between classes. As if even that were not enough, to this class war is being added a race war, and we, who should be united because we all enjoy the same civilization, are being forced into irreconcilable antagonisms. Of all the political and economic problems with which we are confronted, serious though they are, none is more to be feared than this. It threatens the nation with destruction, tearing our national unity into fragments. The year has witnessed a campaign conducted by certain elements in favor of socialism, which, if it is successful, must inevitably end by throwing labor into conflict with that which labor needs most—capital and industrial enterprise. We have been saddened by the injection of the religious question which, long ago, ceased to be a source of disturbance among peoples, finding its solution in liberty, which is tolerance and which respects the rights of others, making it possible for all to live in peace and harmony, regardless of the differences of opinion and ideals. (Excelsior, January 1, 1927.)

The greatest good which we can wish for Mexico during 1927 is that a solution be found for the serious problems with which we are confronted and that this solution be made possible by the loyal cooperation of all the factors of our national life. If that cooperation is to be attained it is, above all, necessary that there be complete peace, tolerance, true and independent patriotism, and above all the suppression of all hatreds between classes and groups. This should be the program for the accomplishment of which we all unite. Peace, prosperity—these are beautiful words, but they will be empty words unless we are all willing to do our part in giving them reality. (El Universal, January 1, 1927.)

A RAY OF HOPE

The program of the revolution, which has been a complete failure in the internal affairs of the country, is now on the point of producing an even worse failure in our international affairs, especially with regard to our relations with the United States. The welfare of a nation is not a thing to be trifled with, and patriotism now demands that there be a radical change in that program. Looking these things in the face, we can but be alarmed when we see our radicals pursue their high-handed course, committing the most serious mistakes, as, for instance, the arming of the agrarians, which is nothing less than the arming of an undisciplined mob which, a sad experience has convinced us, will in the end make evil use of the rifles which should, from the beginning, have been intrusted only to the army.

A program of economy in the public administration of financial and fiscal reorganization, a program of public works executed with energy in the interests of agriculture and commerce is doomed necessarily to failure if it is accompanied with a stubborn determination to hostilize capital, the owners of rural property, and the men of enterprise and labor devoted to the agricultural upbuilding of the country.

The promotion of the interests of labor, the raising of the standard of life is incompatible with the attack that is being made on capital, the source from which the laborer must derive his income.

These and other things we have often repeated. They are axiomatic. They admit of no discussion. Unfortunately, however, vanity is a factor in public life more than is at first apparent, and through vanity men are driven to seek methods which are new and original but which in the end will be found to be extravagant fancies. * * * The first and most important thing for us to do is to clothe ourselves with modesty, with simplicity, with common sense. (Excelsior, January 20, 1927.)

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Two minutes.

Mr. CONNERY. As I have only two minutes remaining I would like to read excerpts from two editorials in the American press, in which they tell what they think of the Calles government. The editorials are from two American papers, evidently papers not subsidized or afraid to talk about Mexico. One is from the Washington Post, the other the New York Evening Post. I find that they are rather too long to read in two minutes, but I shall put them in the RECORD.

Mr. WELSH of Pennsylvania. I ask that the gentleman be given five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House, after the gentleman from Massachusetts has had his 30 minutes, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] is entitled to 15 minutes.

Mr. CONNERY. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I do not wish to encroach upon the time of the gentleman from New York or the gentleman from Nebraska who are going to speak after me. I merely wish to bring these facts before the Congress of the United States and the American people. I am not making a wild statement. I am asking you to look over these facts, which you will find are absolutely true, and obtain the real truth with reference to Mexico.

The Mexican people are suffering under oppression. They have not the rights to which they are entitled, their rights of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness and freedom of conscience, which we have here in the United States. I am asking the consideration of Congress and of the American people to realize the truth of this matter. Find it out for yourselves and then let the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States and the State Department do what they see fit to help Mexico.

We want to help Mexico, but we want to help the people of Mexico and not the rulers of Mexico, who in their zeal are desirous of wiping out all religion—not only the Catholic religion but all religion—and are trying to introduce bolshevism not only into Mexico but into the United States and into the South American Republics. They will never succeed in the United States, but they may succeed in South America, and if they do we shall have plenty on our hands trying to put out the fires of bolshevism which they are lighting in their fanatical zeal to destroy all the ideals for which we stand—love of God, respect for law, freedom of conscience, life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, our inalienable rights. [Applause.]

I now quote from two great American newspapers on this subject:

AN AMERICAN OPINION

MEXICO'S LAW ON RELIGION

[Editorial from the Washington Post, August 4, 1926]

The policy adopted by the Mexican Government in dealing with ministers of religion and religious organizations is attracting world-wide attention on account of the novel and drastic details of the law issued by President Calles under date of June 14. While the Catholic Church is most vitally affected, this is merely because the Mexican membership of that church is larger than that of all other denominations combined. All religious organizations, including religious orders, are affected by the law, as well as all ministers of the gospel and all church property.

The law issued by President Calles purports to be in pursuance of the constitution, and in many sections the constitution is clearly obeyed. Other sections, however, seem to be in direct conflict with the constitution of Mexico.

The purpose of the law is stated to be the elimination of religious influence in national political affairs and the complete separation of church and state. If this were the only purpose, and if the law accomplished no more and no less than this, it would command the respect of those who are convinced that church and state must be kept separate in a republic. It confiscates church property, denies the right of the clergy of any denomination to hold services or administer sacraments elsewhere than in churches under governmental scrutiny, denies the liberty of the press, strips all religious persons of distinctive garb, prohibits all religious organizations from acquiring real estate, and confiscates seminaries, colleges, and asylums, as well as churches, bishoprics, parish houses, etc.

The law conforms to the Mexican constitution by requiring that no person not of Mexican birth shall exercise the ministry of any cult.

Rigorous penalties are prescribed for violations of the law and for failure on the part of any official authority to enforce the law.

The right of the Mexican nation to deal with religion as it sees fit can not be questioned by any other nation so long as no other nation's citizens are injured. Any injury to foreigners resulting from the execution of Mexico's new law would be properly the subject of inquiry by the government affected, notwithstanding the declarations that the law is a purely domestic measure.

Without raising the question of President Calles's authority to issue a law which in important particulars seems to transgress the constitution of Mexico it can not be doubted that the Mexican nation is deeply injured by this reactionary and intolerant action. Even if the law were well within the bounds of the constitution, it strikes a blow at religious freedom and freedom of speech and of the press. The fact that the law is enthusiastically approved and supported by the communistic elements of Mexico leads the outside world to suspect that communism has a firm hold upon the Mexican Government and has led it into the folly of imitating the Russian Soviet in attempting to destroy religion. Nothing but disorder, misfortune, and ultimate disaster can come from such a course in a free country in the twentieth century. Mexicans, with all their misgovernment, are free men, having the right of free speech, freedom of the press, freedom of assembly, freedom of worship, and the power to set up their own government. The destruction of religion and freedom of speech and of the press in Mexico is impossible, and only communists or other madmen would attempt to destroy the rights of a free people.

AMERICAN OPINION FORMING ON MEXICO

[Editorial from New York Evening Post, August 3, 1926]

American opinion is forming itself upon the mighty drama now being played in Mexico. Our people are watching the developments with an interest and an absence of passion that is as rare with us as it is grateful.

It might be taken for granted that American feeling would instinctively sympathize with any effort to bring about that separation between church and state which we have in this country. This is undoubtedly true. Yet our people, we believe, are watching Mexico to make sure whether there is in its governmental program a real effort to make the separation with due regard to freedom of conscience and of religious worship. They are also watching to see whether the church, in defense, may not go too far in its use of both lay and ecclesiastical weapons.

That the issue is not directly the concern of the United States seems to be an opinion generally held by our press. Yet a surprisingly general idea is spreading, despite whatever sympathy there may be with the fundamental idea of Calles's actions, that it appears clear that the church is a stabilizing influence in Mexico, that it is a bar against present bolshevic tendencies, and that without it the country may tend to slip back into a period of re-Indianization. Here there is at least an indirect development that may be of great importance to the United States in the future.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAGUARDIA] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, in the limited time I have I shall ask my colleagues not to request that I yield until I shall have finished reading part of the convention between the United States and England of May 22, 1924.

This treaty is popularly known as the "12-mile" treaty. At the time it was negotiated the country was informed that a great victory had been obtained by the United States and that the treaty would be of incalculable assistance in the enforcement of the prohibition laws. First, the country was led to believe that the right of search and seizure for liquor was extended 12 miles out at sea. Secondly, when the drys complained of the traffic of liquor on foreign steamships and insisted that the Government take action it placed the United States Government in a most peculiar and difficult situation, so the people of the country were told that satisfactory arrangements had been made with England in this treaty placing liquor under absolute control. The drys were happy, passengers on board foreign steamships, many of them ardent and active drys at home, got all the liquor they want, and everybody was happy. This treaty with England formed the basis for similar arrangements with other countries whose ships are engaged in regular passenger traffic to and from ports of the United States. Now, let us see just what the treaty does. In the first place, the 12-mile idea is little more than fiction. The very first article is a declaration on the part of both contracting parties to uphold the principle that 3 marine miles constitute the proper limits of territorial waters. Then it simply provides that the British Government will raise no objection to a boarding of private vessels under the British flag in order that "inquiries may be addressed to those on board and an examination be made of the ship's papers" for the purpose of ascertaining if the ship's papers contained a list of liquor on board or if the ship's officers will admit having liquor on board. It provides that the ship may be seized if it is caught engaged in violation of any laws of the United States; but that right, I submit, the United States Government always had. But note that the right conferred to board the ship is not 12 miles, as the public was led to believe, but is limited to "no greater distance from the coast than can be traversed in one hour by the vessel suspected," and so forth, or if any other vessel is engaged in conveying the liquor from that vessel to shore the distance is one hour of speed of the vessel conveying from the ship to the shore and not the ship itself. If it is a sail ship, this so-called 12-mile treaty does not extend the distance beyond territorial waters an inch. What is the speed of a vessel? That is a matter of fact which must be determined in each individual case. So that I fail to see where any advantage was obtained by the United States Government in the extension of territorial waters or of its right of search and seizure. On the other hand, the United States surrendered entirely, it seems to me, its right to prevent foreign steamships from having liquor on board while in territorial waters.

If liquor is found on the Leviathan or any other American ship—and I say if it is found, or perhaps it would be better to say if the prohibition officials look for it and find it—it constitutes a crime, for such possession being unlawful, and the officers of the ship and the ship itself is liable. In other words, an American ship is not permitted to have liquor on board at any time, but in article 3 of the convention the United States Government specifically and expressly contracted and agreed that—> no penalty or forfeiture under the laws of the United States shall be applicable or attached to alcoholic liquors or to vessels or persons by reason of the carriage of such liquors, when such liquors are listed as sea stores or cargo, etc., provided that such liquor shall be kept under seal.

That sure is one big concession. Why, it makes everybody on board ship immune and legalizes the ship to carry all the liquor it wants. Of course, there is a technical requirement of placing the liquor under seal. There is no provision as to what happens if the liquor is taken, the seal notwithstanding. There is no provision as to how this liquor should be listed or how the list should be verified by United States officials. So that it would be an extremely difficult thing to convict or even to indict a foreign vessel knowingly bringing liquor into the United States conforming simply with the technical requirements of the treaty and permitting the liquor to be removed after it is here. Why, actual knowledge of the removal would have to be brought home not only to the officers of the ship but to the owners of the ship before the ship could be held liable in the face of the provisions of the treaty. So I do not hesitate to say that if anyone believes that the so-called 12-mile treaties are for the benefit of prohibition enforcement they are surely laboring under a gross misapprehension. It is another instance that shows that the enforcement of prohibition, considering usage and customs in other countries of the world, the commercial relations which we as a Nation must maintain with other nations, the traffic which must necessarily exist between this country and other countries, is simply impossible.

With permission of the House, I shall insert the whole of the treaty at the conclusion of my remarks, and if time will permit I will revert to it.

Now, I want to inform the House, as I have informed the Secretary of the Treasury to-day, of the existence of a bootleg syndicate in New York City and, as I am informed, at other ports of the United States, whereby the socially select can receive all the pure and good liquor they want as long as they have the price, the liquor coming direct from Europe on foreign ships. The syndicate operates in this way:

The first list of customers was obtained from the first-class passenger lists on the big steamers. During the summer travel contact is established, trade created, and during the fall and winter business in liquor flourishes. The list is naturally growing. They now know that on the arrival of any of the big steamers a fresh supply of aged and pure liquor is available. The syndicate employs a traffic manager, who receives orders and directs deliveries. This manager has his office down at 32 Broadway. His room number—well, perhaps I had better not give you that—but if the department takes the two winning points of America's favorite indoor sport, commonly known as "galloping dominoes," there will be little difficulty in finding it. The manager receives a salary, it is stated, of $12,500 a year.

How is the liquor gotten out? I will tell you. When a ship arrives at port, as you know, the baggage is inspected, and after it passes the customs inspector a customs stamp is put on the baggage. This [indicating] is one of the stamps. After the baggage leaves the pier and clears the customs line these stamps are surreptitiously taken from the baggage. The market price of these stamps now is one bottle of whisky for three used stamps.

I want to make it clear that I am convinced the customs inspectors are in no way involved in this. The stamps are taken off the baggage after the baggage leaves the pier and is out of the jurisdiction of the custom inspectors. I do believe that the collector of customs in New York has not been sufficiently diligent and, surely, far from alert. These stamps are given to the men on the ships in charge of the liquor. Then empty trunks are sent on the pier. The orders are filled and these stamps are placed on the trunks, which gives them clearance and delivered to the customer. Here [exhibiting] are some of the original orders for the liquor. So painstaking are these patrons in giving the order that with the order a diagram of the route showing exact location of place of delivery is often given with the order, so that there can be no mistake as to the delivery. I show you here [exhibiting] several such diagrams.

Here [exhibiting] is a large photographic copy of the diagram. Here is the original order from which the photo was made of an order from the executive office of a very large business. You would all know the name if I told you. Here is the order [exhibiting] and here is the diagram of place of delivery of another customer located in Westchester County of my State. Only a few days ago a certain gentleman assumed a hypocritical attitude in making a speech on prohibition and law enforcement before the Seamen's Institute, and I find him among the ready customers of this bootleg syndicate. Six thousand dollars' worth of liquor was delivered in one office in the Gray-Bar Building. A very fashionable store on Fifth Avenue in the thrifty thirties, dealing with women's apparel, receives orders openly, the liquor coming from this source. Here is a gentleman engaged in the insurance business in Philadelphia and New York who puts in an order for several cases of liquor.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. In a moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York declines to yield.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Here [exhibiting] is another order coming to Pelham, with a careful diagram of the locations. Here is a lady on Fifth Avenue; I have her order here [exhibiting]. This lady is prominent socially, sure has a versatile drinking taste, and her home will at least be well furnished for a cheerful Yuletide. Let me read her order, and I am reading from the original:

Six cases of Bollinger, 1919; 6 cases Old Tom gin; 6 cases Scotch; 2 cases French Vermouth; 1 case Italian Vermouth; 1 case Cointreaux and Chartreuse; 1 case liqueur brandy.

This little woman knows her liquor. It has been suggested to me that I give a typical order of a prominent business man. That is easy to do. I have quite an assortment here. Here is one, on the pad of a very prominent business man, and the pad bears the dignified caption, "Executive offices" [exhibiting]. Every New York Member would know this man, and I am sure a great many of the eastern Members know him by name. Here is his recent order from one of the large ships:

Five cases champagne, Paul Roger, 1917—

Apparently particular in the choice of his vintage—

5 cases whisky, Haig & Haig; 5 cases Gordon gin; 3 cases M. & R. Vermouth; 3 cases French Vermouth; 1 case Cointreaux; 1 Chartreuse, yellow; 1 Martel brandy.

That ends his order. Here is an order [exhibiting] from a hotel supply company. They use their own letterhead, but this firm seems to go in for Rhine wine, champagne, and not so strong on the whisky.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? If the gentleman gets all this evidence, what is the reason why the prohibition enforcement officers could not get it?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I can not answer why any official can not or will not get information that everyone else knows. The gentleman knows that every statement I made in this House in the last three or four years on flagrant violations of law has been substantiated. I gave the facts in the Ohio case, in the Indianapolis case; in the New York prohibition office I gave the facts straight in the Government-operation cases.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I am not questioning the accuracy of the evidence.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have recommended to the Secretary of the Treasury, gentlemen, that it is simply ridiculous to have a stamp like this [exhibiting] on baggage, and I recommended in my letter a different colored stamp for each pier and each day, and the particular stamp not to be known until the baggage is ready for delivery, the baggage which remains overnight to be inspected anew.

I am pointing this out, gentlemen, in the course of the attitude I have assumed in attempting to convince you gentlemen who believe the prohibition law is being enforced that it is not being enforced and that it is humanly impossible to enforce it.

These are not exceptional cases. I would have had several hundreds of these orders but my informant weakened. He believed he might be identified through particular orders and he feared for his life. I can assure you the facts are just as I have stated and we have photographs of trunks that are used over and over again, besides original orders. It is an organized business.

On the door of this traffic manager's office appears the name of a reputable director of scenarios, who knows nothing about this and is out somewhere making pictures. Certainly the department can run this system down and put an end to it. I will give the Secretary of the Treasury all the information I have.

Now, let us get back to the treaty.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman give the names?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes. Of the sellers.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Is the gentleman willing to give the names of the consumers, the purchasers?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. No; it is no crime to buy.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Well, it ought to be.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I can not help that. This is what you have done in your treaty of May 22, 1924, in order to obtain the privilege of boarding a vessel 12 miles out, which you do not do. You have provided in Article III that—

No penalty or forfeiture under the laws of the United States shall be applicable or attach to alcoholic liquors or to vessels or persons by reason of the carriage of such liquors.

All they have to do is to constructively place liquor under seal, which means absolutely nothing.

The liquor I am talking about comes from such well-known ships as the Majestic, Olympia, Homeric, Aquitania, Berengaria, Mauretania, I'le de France, Paris, Conte Brancamano, Conte Rosso, Duilio, and others.

There are your facts. Now, gentlemen, is it fair to the people in New York who are being poisoned by the stuff that is being sold, and if one of my constituents has a pint in his possession he is hailed to court and is put on trial while those who are mighty and favored have this means of having distributed to them large quantities of their favorite brands and choice vintages?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield for just one more brief question?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Does not the gentleman think it is his duty as a citizen and as a Member of Congress to put the Treasury Department and the Department of Justice in possession of all these facts?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I have already done so, and in my time I will ask the Clerk to read this letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., December 16, 1927.

Hon. ANDREW W. MELLON,
Secretary of the Treasury, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have learned of a system of liquor importation prevalent in all large ports which I believe can be stopped by administrative measures and not requiring any special legislation. It is just another instance illustrating the hopelessness of ever enforcing the prohibition law. Nevertheless, until the law is changed, action should be taken to prevent the continuance of the disgraceful conditions now in vogue.

Customs stamps placed on passengers' baggage after due inspection and for the purpose of passing the custom guard on the piers are removed from the baggage after it leaves the jurisdiction of the custom officials and then sold to a bootleg syndicate operating from the big passenger ships. One bottle of whisky for three used custom stamps is the last market price. I want to make it clear that these stamps are taken from the passengers' baggage after it leaves the piers, and I am certain that custom officials are in no way involved in these illegal transactions. I believe, however, that the collector of customs at New York has not been sufficiently diligent and far from alert.

Patrons desiring liquor of imported brands send their orders either through a representative of the syndicate, who operates from an office in lower Manhattan, or direct to the ship. Old trunks are brought on the pier and filled with liquor. These trunks are used over and over again. The purloined stamps are applied to the trunks and thereby get clearance from the piers. I have before me several original orders for liquor and have some custom stamps which were so used. I would have had possession of a great amount of original orders, but my informant weakened, as he was in fear of his life if his identity were established through the original orders to which he had access.

The liquor is brought here by large, first-class de luxe passenger ships engaged in trans-Atlantic service.

I make the following suggestions:

Immediate change of customs stamps; the use of different colored stamps for each day and each pier, the color not to be known until all baggage is ready for clearance from the dock; also baggage remaining overnight or leaving the pier another day should be again inspected. Strips should be pasted across the openings of the trunks or baggage and escorted to the pier exit by custom guards.

I submit these suggestions, based on my information of what is going on in New York and other ports, and feel that as long as this impossible law is on the statute books and the poor people of my city are being poisoned or haled to court for the possession of a pint, this source of special vintages for the mighty and favored should be stopped without further delay.

Yours very truly,

F. LAGUARDIA.

[Applause.]

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The treaty referred to in my remarks is as follows:

Convention between the United States and Great Britain for prevention of smuggling of intoxicating liquors. Signed at Washington, January 23, 1924; ratification advised by the Senate, March 13, 1924; ratified by the President, March 21, 1924; ratified by Great Britain, April 30, 1924; ratifications exchanged at Washington, May 22, 1924; proclaimed, May 22, 1924

By the President of the United States of America.

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas a convention between the United States of America and Great Britain to aid in the prevention of the smuggling of intoxicating liquors into the United States was concluded and signed by their respective plenipotentiaries at Washington on the 23d day of January, 1924, the original of which convention is word for word as follows:

The President of the United States of America;

And His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India;

Being desirous of avoiding any difficulties which might arise between them in connection with the laws in force in the United States on the subject of alcoholic beverages;

Have decided to conclude a convention for that purpose;

And have appointed as their plenipotentiaries

The President of the United States of America;

Charles Evans Hughes, Secretary of State of the United States;

His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, Emperor of India;

The Right Hon. Sir Auckland Campbell Geddes, G. C. M. G., K. C. B., his ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the United States of America;

Who having communicated their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed as follows:

ARTICLE I

The high contracting parties declare that it is their firm intention to uphold the principle that 3 marine miles extending from the coastline outwards and measured from low-water mark constitute the proper limits of territorial waters.

ARTICLE II

(1) His Britannic Majesty agrees that he will raise no objection to the boarding of private vessels under the British flag outside the limits of territorial waters by the authorities of the United States, its Territories or possessions, in order that enquiries may be addressed to those on board and an examination be made of the ship's papers for the purpose of ascertaining whether the vessel or those on board are endeavoring to import or have imported alcoholic beverages into the United States, its Territories or possessions, in violation of the laws there in force. When such enquiries and examination show a reasonable ground for suspicion a search of the vessel may be instituted.

(2) If there is reasonable cause for belief that the vessel has committed or is committing or attempting to commit an offense against the laws of the United States, its Territories or possessions, prohibiting the imporation of alcoholic beverages, the vessel may be seized and taken into a port of the United States, its Territories or possessions, for adjudication in accordance with such laws.

(3) The rights conferred by this article shall not be exercised at a greater distance from the coast of the United States, its Territories or possessions, than can be traversed in one hour by the vessel suspected of endeavoring to commit the offense. In cases, however, in which the liquor is intended to be conveyed to the United States, its Territories or possessions, by a vessel other than the one boarded and searched, it shall be the speed of such other vessel and not the speed of the vessel boarded which shall determine the distance from the coast at which the right under this article can be exercised.

ARTICLE III

No penalty or forfeiture under the laws of the United States shall be applicable or attach to alcoholic liquors or to vessels or persons by reason of the carriage of such liquors when such liquors are listed as sea stores or cargo destined for a port foreign to the United States, its Territories or possessions, on board British vessels voyaging to or from ports of the United States, or its Territories or possessions, or passing through the territorial waters thereof, and such carriage shall be as now provided by law with respect to the transit of such liquors through the Panama Canal, provided that such liquors shall be kept under seal continuously while the vessel on which they are carried remains within said territorial waters, and that no part of such liquors shall at any time or place be unladen within the United States, its Territories or possessions.

ARTICLE IV

Any claim by a British vessel for compensation on the grounds that it has suffered loss or injury through the improper or unreasonable exercise of the rights considered by Article II of this treaty, or on the ground that it has not been given the benefit of Article III, shall be referred for the joint consideration of two persons, one of whom shall be nominated by each of the high contracting parties.

Effect shall be given to the recommendations contained in any such joint report. If no joint report can be agreed upon, the claim shall be referred to the claims commission established under the provisions of the agreement for the settlement of outstanding pecuniary claims, signed at Washington, August 18, 1910, but the claim shall not, before submission to the tribunal, required to be included in a schedule of claims confirmed in the manner therein provided.

ARTICLE V

This treaty shall be subject to ratification and shall remain in force for a period of one year from the date of the exchange of ratifications.

Three months before the expiration of the said period of one year either of the high contracting parties may give notice of its desire to propose modifications in the terms of the treaty.

If such modifications have not been agreed upon before the expiration of the term of one year mentioned above, the treaty shall lapse.

If no notice is given on either side of the desire to propose modifications, the treaty shall remain in force for another year, and so on automatically, but subject always in respect of each such period of a year to the right on either side to propose as provided above three months before its expiration modifications in the treaty, and to the provision that if such modifications are not agreed upon before the close of the period of one year, the treaty shall lapse.

ARTICLE VI

In the event that either of the high contracting parties shall be prevented either by judicial decision or legislative action from giving full effect to the provisions of the present treaty the said treaty shall automatically lapse, and on such lapse, or whenever this treaty shall cease to be in force, each high contracting party shall enjoy all the rights which it would have possessed had this treaty not been concluded.

The present convention shall be duly ratified by the President of the United States of America, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate thereof, and by His Britannic Majesty, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible.

In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the present convention in duplicate and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done at the city of Washington this 23d day of January, A. D. 1924.

[SEAL.] CHARLES EVANS HUGHES.

[SEAL.] A. C. GEDDES.

And whereas the said convention has been duly ratified on both parts, and the ratifications of the two Governments were exchanged in the city of Washington on the 22d day of May, 1924;

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States of America, have caused the said convention to be made public, to the end that the same and every article and clause thereof may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 22d day of May, A. D. 1924, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-eighth.

[SEAL.] CALVIN COOLIDGE.

By the President:

CHARLES E. HUGHES,

Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. Under the special order of the House the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD] is recognized for 15 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I do not come to carry to the House this morning an argument in behalf of any great governmental problem. I come rather to speak for a moment with reference to the soul of sentiment, if you please—a sentiment which it seems to me must animate every American citizen.

A sage once said that the best protection a republican form of government could possibly have is a satisfied ex-soldiery. I think this House has been doing fairly well in trying to prove its loyalty to the expression of that sage, but I ask it to take one step more in that good direction.

I come this morning to offer to my friends not an oratorical effort. You were told by our Speaker, who is always kind, that somebody would come to-day and bring down the oratorical stars and juggle them before you. But that is not for me. I come to you simply to call your attention to a modest little bill which has been introduced here—a bill to provide a plan for the holding in this Capital City next year of a joint reunion of the survivors of the armies of the blue and of the gray.

I do not know what better service in my capacity as a Member of this Congress I might render to my people and to my country generally than the service of doing my part in every way possible to obliterate the last remnant of ill feeling between the sections of the North and the sections of the South as we once knew them. [Applause.] Some might ask who inspired me to introduce this bill, which I now refer to as House bill No. 5577. Well, my inspiration might be said to have come directly from a wonderful veteran of the Civil War who lives in my own country, Hon. Lucius D. Richards, of Fremont, Nebr., aided and abetted by his able coadjutor, Judge Morley Cain, a prince of the house of Humanity. Those two, I presume, more than any others, are responsible for the inspiration. I feel I have a perfect right to propose this legislation because of the fact that I am about as far removed from sectional feeling with reference to that great struggle as any man might be. I recall, by recitation of my elders, that in the days of the strife about one-third of the men of the blood of my kinsmen were in the Union Army, about one-third in the Confederate Army, and about one-third (being Quakers) were ministering to the sick and wounded on both sides. So I feel fully authorized to bear to the attention of the House a proposition of this kind.

Mr. JONES. May I interrupt the gentleman to ask a question?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. Can the gentleman give us any estimate of how many are left among the old soldiers on either side?

Mr. HOWARD of Nebraska. Oh, yes; I can give you an estimate, and not only an estimate, I can give you the facts; and in the presentation of a case of this kind I want to deal with fact as well as with sentiment.

According to the report of the Commissioner of Pensions, who has better knowledge on this score, perhaps, than any other, I am informed that on the last day of November of this year there were still living 84,478 men who served in the Union Army. Now, I take it for granted that approximately the same number survive with reference to the Confederate side. How many would be able to attend such a reunion? I have talked with many of the old soldiers on both sides, and the general estimate is that the number would be less than 10,000. How do I gather that, or, rather, how do they reach that estimate? They reach it by taking the figures of the Pension Commissioner, which show that in round numbers 50,000 of the 80,000 living Union soldiers are now physically incapacitated, requiring the constant aid and attention of some other person to care for them because of infirmity; and of the remainder, the estimate is made by those who have taken account of the attendance at the annual reunions of the Grand Army of the Republic and of the United Confederate Veterans.

Oh, my friends, it is not so much the number; it is not so much the cost that this will be, for, indeed, while I am an extreme economist, as you all know, with reference to a sentiment of this kind the subject of cost does not come into or under my own consideration.

Out here this morning on the steps of the Capitol we witnessed the return of some captured Confederate flags by the people of the Northern State of Maine to the people of North Carolina. Those people up there in Maine, whom the southerners used to call the cold-blooded Yankees, are now warm, and they come down here bearing their captured flags to the North Carolinians, and I understand that if North Carolina did capture flags from the Maine regiments she has already or is to return them to the State of Maine.

I recall an incident a little while ago when the State of New Jersey, through its governor, returned some Confederate flags to a Southern State—I think it was North Carolina also—and here I have a little editorial from the New York Times, which says of that action:

The decision of the Governor of New Jersey to return to North Carolina flags of that State captured by New Jersey regiments during the Civil War will be approved in the North as well as in the South. Ever since the World War brought the sons of northern and southern veterans into close contact, the last remaining vestige of regional feeling has disappeared. The North has taken Lee to heart as a great American. The South has recognized the splendor of Lincoln. As one mark of the new spirit, many Confederate flags taken by northern troops and Union flags taken by the southerners have been returned. In following this custom New Jersey is contributing her share to the obliteration of unpleasant memories.

My friends, I would have you understand that my greatest thought, my greatest desire in presenting this little bill for this proposed reunion is that I may play a small part in obliterating those unhappy memories.

Now, the bill is very simple. It provides that there shall be a commission appointed, consisting of the General of the United States Army, the governors of the several States, and such persons as the President of the United States may be pleased to appoint, to have general charge of the reunion.

Some might say that a commission comprising all of the governors of the States would be unwieldy and that the governors could not come to Washington to meet very frequently; but you all know that here in the city of Washington is domiciled a splendid citizen from every State in the Union, many of them, and it would always be easy for the governor to appoint a proxy from his own State. I do not think this would be objectionable. I do not think of any better plea that I might leave with you, my friends, as a last remark on this subject, than to quote some of the utterances by the splendid ones who have represented us in high capacity in our Government in peace and in war.

I recall—it may have been at Appomattox, I do not know, but certainly soon thereafter—when the great General Grant uttered that immortal expression, "Let us have peace." It was only a little while after that that the wonderful Lee said, "We are all one now." It was not long after when dear, old General Gordon said, "The American people will forever remain an unbroken brotherhood from sea to sea"; and it was not long after when the princely McKinley said, "Let us strew flowers alike on the graves of those who wore the Blue and those who wore the Gray, for American valor is the common heritage of the Nation."

Living here in Washington to-day is a wonderful old soldier of the Confederacy. Ah, he knew what service was and he knew what suffering was. He was in the war for four and a half years, and the last part of it he spent in prison. His heart is so full of a desire to accomplish a final wiping away of all thought of bitterness between the two peoples that he has written a poem which has been set to music under the caption "The blend of the blue and the gray." I refer to Maj. John Alleine Brown, of Washington City. I know that many of you are personally acquainted with him, and I would like to leave as my closing plea in behalf of the proposed joint reunion the inspiring lines by Major Brown:

THE BLEND OF THE BLUE AND THE GRAY

By J. Alleine Brown

Oh, swell the song of kindred fame,
And blow, ye bugles, blow;
Nor more doth burn with heated flame
The passion of the foe;
The battle long hath ceased to rage,
There is no battle line.
The Nation's pride engraves the page,
Its joy invests the shrine.

The blend of blue lights up the gray,
The blend of gray the blue;
Together now those colors sway
With inspiration new.
'Tis patriot hands that sweep the lyre;
They chant on high their lay;
The blue invokes the Nation's choir,
"My country," sings the gray.

Then chant the blended blue and gray,
Tho' once they faced each other;
Those tattered ensigns furled away
Proclaim the name of brother.
We've found at last the vaulted sky
For us o'erspread alway;
Eternally the blue on high
Blends with the morning gray.

[Applause.]

THE ALIEN PROPERTY BILL

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7201) to provide for the settlement of certain claims of American nationals against Germany and of German nationals against the United States, commonly known as the alien property bill.

Pending that motion I would ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] if we can agree on time for general debate?

Mr. COLLIER. Does the gentleman from Iowa want general debate confined to the bill? I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think it will be necessary, and I will not ask for it.

Mr. COLLIER. An agreement was practically made yesterday that the general debate would go on to-day and be concluded to-day with an additional hour when we took up the bill again on Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the general debate on this side can be concluded to-day, and I will ask the gentleman from Mississippi if he can not get along with less than an hour on Monday or Tuesday?

Mr. COLLIER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX] informs me that he can get along with 40 minutes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, perhaps we better make it an hour, for I may want to make a few observations myself.

Mr. COLLIER. I have one or two other Members who say they want a little time on Monday, but I know that was not in the request that I made yesterday. Does not the gentleman think we can conclude the bill on the first legislative day?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; I do not; because there are some other matters that will come on before it.

Mr. TILSON. Can not the other gentlemen that the gentleman from Mississippi speaks of go on to-day? There will be plenty of time to-day for all who wish to speak, with the exception of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COLLIER. I think the hour will be sufficient unless the gentleman from Iowa wants to take up too much of the extra 20 minutes.

Mr. TILSON. Let the gentleman from Mississippi ask for an hour and 20 minutes on Monday or Tuesday; he need not use all of it.

Mr. COLLIER. Yes; I will ask for an hour and 20 minutes, providing 1 hour of that time is given to me.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue during this day and not to exceed 1 hour and 20 minutes on the next day that the discussion of the bill is resumed; that the time to-day be controlled one half by the gentleman from Mississippi and the other half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that general debate shall continue to-day until the House adjourns, one-half to be controlled by himself and one-half by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER], and not to exceed 1 hour and 20 minutes on the next day on which the bill is taken up. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. GREEN of Iowa was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. MAPES in the chair.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, before making any remarks on the bill, if any gentleman on this side of the aisle wants time in general debate I would like to have him make known his wishes to-day.

Mr. Chairman, the bill which is now presented to the House is in all its essential features the same as the one passed by an overwhelming majority in the House at the last session. There is no change whatever in its principles, in its policies, its ratio of payment, or in any particular except to make some improvements in its wording and on some comparatively unessential matters to make provision for certain things that were overlooked in the former bill.

Mr. Chairman, the aftermath of a great war always brings problems, and none of the problems that have been presented by reason of the conclusion of that war have been so perplexing as those arising out of the seizure of German property and the claims of American citizens against the German Government.

Whenever a solution has been sought it has been found that the discussion involves not only international law but also international policies of the Government from the very day it first came into existence. It must take into consideration the treaties of Versailles and of Berlin, which fixed the terms upon which peace was restored. It must examine negotiations and agreements between our diplomatic representatives and those of other countries. In short, it includes a study of the policies, treaties, and agreements in order to determine the proper basis of settlement; but even when all this is done, there remains one matter which has contributed more than anything else to the difficulties of settlement, and that is that Germany is not in any position to make immediate payment of the claims which may be established against her and which she rightfully ought to pay. If this was out of the way the solution would be comparatively easy.

Out of this tangled web of international policies, of treaties, of diplomatic negotiations, claims against our Government on the one hand and against the German Government on the other, threads can be picked out here and there upon which fine-spun and plausible arguments can be and have been constructed in favor of various theories, none of which, when considered by itself alone, leads to a solution of the problem. So difficult was this solution that four years passed after the war before anybody even ventured to make the suggestion as to how it ought to be solved. I do not think that any committee ever worked harder than the Ways and Means Committee did over the various bills that were submitted to it. It struggled for more than two months to no avail. The complications were such and the claims of the various parties so conflicting that there seemed to be no way of reconciling them, and no possible way out of the difficulty. Various plans were proposed and several submitted in the form of bills. I shall not discuss the propositions. Those who were Members of the House at a previous session are more or less familiar with them. I shall only say that so much opposition developed to all of them that none gave rise to any reasonable expectation that any of them could be passed by Congress, and upon none of them was the committee in complete accord. Nothing was done, and the whole matter went over to another session of the committee held a year ago last fall in advance of the session of Congress. In the meantime the demands of the claimants became more urgent and more pressing. Many of the claimants were experiencing severe financial stress by reason of this long and, as it appears to them, unwarranted delay.

After having had all of these hearings—and we had three separate sets of hearings—and after all our proceedings so far had come to naught, I said in the presence of the representatives of the various claimants that if this matter continued in the present form very much longer the chances would be that nothing would ever be done for any of the claimants on either side, and that the claims in this case might eventually be carried along and carried along until their fate was similar to that of the French spoliation claims—perfectly good—but those claims have been before Congress for more than a hundred years and nothing has ever been done with them. I said to the respective parties at that time that unless each party was willing to make some concession, come to some form of compromise about this matter, that we never would be able to get anywhere, and that it was imperatively necessary that they do so if they ever expected to realize upon their claims. Very much to my surprise, when I made this statement the claimants manifested a great deal of interest in the situation in the way of meeting and seeking out some sort of compromise in the matter. I made a suggestion to them at the time that instead of each claimant demanding that his claim be paid in full at once that each claimant concede that he should get only a part of his claim now and the rest of it later, but that all on both sides should eventually be paid and satisfied according to some just and fair rule; and I told them that if they were willing to do that it was probable that the committee could reach a solution of the problems that were before it. So the representatives of the German claimants and the representatives of the American claimants finally got together, and they agreed on this plan which is stated in the bill. I do not present it as an ideal solution of the problems which were presented to the committee. I do not say that in all respects it is fair and just in the abstract. I say that it is the best practical solution that could be worked out under the circumstances, and one which is so nearly just and so nearly fair that the parties on both sides are willing and desirous, I might say eager and anxious, to have it accepted.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Is it provided under the bill that enough German property shall be retained in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian to insure the payment of claims that Americans hold against Germany for property destroyed by that country during the war and before we went into the war?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is provision made for that, though not entirely out of the property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, but in other ways, as the gentleman will see as I proceed.

Mr. COX. The gentleman is not seeking to exercise the powers reserved to the Government under the Berlin treaty; that is, the holding of alien-enemy property as security for the payment of claims?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, yes; and if the gentleman will read the report he will see that.

Mr. COX. I read the report, but I did not put that construction upon it. In part, the idea may be involved in the solution the gentleman offers, but I do not see that it is fully carried out.

Mr. HUDSPETH. That is what I am interested in—whether you retain enough to insure the payment of our claims against the German Government for property of Americans that was destroyed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Let me go a little further with my statement, and I think, if the gentleman pleases, I will answer these questions. At the previous session of Congress there were many propositions for the disposition and settlement of these claims. The first involved a virtual confiscation of the German property which was in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian and its application to the payment of American claims. This plan, I think, met with so little support in Congress that it hardly needs be discussed at this time. I am quite sure that a great majority of the House were against the confiscation of private property seized in time of war, and believe that such property should ultimately be returned.

Mr. COX. What definition does the gentleman give to the term "confiscation"?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will let me proceed I will be obliged.

The other plan required a large appropriation, not only to pay what the Government might owe for the ships, radio stations, and patents to which I have referred, but also to pay the American claimants. There was one other plan, I believe, which contemplated taking that portion of the reparation funds which was to be paid on account of our army of occupation, and applying it on the American claims. These plans were carefully considered by the committee. So much objection was made to making an appropriation on behalf of the Government to pay claims of individuals, or even to the use of the funds that were to be paid on account of our army of occupation, that no action was taken on the bills which carried these plans, and the whole matter, as I have said, went over until this session.

The lack of funds to pay the American claims required some new plan to be devised. Germany was a bankrupt nation. Whatever it could pay was being seized by the Allies. The committee also considered that any plan which would be acceptible to the House and to the Congress must provide for four matters which are stated in the report.

First. The settlement of the claims of the United States and its nationals against Germany and its nationals;

Second. The settlement of the claims of Germany and its nationals against the United States.

Third. The return of the property held by the Alien Property Custodian which was seized during the war as the private property of citizens of the countries with which we were at war.

Fourth—and I think this a very important and essential feature of the bill. The temporary retention of sufficient German property to reasonably insure the payment of American claims and a return of the property which is properly held as fast as American claims are paid.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield there? What does the gentleman mean by "temporary retention of a part of the alien property"? In the statement of policy you promise ultimately to return it. In this same statement of policy you undertake to have the Government guarantee the ultimate payment of claims of our nationals.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman please make his speech in his own time?

Mr. COX. If the gentleman does not desire to yield to a question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not know how I could make it any more plain. The expression "temporary retention" means we will retain it for a time and eventually turn it over.

Mr. COX. But the gentleman certainly does not object to informing the House what he means by "temporary retention"?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I say, holding the property for a time until the American claims are paid, and gradually, as they are paid, we will release the property.

Mr. COX. This is the question, if the gentleman will yield: Do you condition the promise made by the bill for the ultimate payment of the German nationals upon the German Government fulfilling its obligations under the Dawes plan?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No. The gentleman will have plenty of time to make his argument.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With pleasure.

Mr. RAYBURN. I think the question of the gentleman from Georgia is more pertinent than the gentleman thinks it is. I had something to do with alien property matters in the beginning. The gentleman from Georgia is trying to differentiate—and very properly—the indefinite holding of property and confiscation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I thought I made it plain.

Mr. RAYBURN. What the gentleman means by this temporary business is possibly the very principle which underlies this bill.

Mr. COLLIER. If the gentleman will yield for a moment, I think, with all deference to both of my colleagues the gentleman from Georgia and the gentleman from Texas, it strikes me they have got the matter confused between a long-delayed payment and confiscation. This is simply a long-delayed payment. There is nothing indefinite. Any man can take a pencil and by figuring obtain the very last year of payment.

Mr. COX. Not at all. The point I am trying to develop, and which is supported by the admission of the gentleman having the floor, is that this bill means confiscation of alien private property. What if the German Government fails to keep its engagement under the Dawes plan with this Government acting not only in behalf of both itself and its nationals? That is the point I want to see developed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is open to my friend to make his argument later on. If the gentleman will examine the bill, he will find it does not provide for anything of the kind. I hope the gentleman will not state that I admit matters which I expressly deny.

The committee also considered it to be essential to any of the plans to be considered to make no discrimination for or against the German payments on the one hand or the American payments on the other. I think I can state the essential features of the plan in a few words.

Under this plan the German and the American claimants are each and all to receive the greater part of their claims when the proposed law goes into full effect and operation, and the remainder is to be deferred and paid out of the 2¼ per cent of the Dawes reparation fund.

It will be observed that there were three existing items requiring funds for payment.

First. The German claims for property seized by the Alien Property Custodian. The funds for the payment of the undeferred part of these claims were available in the hands of the custodian himself, and under the control of this Government.

Second. The payment of the part not deferred of the German claims for ships or radio stations, and so forth, taken over by the American Government. For the payment of these claims an appropriation must be made, it being generally conceded that our Government was liable therefor and ought to settle these claims. I am aware that that is a matter as to which there may be some discussion. I am speaking now only in general terms, but I will say this in this connection, that in negotiations had between the diplomatic representatives of our Government and those of England it was conceded that if we finally appropriate any of these ships or confiscate the radio stations or the patents, the value thereof should be taken out of our share of the reparation payments. In other words, we must pay for them one way or the other, and I am quite clear that it is better that we pay under a plan whereby we determine the measure of their value.

You will find a full report of that in Senate Document No. 173, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, which contains the correspondence of our Secretary of State with the representative of the English Government with reference to the reparation claims.

Now, as I said, this bill is not an ideal solution of the question. If it were possible to do so, the best way would be to pay all these claims in full on both sides, but there is no way in which that can be done. We worked faithfully and long upon the bill.

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. ARNOLD. I understand this is practically the same bill that was passed at the last session?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; with some slight differences.

Mr. ARNOLD. Can the gentleman state briefly what the differences are?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I can take them and point them out to the gentleman, outside of verbal changes.

Mr. COX. There are a number of changes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Only a few outside of purely verbal changes.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. I think if the gentleman from Iowa can state specifically in his remarks in the RECORD just what the changes are it will be helpful, so that anyone can readily ascertain the facts. It will be helpful to the entire membership of the House if it appears in the RECORD. Please state just what the changes are in the bill from the bill of last Congress.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is a change on page 3, lines 19 and 20. That is a technical, clarifying change. It provides that "The amount so deducted shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts."

Mr. HUDSPETH. What did the old bill provide?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It left it to implication.

There is a change also on page 12, lines 6 and 7, which is merely a verbal change. It does not alter the effect of the bill.

There is also a change on page 20, subsection (d), a rewording, carrying out the purpose of the former law. Subsection (d) is rewritten in a more simple form. It provides now that—

> Fifty per cent of the amounts appropriated under the authority of section 4 shall be available for payments under paragraphs (6) and (7) of subsection (c) of this section, and shall be available only for such payments until such time as the payments authorized by such paragraphs have been completed.

Then on page 21 there is a new subsection (g) added, which the committee deemed necessary to prevent any possibility of double payment. Subsection (g) provides:

> That there shall be deducted from the amounts first payable under this section to any American national in respect of any debt, the amount, if any, paid by the Alien Property Custodian in respect of such debt which was not credited by the Mixed Claims Commission in making its award.

Now, the reason for this paragraph is that the American nationals who had claims against any German who had property with the Alien Property Custodian could file his claim with the Alien Property Custodian and might get his claim allowed against this property. He could also proceed before the Mixed Claims Commission and get it allowed there. This resulted in a situation where it was possible to get a double allowance, and the purpose of subsection (g) is simply to prevent any party from getting a double payment.

Now, there is a change on page 24, line 13. The matter inclosed in parenthesis is added to make it certain that the rights of American creditors against property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian will not be interfered with in the retention of property of the German Government. This is in harmony with the new subsection (p), on page 34 of the bill.

On page 26, paragraph (e) has been added to make it certain that future payments from the fund to the Alien Property Custodian will be distributed pro rata to the German owners of the property.

On page 32 there is a change in the wording in the parenthesis in lines 6 and 7, where we have provided that the valuation by the Alien Property Custodian, in preparing for the return of the property, should be made "at the time, as near as may be, of the return."

There is also a sentence added on lines 19 and 20 and 21 in the wording, in harmony with the provision on page 24, line 13, heretofore explained.

On page 34 there is a new paragraph, subsection (p), which is inserted to take care of a situation not covered by the previous bill.

Then, in lines 24 and 25, at the bottom of page 34 and at the top of page 35, the wording has been changed somewhat in order to clarify the provision. It reads now:

The Alien Property Custodian shall allocate among the various trusts the funds in the "unallocated interest fund (as defined in section 28). Such allocation shall be made under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and shall be based upon the average rate of earnings (determined by the Secretary of the Treasury) on the total amounts deposited under section 12."

Subsection (b), on page 35, has also been rewritten, because the payment of interest out of the unallocated interest fund is now well cared for by court decisions and opinions of the Attorney General not in existence at the time the bill was under consideration last Congress.

On page 36, section 28 has been rewritten, but there is no substantial change in policy.

Section 29 is new, for the purpose of carrying out further the purposes of the act.

There was some objection made to the original bill reported by the committee last year by the Alien Property Custodian in that it prevented him from seizing further property when under the law it ought to be seized and should be taken. Also, there was an objection made that if the law stood as we had it in the original bill he would have to take the whole property seized, if he enforced the outstanding demands, when the bill provided for the return of 80 per cent.

Mr. COX. Are we to understand that the Alien Property Custodian is to exercise war power in these times of peace by the further seizure of alien property?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is no question but what all Germans ought to be treated in the same kind of way, as far as that is concerned. All of section 29 is new, to prevent the harsh enforcement of demands made during the war.

Section 14, on page 38, is also new. It deals with the return of income, and provides for unlimited return of income accruing after the bill becomes law, and considers all income prior thereto the same as other property held by the custodian.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. What is the total amount found by the Mixed Claims Commission to be due to American claimants, approximately?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The awards, with interest, as stated in the report, amount to $186,000,000.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. How much of this German property will be retained to insure the payments provided under the bill?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Twenty per cent of it will be retained.

Mr. COX. It will be more than that when you add unallocated interest.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, yes; with the unallocated interest it will be more.

Mr. COX. That is a part of the principal, of course.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is a part of the German property, as I view it.

Mr. COX. There will be about 40 per cent, will there not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, it may be very nearly that; I am not sure.

Mr. HOOPER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HOOPER. Has the Mixed Claims Commission entirely completed its work of adjudicating these claims?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They have practically completed their work.

Mr. HOOPER. Will the gentleman tell us what is the proportion of German claims against Americans and American claims against Germans?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The property of Germans in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, as stated in the report, amounts to $264,000,000, including the Austrian and Hungarian property, which, however, is not covered by this bill. Of German property alone it amounts to $245,000,000.

Mr. HUDSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HUDSON. Then do we understand that only 20 per cent of that amount is to be retained to pay the $186,000,000 worth of claims?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; but that 20 per cent is not the only amount to be available. A large part of the American claims will be paid at once.

Mr. COX. The bill also provides for the retention of other moneys making, as I recall from a reading of the report, about 40 per cent?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It may be pretty nearly 40 per cent of the German property. Then there is also provision made for the use of the 2¼ per cent that is paid under the Dawes reparations.

Mr. HUDSON. Just in a word or two, how much of this $186,000,000 worth of claims of American citizens will the taxpayers of America have to pay?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Not anything, except claims for the German ships, patents, and radio stations.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Which went to the Government?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That went to the Government. It is a debt of the National Government.

Mr. COX. But only 50 per cent of that is being appropriated.

Mr. HUDSON. A debt of the National Government to our claimants?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no; it is a debt of the National Government to the German nationals whose property was seized.

Mr. HUDSON. When we seized their ships of war did we pay them for them?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; furthermore, these are not ships of war. These are private ships.

Mr. HUDSON. Were they not their reserve cruisers, though, which were unarmed?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no.

Mr. HUDSON. I think they were.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; they were not. They were passenger vessels. It was private property, and what is more, we have directly admitted through our diplomatic representatives our liability for them.

Mr. DENISON. Did I understand the gentleman to say they were seized before the war began?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Before the war began they were interned in our harbors, not exactly seized.

Mr. COX. They came here for safety.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And they were seized at the time the war began.

Mr. DENISON. They were interned and when we got into the war our Government confiscated them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We took them the same as other property, but the Government itself used these ships and used the radio stations. This is the reason the Government is liable for them, as our diplomatic representatives have agreed.

Mr. NEWTON. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. My recollection is that at the time the ships were seized, at least a considerable number of them had been very seriously damaged by the German crews; and as I understand it, that is to be taken into consideration in arriving at the value of the ships at the time they were taken.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, yes, of course. The bill provides for the appointment of an arbiter to hear the evidence and determine how much these ships were worth; not worth to the German owners before the war, but what they were worth under the particular circumstances under which they were seized and the particular condition in which our Government found them.

Some of them were injured to some extent and some were not. The Leviathan, for example—the former Vaterland—was not injured at all, except it had been in the harbor there for quite a while and some of its machinery was rusty.

Mr. NEWTON. But the Crown Princess Cecile, which was later the Mount Vernon, was very badly damaged in its internal machinery?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes, it was; but we pay for it only in the condition it was in when seized and what it was worth considering the fact also that these people could not use these ships until after the war was over.

Mr. NEWTON. That was my understanding.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. All these matters are to be considered and the total amount to be allowed for these ships, radio stations, patents, and so on is not to exceed, under the bill, $100,000,000. We have put a stop limit on it.

Mr. HOOPER. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HOOPER. There is no return of property involved in any one of these settlements between Germany and the United States, but it is all a money transaction? There is no return, in other words, of ships or of property or of anything of that sort?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think not, but I would not be sure about that. Where they have the identical property in the form of real estate in some cases it may be the property itself is to be returned.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Possibly the gentleman has already stated it, but what is the total amount of the claims of the German nationals against the American Government?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The German nationals have no claims against the American Government itself, except for the ships, radios, and so forth. They have claims against this property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. How much is that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I stated that a short time ago. The total amount of the German property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian is a little over $245,000,000.

Mr. COX. The claims of the German nationals are represented by these claims of the German citizens for ships taken by this Government.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. The purpose of my question was really to also ascertain the amount of the claims of American citizens against the German Government; the total of the claims already adjusted by the Mixed Claims Commission?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is given on page 23 of the report, and the total estimated awards is $186,000,000.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Those claims in the first instance will be paid out of the United States Treasury? This bill directs that they shall be paid at once with interest?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; this bill provides for the creation of a fund by taking 20 per cent of the property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, the unallocated interest, 50 per cent of the amount appropriated for the payment of the German ships, on the one hand, and all together creating a fund.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Amounting to about how much as a preliminary fund?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The total amount of that fund immediately avaliable will be $138,000,000.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Then there will be the difference between $138,000,000 and $186,000,000, which will be paid by the Treasury.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. That will be deferred.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It will be deferred in part and eventually paid.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. How will the Treasury be reimbursed for that $48,000,000, being the difference between the $138,000,000 and the $186,000,000?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The Treasury will not pay this. It will be paid out of the fund for which provision is made in the bill.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. But in the first part of the bill the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to pay these claims out of money in the Treasury.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; the provision in the bill is for payment out of a fund which is created.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Is not that to be met out of the annuities?

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I am referring to section 3, paragraphs (a) and (b), where it is stated—

> The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay an amount equal to the principal of each award so certified, plus the interest thereon.

This contemplates payment out of the Treasury, does it not?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That refers to the wards of the Mixed Claims Commission, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay an amount equal to the principal of such award at the rate fixed in the award so certified.

And they are only taken out of the special-deposit accounts created by section 5. The gentleman will find that in section (d).

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. And there are no moneys to be paid out of the Treasury except those represented by the special-deposit fund for the value of the ships——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman will read the report he will find how the fund is created.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. And that will equal the amount claimed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It will equal it all together.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. What some of us are worrying about is whether the taxpayers are going to pay claims of our citizens against the German Government?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; our taxpayers pay nothing in the end except for the German patents, the vessels, and the radios.

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will pardon me, might it not work out so that the Government would have to pay its own nationals by taxation—in the event that the German Government should fail to meet its obligations under the Dawes agreement, would not this Government in the fulfillment of the promise here made its nationals in this bill have to make good their claims? I think that follows logically. It is only in that event that a considerable, or any, burden would be put on the taxpayers of this country, except it may be fairly said that the appropriation of the $50,000,000 may be somewhat of a burden, but half of it is to be used for the purpose of reimbursing the claims of the German nationals for the value of the ships seized by the American Government.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman may be correct about that, but I do not think any harm will result from it.

Mr. COX. I do not, either. I am taking the position that this Government owes it to its nationals to make good their claims against the German Government, because this Government sought to represent its nationals in a treaty made with Germany, and it entered into such an agreement that practically denies its nationals all hope of having their claims satisfied because of the indefinite time of payment under this arrangement.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman does not mean that our Government could have gone over and collected the claims of Germany? Germany is a bankrupt Government.

Mr. COX. I know; I agree with the gentleman. Our nationals had to act through the Government. The Government represented its nationals in the adjustment of their claims against the German Government and made arrangements that could not possibly be satisfactory to anyone. The plan of payment by the German Government, if followed, would mean that few would ever be paid. I am prepared to accept the idea that this Government, because of its blunderings made in arranging for satisfaction of its nationals' claim, owes them the duty of seeing their claims are satisfied without unnecessary delay.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think our Government did well to get what it did.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. What amount has the German Government paid American claimants?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It has not paid anything. It has paid considerable sums to the American Government, which it now holds.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It returned all property in kind.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; the gentleman from Illinois is correct. The German Government did not confiscate any American property.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Are those claims to that extent paid?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The money has not been turned over to them; there is quite a large sum in the hands of the Government which can be used, something like $12,000,000 to $15,000,000—possibly more.

Mr. BRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. BRIGGS. Has the convention between the United States and Germany been extended? My understanding is that the period of time for filing claims has been under negotiation between the State Department and Germany.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. A further extension for the presentation of claims I think has been dropped, but I can not state that positively.

Mr. PEERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. PEERY. In fixing the value of the vessels under the survey made by the Navy Department I note that they say that the aggregate value would not exceed $33,000,000. Now, I understand that the value of the ships is to be fixed by an arbiter.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. PEERY. Are there any rules governing the exercise of his judgment as to value?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They are laid down in the bill. In reference to the value being fixed at $33,000,000, we sold a small portion of the ships, and some of the poorest ones brought $17,000,000. So I think it absurd to say that the value was not more than $33,000,000.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is it not a fact that we have spent some ten or twelve million dollars in reconditioning some of them?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes; but that does not enter into the situation at all. We only pay for those ships as we found them at the time, and we pay for them taking into consideration the fact that the owners could not use them until the end of the war.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Take the Leviathan, for example. Have we not spent something like $8,000,000 on that?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think we have.

Mr. MANSFIELD. And does our Government get that back when we return that ship to Germany?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; but we will not return the ship. We will pay for the ship in the condition in which we took it and we shall keep it.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. I wish the gentleman would inform us what is the reason, in his judgment, why the fundamental provisions of the treaty between the United States and Germany with regard to all this property and this whole subject are not lived up to and followed rather than this new plan which is brought in?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The reason is that you can not get it through Congress. You could not get a bill passed by the House and the Senate, and I do not believe by either House, which would provide for our confiscating all the German property and paying it on American claims, or, on the other hand, of our paying the German claims in full, and paying no attention to the provisions of the Berlin treaty that provided that we should hold that property until suitable provision had been made for the payment of the American claims.

Mr. COX. But will not the gentleman agree that the arrangement proposed by this bill does violate the terms of the Prussian treaty of 1828, which was in force at the time that war was declared against Germany and which was entered into for the express purpose of taking care of war conditions?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There are about a dozen reasons that I could give in answer to that. In the first place, the Prussian treaty was not a treaty with the governments that subsequently existed. It is true it did announce a principle which this Government has consistently adhered to ever since, but the matter that finally decided it was the Berlin treaty, which set aside all other treaties and which now controls the matter. This provided that we should hold that property until suitable provision had been made for the American claims.

In the face of that I do not believe that you could get 25 Members of this House to vote for absolutely turning back all of the German property without making any provision for the American claims.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. And did not the treaty provide that Germany should remit all liability for the claims of its citizens, equitable or otherwise, upon the funds in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no. The provision to which the gentleman refers was with reference to other claims outside of the property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. KEARNS. Under the Berlin treaty Germany has made so-called suitable provision for the payment of these claims. Is not that right? The agreement was entered into, and Germany could not make a different agreement with the United States, if she wanted to, because the allied countries would not let her.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not see how you can construe a provision in a treaty having reference to future arrangements so as to apply it to arrangements that had already been made.

Mr. KEARNS. The arrangements have already been made, and they have agreed to pay 2¼ per cent. Suppose she had agreed to pay 2¼ per cent additional to us; what would England and the rest of the countries say?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not agree with the gentleman. I do not think suitable arrangements have been made.

Mr. COX. Let me make this suggestion. Under the Berlin treaty the American Government obligated itself to return all alien enemy property whensoever Germany should make suitable arrangements for the payment of American nationals in their claims against Germany. Now, when this Government entered into arrangements with Germany whereby agreement was made as to terms by which American nationals should be paid, then suitable arrangements, sanctioned and approved by this Government, had been made, and the obligation was upon this Government to make immediate return of all of the alien private property.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think I need answer that statement, but I will state this: The situation is just the same as though I held the property of a debtor and he wanted to have it back and I said, "I will give you back some of it; I will give you back all of it when you make suitable arrangement for the payment of debts that you owe me." That refers to future action. It does not refer to past action.

Mr. COX. All right; but when I execute you a lien on my property have I not made suitable arrangements?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly; we are merely enforcing the lien.

Mr. COX. But there is no such provision in the Berlin treaty.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is what it does provide. It says it shall be retained until—and what does that "until" refer to? It refers to the future.

Mr. COX. Absolutely; and the terms to be made in the future are fulfilled by the agreement made.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Making an agreement with reference to the future does not provide that the present arrangement is sufficient. We shall still retain this property until suitable arrangement has to be made. I do not care to argue the matter further.

Mr. COX. What does the gentleman understand to be meant by the agreement made with Germany under which Germany was to undertake the payment of our nationals? Was not that the arrangement referred to in the first treaty?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no; that is exactly what it did not mean.

Mr. CROWTHER. I would like, with the permission of the gentleman, to ask the gentleman from Georgia to what he refers as a suitable arrangement having been made. Is that for the Dawes reparation plan?

Mr. COX. Absolutely.

Mr. CROWTHER. It is not considered a suitable proportion——

Mr. COX. The American Government, representing the American nationals, considered it suitable by agreeing to it.

Mr. CROWTHER. Not for the payment of these claims.

Mr. COX. Absolutely.

Mr. CROWTHER. No. I want the gentleman to show me where that is. No such decision has been made.

Mr. COX. There has been no adjudication of the question except that made by the Government in making it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I must decline to permit the gentleman to argue this matter. I think I have proceeded far enough, but I want to say a few words in conclusion, and I want to repeat in answer to remarks of gentlemen that the use of the word "until" refers to the future, until they made these suitable arrangements, and up to this day "suitable provision" has not been made.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am sorry I said anything. The gentleman can make his own argument. Now, I am perfectly aware there are some features of this bill, some details, which Members prefer to have changed. Probably that is true in reference to every other committee having these matters reported from a committee; but the committee unanimously agreed to sink its little differences they might have in the preparation of the bill and report this bill to the House as the best solution, possibly, which could be made.

The bill has been worked out as a compromise on the part of the committee, as well as on the part of the claimants. I do not assert that it will result in exact justice being done. The complicated nature of the situation makes this practically impossible. I do insist that it offers a practical solution of the difficult problem, and in general it is fair and equitable. There may be some who do not favor the bill, because they consider that some claimants have not received everything to which they are entitled. Before they speak and before they vote on this bill let me say to them that the very persons on whose behalf they are acting hope they will refrain from any opposition to the bill.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield to one more question, and I promise that I will not ask another? Does the gentleman think Congress ought to permit an arrangement between private parties to control our policy as to the course Congress ought to adopt?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think when opposing claimants agree and say they are perfectly satisfied, that they want to have Congress pass it, it is the best Congress can do. There is one feature I omitted. This bill provides that American claims not exceeding $100,000 shall be paid, and it also provides that all death claims on the part of American citizens shall be paid. Now, that resulted in deferring American claims a little further off; but the large claims, such as the Standard Oil and others, all were agreeable to that provision. They said they could wait, but those people suffering such losses could not wait.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Many of us are not concerned at all about these claims, but the question with us is, Is it fair to the American Government and the American taxpayer? I wonder if the gentleman, in whom we have such great confidence, will assure us, some of us have not been able to master all the details of this complicated plan—and I am approaching the matter with some little trepidation—if the gentleman would be willing to assure us that in his solemn judgment as far as the danger to the taxpayer is concerned, as far as our Government is concerned, it is a perfectly proper and perfectly just proceeding.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think so. I do not believe it will cost the American Government a cent except what it justly owes for the ships, radios, and other properties which we seized.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I am in favor of the bill and shall vote for it. When it came up last year I asked the question then and I ask it now. Did the committee give further consideration to the claims made by private insurance companies who were amply rewarded by their premiums during the war? Does the gentleman think they ought to be paid 100 cents on the dollar after they were paid in part for claims against Germany?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Personally and as an abstract matter of justice I think they ought not to be paid, but as a matter of law and of treaty I do not know of any way to get out of paying them. The treaty provided that these claims should be submitted to the Mixed Commission. The Mixed Commission found that these insurance claims were proper and just, and so in my opinion we are bound by the treaty to pay them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will not the gentleman take another minute to answer the second part of that question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Well, I would like to proceed for just a few minutes further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes additional.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not have to ask unanimous consent. Half of the time belongs to him. We are on general debate. That was our agreement at the time. I am saying that for the guidance of the Chair in his ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi, the Chair thinks he ought to say that according to the understanding of the Chair no man has the right to occupy more than one hour except by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa to proceed for 10 additional minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I was very glad to get that answer, but I take issue with the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means on this, however, that it seems to me that it is reserved to Congress only to say whether that right is well established. I am not a lawyer, much less an international lawyer, but it seems to me that Congress ought to assume the responsibility of declaring what that policy shall be.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think when we make a solemn treaty we ought to abide by it. I do not like this arrangement myself, but we are bound to it.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly.

Mrs. KAHN. I would like to know if there are included in these insurance companies those German insurance companies that welshed on the payments of their policies?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think so. These are American insurance companies of which we have been speaking.

Mrs. KAHN. Some of those German insurance companies welshed. I wanted to know if they were going to get back good American money.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No. I think the lady, if she will pardon me, is mistaken as to that. Some persons wanted to put in the bill a provision to withhold from the companies to which the lady refers property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian. There was before the committee some argument favoring that, but the committee was opposed to it.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. There are some German insurance companies whose property is now in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is the gentleman sure of that?

Mr. DENISON. I am sure of it; and when this property is returned to the German claimants those insurance companies will get their payments just as other German nationals will get theirs. These German insurance companies referred to failed to pay the losses.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not know how that could occur. If the property was here in America, they could get their claims paid if the claims were legal.

Mr. DENISON. It was in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes. It must have been in the United States before the Alien Property Custodian seized it. It must have been here, otherwise the Alien Property Custodian could not have seized it, and if there was any legal claim it could have been collected.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON. I agree perfectly with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] as to the German insurance companies.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The Alien Property Custodian is one funtionary and the Mixed Claims Commission is another. So far as the Mixed Claims Commission is concerned, they have not had anything to do with it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The passage of this bill is urgent. There are certain people who are actually praying that this bill should be passed. At present we are getting nowhere and doing nothing. Our further failure to act would be a proof of inefficiency and it would constitute a reproach upon our honor and a conviction on the part of people abroad that even with funds set aside in the Treasury for this purpose we are not willing to make the payments which are already too long deferred. It is true that some of these payments are deferred 20 years. This bill makes only the first step in the settlement of these claims, but, in my judgment, within five years the situation in Germany will be such that all of these claims can be concluded. I think action here should be no longer delayed and I trust the bill will be passed by so large a majority as to demonstrate to the German Government that the American Government insists on being fair in its national dealings and at the same time protects the rights of its own citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLIER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I would like to make a request of the committee. I believe that the questions asked by the Members are very important and very illuminating and do much toward bringing out the real facts, but owing to the fact that the report on this bill came out only on yesterday and several Members have asked me to make an explanation of the bill itself, I would like to proceed about 8 or 10 minutes without any interruption, and then I shall be glad to yield for any question which any Members desire to ask, because I have always tried to answer questions as best I could.

Now, I want at the outset to say that this bill is a nonpartisan measure, like other measures that were connected with the war.

During the period of the war the members of the Ways and Means Committee sat around the committee table and raised $35,000,000,000, more or less, necessary to carry on that war. During that entire time, if a stranger from another country had been present, he could not have told on which side the Democrats sat and on which side the Republicans sat, because it was nonpartisan and we were all for America. This bill grows out of the war, and actuated by that same nonpartisan spirit we have considered it. I want to reiterate what the chairman of the committee has said that no bill has ever come before our committee that was more technical in its nature. We studied it longer and spent more time on this bill than perhaps any other bill considered by the committee for some time.

Let us see what the bill is. This bill has two purposes: First, to return to Germany the property we seized belonging to German nationals; and, second, to return to American claimants the money Germany owes them. The American claims may be divided into two classes. First, claims of the United States; and, second, claims of American nationals. When war was declared in Europe the German Army went into Belgium and destroyed or took over and converted to their use a great deal of American property. Germany owes American nationals $180,000,000, in round figures, for property they destroyed and for property they took. This includes death claims arising out of such catastrophes as the sinking of the Lusitania and other ships. In addition to that they owe the Government of the United States $60,000,000. This claim for the most part is for ships that were owned by the United States and which Germany sunk on the high seas before war was declared. To recapitulate, Germany therefore owes, in round figures, to both the nationals of America and the Government of the United States $250,000,000 or $255,000,000.

Before war was declared a great many German ships, in order to escape capture, came into our ports. Two months before war between the United States and Germany was declared the President of the United States, speaking through the Secretary of State, gave an assurance that German vessels which had sought an asylum of refuge in America would not be taken over by the United States in the event of war; that we would not take advantage of the fact that we had permitted them to come in and then afterwards confiscate them in the event of a war between the two countries.

Then as soon as war was declared anywhere from $350,000,000 to $400,000,000 worth of property in the United States belonging to various German citizens and German interests was seized and placed in the hands of an Alien Property Custodian. The Alien Property Custodian sold some of that property and there is to-day $180,000,000 received from those sales in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, all of which was put into Liberty bonds.

It has been nearly 10 years after the war and the question arises: What are we going to do with this money? And what are we going to do with the rest of the German property? How are we going to satisfy both the German claims and the American claims? We could do, my friends, like the Allies did, and I am not criticizing them. The treaty of Versailles provided that the Allies should take the property of German nationals that they had seized and apply that property to claims that their nationals had against Germany. We were not a party to the treaty of Versailles, but in the treaty of Berlin, when we made our treaty with Germany, we reserved the right to take advantage of any provision given to any other country in the treaty of Versailles.

Under the provisions of the Berlin treaty, under a decision of the United States Supreme Court, and under many rules of international law the United States has the legal right as well as the power, if it so desires, to confiscate all of the property now in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, including all of these ships and 2,200 patents amounting to about $7,500,000. We took over a couple of radio stations valued at $1,000,000, and we could also confiscate them. We have the right under international law, we have the right under an opinion of the Supreme Court, and we have the right under the treaty of Berlin, if we so desire, to confiscate and take that property. But, my friends, we have precedents in America from the time this country took its place among the nations of the earth to the contrary. In 1802, when we had a population of less than three and a half million people, the United States Government paid out of the Public Treasury $3,000,000—an enormous sum in those days—to reimburse the nationals of England for property that we had taken during the Revolutionary War.

There are two courses open to this House; that is, to follow the plan of our allies and confiscate this property or to return it to German nationals. To me it is abhorrent to every idea of justice to take the property of individuals to pay the debts of a nation. I believe we should return this property to its former owners. But what are we going to do about the money they owe us? My friend from Georgia [Mr. Cox] is very much concerned over this matter. My friends, I want to say to you and to the gentleman from Georgia that I believe in giving exact justice to Germany. But I do not believe in granting more justice to Germany than that granted to our own American citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. COX. If the gentleman will permit me, may I say my chief concern is in seeing this Government fulfill its every engagement, whether made with its own nationals or with the other powers of the world.

Mr. COLLIER. I am sure of that. I have the highest opinion of both the gentleman's purpose and the splendid ability which he has shown on this and many other occasions and which I know he will show Monday when he makes the great speech which I know he is going to make on the question at that time. I will be pleased a little later on when I get through with the elementals to discuss this with my friend from Georgia further. I would like to proceed now a few moments more on the bill. I have not told you yet what is in the bill; in fact, neither the chairman nor myself have gone into the details of the bill.

In the treaty of Berlin the American Government was given a priority with respect to the cost of the army of occupation. This has really nothing to do with the bill, but I want to state it for the reason the question is asked why we preferred in priorities the citizens of the United States above the Government of the United States. My answer to that is that the Federal Government reserved to itself priority in the treaty of Berlin. The $13,000,000 that Germany pays for the cost of the army of occupation must be paid first, and we did not feel the Government ought to take priority over its citizens all the time.

In the treaty of Versailles it was determined by a commission appointed for that purpose that Germany should be assessed damages of 132,000,000,000 gold marks, which amounted in our money to about $35,000,000,000. It was absolutely impossible for Germany to pay this, and if I may use a common expression used in connection with business concerns, Germany did just like a corporation would have done if it found its liabilities far beyond its resources. They practically went into the hands of a receiver, and the result was the Dawes Commission and the Dawes annuities.

Under the Dawes annuities—and this is a very important matter in connection with this bill—the various nations received a pro rata part of Germany's annual reparation payments based on what was believed to be Germany's capacity to pay. The part of the United States was two and a quarter per cent, or, to be accurate, about $10,700,000 annually. This was the part the United States was to receive on the Dawes annuity to be applied to the settlement of American claims.

The Allies were anxious for the United States to adopt the same principle which they had adopted for two reasons: One was because, perhaps, it would have looked better, although I do not care to dwell on that phase of the matter. We are not concerned with reasons which actuated other nations; but the Allies had a business reason for wanting us to adopt their plan.

If we had taken the German property in our hands and turned it over to American claimants, then we would not have participated in this $10,700,000 Dawes annuity, and that amount would have gone into the common fund and the share of the Allies on a pro rata basis would have been increased accordingly.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman is a member of the committee which drafted this bill, and I know is always able to explain any bill that comes out of his committee. I have claimants both ways on this matter, and what they would like to know is this: How much money has the Alien Property Custodian, either the property of Germany or of the nationals of Germany?

Mr. COLLIER. That is a very pertinent question, because I want to show you now how we provide for these payments.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] asked a very pertinent question when he asked the chairman of the committee if he thought the Congress in the settlement of claims ought to be controlled by the desires and wishes and agreements of the claimants themselves. I will answer that question like, I presume, the chairman did, although I was called out of the room just as the gentleman propounded his question. I say that Congress should not be so controlled, but when we have other people's money and when we have been trying for 10 years to distribute and properly return it and those on both sides get together and say if we distribute it in this way it will satisfy them, while we might not be bound by that, I will say it was a very persuading factor in the consideration of this matter.

In answer to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] it is variously estimated that the amount of German property seized by the Alien Property Custodian is between $350,000,000 and $400,000,000.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Belonging to Germany?

Mr. COLLIER. Belonging to the citizens of Germany. Our claims are $255,000,000.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Our claims are $255,000,000?

Mr. COLLIER. Two hundred and fifty-five millions dollars.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the committee, said we are holding only a portion of that money. How much are we reserving for payment of the claims of Americans?

Mr. COLLIER. I will give the gentleman the plan which we adopted. I do not consider it is an ideal plan because there is one feature in the plan which I do not like at all, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. JACOBSTEIN] put his hand on it—the insurance feature. I do not like that at all. I do not think it is fair. But we are dealing with a commission which is an international commission. We can not amend its report. Its report was made by a representative from Germany, a representative from the United States, and a third party, the umpire; and when the report is made, if we attempt to amend it, the two representatives of the countries and the umpire have to get together again; and while there may be, and there is, a technical and legal right to give these insurance companies the money, yet I am not in sympathy with that part of the bill. However, I am not going to permit that to prevent me from supporting this measure and restoring this money to these people, because it has been delayed so long it is now time for us to get away from these war claims.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Texas, who is on a committee that at one time looked into this matter.

Mr. RAYBURN. I presume neither the gentleman nor the committee he represents contends that the recommendation of this commission is building on the Congress?

Mr. COLLIER. Certainly not; but whenever we change a question of fact, after it has practically been agreed on, while it may not be binding upon this House, yet it jeopardizes the proceedings, and Germany itself, through its agent, was willing to pay this money. It is an American claim against Germany, and if their representative was ready and willing and agreed to pay it, I am not going to get mad myself enough to jeopardize this bill on that account.

Mr. RAYBURN. I was simply trying to establish what was the committee's idea of the principle involved. My conception of this whole matter is that Congress is always supreme in such matters and is not bound by any finding of any commission anywhere; not even commissioners to bring about a peace treaty, or anything of that sort.

Mr. COLLIER. That is true; and if a majority vote of this House and the Senate so declares, and the President signs such a bill, we can confiscate every dollar of this property and every single ship, if we want to, and we would be acting within our rights under the law.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The committee was controlled largely, at least I was, by the provisions of the treaty. These awards have been made in pursuance of the treaty, and although we have the power to enact some law to violate the treaty, I do not think it ought to be done. Nobody has suggested a solution as to where the money should go. The Germans have agreed, and are willing to pay it, and where should it go?

Mr. JONES. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa if it appeared that the insurance companies had charged war insurance rates?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It was shown that the insurance companies had made no unreasonable profits.

Mr. JONES. Why should they have a return of the money?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is a well-known principle of law that they are subrogated to the rights of the parties insured.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee said that he did not think the insurance companies were entitled to it, but he does not want to jeopardize the passage of the bill. Why can not we amend the bill to exclude payment to the insurance companies.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And then have no bill.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Why can not the bill be amended and the insurance claims be thrown out?

Mr. COLLIER. I suppose it could, but they tell me it would defeat it. Oh, I see so many things done that I think can not be done, and so many things not done that I think can be done that I do not know.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I understand they propose to return a part of the money at once and not to hold it for the debts of the Americans.

Mr. COLLIER. I am coming to that. It is a complicated arrangement. If the House will give me its attention I will explain it now.

Mr. HUDSPETH. You are not holding all the money for the payment of the American citizens' claims?

Mr. COLLIER. We are going to pay Germany 80 per cent at the start.

Mr. COX. But you have already paid claims under $10,000?

Mr. COLLIER. Now, I want to say two things. First, the value of the ships was a matter of great controversy and probably will be a matter of great controversy under the five-minute rule. That is where the only appropriation lies. The bill authorizes the appropriation of $100,000,000 to pay for the ships that Germany brought into the country before the war and which we seized. It provides further for the appropriation of only $50,000,000, the other $50,000,000 being deferred as we hope forever.

Now, there is going to be a great deal of complaint on that. I want to say to the Members on both sides that as far as we can learn, after making all the inquiry everywhere we could, we find that the American Government is not going to lose a cent, even if the entire $100,000,000 is appropriated. We have used a good many of the vessels—we used them during the war—and their value to us at the time when we needed vessels was very great. We have also sold a number of these vessels, and even if we have to expend the entire $100,000,000, I repeat, I do not believe the Federal Government will be out anything on the shipping business. We hope that we will not have to appropriate over $50,000,000.

What is the value of the ships? There is a real conflict between the United States and Germany. We claim they are worth $33,000,000 and they claim they are worth $330,000,000, or ten times as much.

Now, we made an arbitrary yardstick to measure value of the ships. Here is the yardstick. We assess the value of the ships, what they were worth when they entered the American ports, minus the loss to Germany in not being able to use them during the war; the fact that they were laid up and out of use and thereby was a loss to Germany over an indeterminate period which meant the end of the war.

It might have been five months or six months or three years or five years. That is for the arbiter to decide what this would amount to. Taking that into consideration he is going to determine the valuation of the ships. We get $10,700,000 a year under the Dawes plan to pay for American claims, and Germany has agreed to pay every year this $10,700,000 to pay off American claimants until all claims are satisfied. Why do we not turn the German property over to them then and accept the Dawes payment in return? Because it would take the American claimants 75 years to get their money back under that plan. And suppose—although we hope not—that after 10 or 15 years Germany quits making those payments. Then American claimants would never get their money. So, while I say we want to be fair and just to Germany, we do not want to give the German claimants any priority over our own citizens.

What are we going to do? The bill provides that German nationals shall be paid 80 per cent of their claims at once, but that "at once" does not mean right now. [Laughter.] I have had several men come up and say, "I am never going to vote to pay 80 per cent of Germany's claims right now and not settle the American claims until 1933." Amongst the German claimants there have been a great many deaths and other changes in ownership. I believe implicitly that a great part of the American claimants will be paid long before a considerable part of that 80 per cent will be paid to Germany, because of the difficulty they are going to have in adjudicating and proving their claims, while our claims are already adjudicated. Now then, we will give them 80 per cent when they prove the claims. We now come to American claimants. We are going to sell all of the German property. The Alien Property Custodian is empowered to do that, and we are going to arbitrarily take 20 per cent of what we receive from the sale of German property, which will be $40,000,000, and we are going to put that in a fund from which we will pay American claims. For convenience we will call this fund the pot. On the $180,000,000 of Liberty bonds that we purchased from the sale of German property unallocated interest has accrued which amounts to $23,000,000. We are going to put that in the pot. That gives us $40,000,000 and $33,000,000, so that we have $73,000,000 in the pot. Then we appropirate $50,000,000 for ships, and we are going to give $25,000,000 of that to the fellows that lost the ships and we are going to take the other $25,000,000 and put that in the pot. That makes $98,000,000. We have already received two payments under the Dawes plan amounting in round numbers to about $23,000,000, and we are going to put that in the pot. We have now put in the pot about $120,000,000. What are we going to do with that money? We are going to pay every dollar in that pot to American citizens and claimants, and we are going to pay under a certain order of priority. The first priority will be the expenses of the commission. The second priority, which amounts to $4,000,000, and that which comes first of all claims, are what are called death claims and personal-injury cases. We are going to pay $4,000,000 and satisfy every claim resulting from the deaths and personal injuries where awards have been granted to American claimants by the Mixed Claims Commission.

Mr. DEAL. And are you going to pay that "at once"?

Mr. COLLIER. Pay them at once; and that means right now, as soon as the bill is passed. There will be no delay about those claims, because they have all been adjudicated. These claims amount to $4,000,000. Then we are going to take $29,000,000 out of that pot and pay off every American claim that amounts to $100,000 or less. That leaves a balance in the pot of about $82,000,000. The payment of this $33,000,000 satisfies the claim of every American national less than $200,000. We will then take $17,800,000 and award $100,000 on account of all other American claims, which will cut down the pot to $64,000,000; $6,000,000 will then be used to pay accrued interest to American claimants, leaving in the pot approximately $58,000,000. All American claimants will participate in the remainder, share and share alike, until the pot is exhausted.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. I understood the gentleman to say that the claims of the German nationals have not yet been adjudicated. Did they come before the same Mixed Claims Commission that our people presented their claims to?

Mr. COLLIER. What I meant by not being adjudicated is that they have not been adjudicated before our Claims Commission.

Mr. SNELL. Do they come to our Claims Commission for final approval?

Mr. COLLIER. They will have to go to the umpire. He is the man charged with the sale of these ships and paying off those claims. It is a tremendous responsibility for one man, but the bill provides it.

Mr. SNELL. Are they adjudicated over there or settled to a certain extent that a certain amount belongs to one man; and has that been referred to this umpire over here?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes; and the umpire is the final arbiter.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Is not that limited to ships, radios, and patents?

Mr. SNELL. I am asking about German nationals.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Oh, that is a matter of bookkeeping; that is all settled.

Mr. COLLIER. Gentlemen, the difficulty is going to be in Germany, not over here. We will have deaths, and so forth, and the delay is going to be caused in Germany.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Is not there a confusion in the mind of the gentleman from New York. The claim of the average German property owner we know how much it is, but what we do not know is the property taken by the German Government—ships, radio, and patents.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. They are all together.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. We know how much the claim of the individual German property owner is.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman made the statement that some Members objected to paying 80 per cent of the German claims, and the reason the gentleman approved doing that is because the German claims have not yet been adjudicated.

Mr. COLLIER. Perhaps I had the wrong idea. The gentleman from New York states that as far as the nationals themselves are concerned the difficulty which we understand has arisen in Germany would delay very materially.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is to be made by a new officer set up in this bill, that of arbiter, a new position created in this bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I will.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. To make it clear, there are three tribunals. The Alien Property Custodian, before whom the German claims go except those relating to ships, radio, and patents. The owner of those will go to the arbiter, for whose election there is a provision in this bill. The American claims all go before the Mixed Claims Commission.

Mr. COLLIER. That is right.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. You have those three different tribunals.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COLLIER. I will.

Mr. HASTINGS. What does the gentleman say is the amount of our Government claims?

Mr. COLLIER. Our own Government claims $60,000,000.

Mr. HASTINGS. The next question. How much of this money has been put in the pot? Will not all of that money be exhausted by it being paid to our American nationals before our Government claims are paid?

Mr. COLLIER. If Germany fails to keep her agreement at all? That is the idea of holding 20 per cent.

Mr. HASTINGS. Are we holding enough of German property to be absolutely sure that all the claims of our nationals and all the claims of our own Government will be paid?

Mr. COLLIER. I think so.

Mr. HASTINGS. Now, does the gentleman have any doubt about that?

Mr. COLLIER. I will say this to the gentleman——

Mr. HASTINGS. Has the gentleman any doubt about that? That is the point I am after.

Mr. COLLIER. Let me say this to the gentleman: I have a note here that in 1933 the entire pot will be exhausted.

Mr. HASTINGS. Under this arrangement when will all the claims of our Government be paid—through what series of years?

Mr. COLLIER. Well, I could not say.

Mr. HASTINGS. Run over 62 years, as with some——

Mr. COLLIER. Oh, no; nothing like that.

Mr. HASTINGS. Well, 25 years?

Mr. COLLIER. I could not answer the gentleman accurately.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. About 17 years for final payment.

Mr. HASTINGS. Do we take the German Government's lien on the property?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. For part of it.

Mr. HASTINGS. What part of the security will remain after this pot is exhausted?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Twenty per cent.

Mr. HASTINGS. There is another question——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will call attention to the fact the American claimants are perfectly satisfied with that.

Mr. HASTINGS. I am looking after the American Government. Is it not going to give the Government anything?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We have forty or fifty million dollars of claims arising against the German Government.

Mr. HASTINGS. How is the American Government to be paid, or when? Are we reserving enough money in this pot to pay for the next few years?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. They go under the Dawes agreement.

Mr. HASTINGS. There is another question.

Mr. COLLIER. The gentleman does not give me time to answer either one.

Mr. HASTINGS. What I want to get down to in the last analysis is, I want to know when we can expect the American claims to be paid, and when the Government of the United States claims are to be paid, which are fifty or sixty million dollars?

Mr. COLLIER. That would depend, of course, solely and alone upon the question whether or not we collected the promissory notes of the other governments. Whenever you accept a series of promissory notes and can go before a committee and say positively that you know when these notes will be paid, then I can speak positively about this.

Mr. HASTINGS. Then we are releasing some property we have now as security and are taking our chances to collect?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. You say that according to the treaty of Berlin it was agreed between our Government and the Government of Germany that the property of the German nationals in this country should not be confiscated and the proceeds applied to the payment of these debts to our nationals and our own American Government?

Mr. COLLIER. I would not go so far as to say we agreed to such a proposition. But in the very preamble of that treaty we stated that we were not going to do it. But there is an implied statement running all through that treaty showing that we could do it. There is no question on that. The United States has absolutely got the legal right, sanctioned by international law and the Supreme Court decisions, if it wanted to, to take every dollar of that fund.

Mr. HASTINGS. Then the gentleman is not as positive now as he was a few moments ago as to the effect of that law and the treaty of Berlin?

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman will permit, I think I can shed some light on the question involved in the gentleman's colloquy with the gentleman from Oklahoma. I want to say that this is the most complete report ever submitted by the committee in explanation of a very complicated bill, and I commend the consideration of it to our Members.

But in answer to the question of the gentleman from Oklahoma, he will find on page 12 of the report, item 2—

Awards on behalf of the United States Government: Principal of awards entered, $42,034,794.41; interest to January 1, 1928, on awards entered, $19,203,567.03; a total of principal and interest of $61,238,361.44.

Now, as I understand the inquiry of the gentleman from Oklahoma to the gentleman from Mississippi, it is whether or not we have security for the $61,000,000 of indebtedness, that it will be in the hands of our Government if we pay the claims of the German nationals?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. The reply I would make the gentleman is this: While we have an indisputed right, as he has time and time again said, to confiscate this property, that is not the duty of our Congress. I do not think that any of us want to do that. And further than that, the money that we are now holding under the Mixed Claims Commission—or, rather, under the Alien Property Custodian—is the property of German individuals. Therefore we can not pay that individual money of a German citizen and call it as part of the German national fund to pay our national debt.

Mr. HASTINGS. Did we provide that in our treaty of Berlin?

Mr. TREADWAY. That is in the treaty.

Mr. HASTINGS. Why did we put it in?

Mr. TREADWAY. You should ask that question of the officials who made the treaty. It is not for us to answer. It is fair to say this, however, that this being public money, not being collateral for a private claim, we must pay under the treaty with Germany in so far as our security for the payment of the national claims can admit it.

Mr. HASTINGS. If we put that in the treaty for priority, why do we turn around now and relinquish that right?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Suitable provision should be made. The gentleman from Georgia thinks suitable provision for that should be made now. I do not think so.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. Certainly.

Mr. RAINEY. How much does the German Government owe us on our expenses of occupation?

Mr. COLLIER. Two hundred and fifty-five million dollars.

Mr. RAINEY. We could scale that down a little bit?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes.

Mr. RAINEY. That is to be paid out of the Dawes reparations?

Mr. COLLIER. That has nothing to do with the treaty of reparation and the treaty of Berlin. The Government took priority on that. If they make only one payment it would go on the army of occupation.

Mr. RAINEY. How are we going to get paid the money due us for our army of occupation unless we get it out of the reparations?

Mr. COLLIER. There is no way that I know of except to declare war.

Mr. RAINEY. If we are to depend on that alone, and they pay it without interest, it will take 30 years under the Dawes Commission plan to reimburse us for the expense of our army of occupation. If they pay it with interest it will take from 40 to 50 years; and if you add to that $60,000,000 to be paid to the Federal Government last of all, and that would include the reimbursing of this Government for damages due to loss of life on the Lusitania, you will find it will be 70 or 80 years before we can recover this money, and it would not be surprising if we had to pay those claims out of our Treasury.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAINEY. I have not the floor, but I gladly yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. This bill itself in no way fixes the amount due us for the occupation of American troops or anything of that kind?

Mr. COLLIER. It has nothing in the world to do with it.

Mr. RAINEY. Except that it postpones that until last of all, and the Treasury may not get that back for 70 or 80 years.

Mr. COLLIER. Does my colleague from Illinois think we should confiscate that money and apply it to American debts?

Mr. RAINEY. I will say to my colleague that if we confiscate it we would only be following our own precedents when we confiscated the cotton that we seized in the South.

Mr. COLLIER. But two wrongs do not make a right.

Mr. RAINEY. We would be following all our own precedents and also the precedents that every nation in the world has set if we confiscated it. We would be doing just what all the allied nations are doing to-day. We are abandoning all precedents and we are making history in this bill. In giving this money back we are not following the precedents already set; we are establishing a new precedent.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield for information?

Mr. COLLIER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BYRNS. The German alien property custodian seized a great deal of property belonging to nationals of our country during the war. Can the gentleman tell us how much was so seized?

Mr. COLLIER. I have not the different allocations of that, but there were some seizures made.

Mr. BYRNS. This bill proposes, as I understand it, to return to German nationals 80 per cent of the property seized by the Alien Property Custodian of this Government?

Mr. COLLIER. Exactly.

Mr. BYRNS. Has there been any reciprocal action on the part of Germany to return to American nationals the property seized during the war by the alien property custodian of Germany?

Mr. COLLIER. There has been reciprocal action on the part of Germany.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Germany has returned all of the property taken in kind, and that was done long ago.

Mr. BYRNS. That relates to property seized in Germany?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Germany was not in a position to decide what to do with that property. The Allies took that property.

Mr. BYRNS. When was it returned and in what way?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It was simply turned back to them when the war was over.

Mr. BYRNS. I know of one or two instances where money was seized in the banks of Germany belonging to American nationals. Those gentlemen now have claims pending against Germany and they have been denied payment for many, many years. Has Germany returned the money?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Germany was willing to pay them, but at the time she only had depreciated currency, which they would not accept. But so far as any property is concerned, like real estate, machinery, buildings, and the like, everything was returned.

Mr. BYRNS. How about money that was seized?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. They tried to pay them in their own currency at the time the war closed, but they had nothing but depreciated currency, and, of course, it would not make a sufficient payment. So now those claims have been submitted to the Mixed Claims Commission and the Mixed Claims Commission is making awards to them.

Mr. BYRNS. Then I understand that what this bill proposes to do, if the gentleman will pardon me for a moment, is to return to German nationals 80 per cent of the property seized, whereas Germany will retain the money she seized and the property she seized.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But it is being paid to them now through awards made by the Mixed Claims Commission.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I must ask the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Illinois to permit me to proceed.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. COLLIER. I have allowed this to go on in this way because I believe that by the asking of these questions we bring out the facts and save a great deal of time. However, I would like now to reserve two or three minutes to myself, and I ask the indulgence of the House.

Mr. COX. At some point will not the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. COLLIER. I see the gentleman from Georgia is not going to let me do it.

Mr. COX. I want to ask the gentleman one question, which will lead to another. The whole structure of this bill, from your interpretation, is founded upon the certainty of the fulfillment of the Dawes plan.

Mr. COLLIER. Absolutely.

Mr. COX. If the Dawes agreement falls through, under the bill there will be confiscation of at least a part of German private property?

Mr. COLLIER. I think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. COX. If the Dawes plan falls through, there will be a failure on the part of our own nationals to receive payment in full of their claims against the German Government?

Mr. COLLIER. That will not be so as long as we have that 20 per cent; but, of course, if that falls through, then there will be some confiscation of German property, but it will be because Germany does not pay and it will not be because of the confiscation of any German property.

Mr. COX. Does it not logically follow that if the Dawes arrangement falls through and there is no action on the part of this Government looking to the satisfaction of the claims of its nationals against the German Government that there will be a failure to fulfill the promise of the bill to eventually satisfy German claims and likewise failure of the promise which is made that American nationals will eventually be paid?

Mr. COLLIER. That may be true. Now, I want to take about three minutes and talk to some of these Members who are so afraid that some of our nationals are going to lose their money. I want to say that by 1933—and I believe the Dawes payments will be kept up until then—nearly 80 per cent of this amount will be paid, and that the only American claimants then left will be some of the very large claimants, some of the greatest business concerns in this country, which themselves are willing to take this chance. When we take $33,000,000 out of the pot we have paid for the expenses of the commission and have paid off every death claim and every claim of $100,000 or less. After $50,800,000 has been taken out of the $113,000,000 pot, the death and personal-injury claims will have all been paid, every claim of $100,000 or less will have been paid, and all other American claimants will have received an additional $100,000, and we will still have left in the pot over $62,000,000 to help satisfy the remaining claimants, all of whom have already been paid $200,000.

What are we going to do when the pot becomes exhausted? The Dawes payments, as they are paid, will go into the pot. American claimants remaining unpaid after 1933 will have received 80 per cent of the sum due them from Germany. After that, out of the Dawes annuities, as they are paid, German and American nationals share and share alike.

Mr. ABERNETHY and Mr. CHINDBLOM rose.

Mr. COLLIER. I yield first to my good friend from North Carolina.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I want to say to the gentleman I am not concerned so much about our citizens getting paid, but I am very much concerned, and I think a number of other Members are, at the very pertinent question of the gentleman from Oklahoma, and that is, How is this Government going to be taken care of when we are taking at least $50,000,000 out of the Treasury at the present time and turning that money over and waiting 80 years to get back what they owe the Government? That is the thing that is bothering me.

Mr. COLLIER. Well, the Government stands a better show than any of the others, if you want it put in plain language, because we are retaining $50,000,000, the value of the ships, to be appropriated by a future Congress at a future date; and when that money is appropriated 50 per cent of the $50,000,000, or one-half of it, will go back into the pot, to be turned over to American claimants.

Mr. COX. And if the gentleman will permit, that $50,000,000 is private property and not the property of the German Government.

Mr. ABERNETHY. I am not talking about the individuals. I know there would not be any bill if it was not for the individuals pressing it. I am thinking of the Treasury of the United States, and the gentleman says it is able to stand it. Is that the only reason we are appropriating this $50,000,000 which we will not get back for 80 years?

Mr. COLLIER. In order to make myself understood I will say the Government has got just as much right to expect payment as any of the individuals, and the Government will be paid. I do not anticipate any trouble the Federal Government will have in getting its money back.

Mr. ABERNETHY. In other words, we have got to wait until the other Governments pay us.

Mr. COLLIER. Of course, if the Dawes payments stop, if Europe blows up, if people do not meet their obligations, if all the countries here and abroad go to the bowwows, and the currency of every nation is depreciated until it gets like it was immediately after the war, then perhaps somebody is going to lose some money.

We have got to take something on trust, gentlemen. All of our business is based on confidence. The material as well as the moral prosperity of every community, as well as of every nation, in a large measure depends upon the degree in which the people of that community and of that nation trust each other, and we have got to allow for something along the lines of confidence.

I can not say that Germany is going to make the payment next year or 20 years from now. I do say that Germany has met her payments in the past. The reparations were fixed by a commission at what they believed to be Germany's capacity to pay, and for one I can not say that she is not going to pay, and none of you can say she will or will not pay. We have got to trust something to our confidence in the nations of the world.

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I yield to my colleague, of course.

Mr. RAINEY. Is it not true that the Reparations Commission on the petition of Germany, at any time in the future, on a showing made by her that she can not meet these reparation payments of $600,000,000 a year, or whatever the amount is—I think it is more than that—can be relieved and another adjustment made by which she pays a still smaller amount?

Mr. COLLIER. Of course, if that becomes necessary. The gentleman is very helpful.

Mr. RAINEY. And that will postpone still further beyond the 80 years our opportunity to get back the money we are now advancing.

Mr. COLLIER. Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I want to say that I have talked much longer than I intended——

Mr. CHINDBLOM (interposing). Before the gentleman concludes, some one inquired about the American claimants who will have to wait a while——

Mr. COLLIER. Yes; I wish the gentleman would read who they are, because some of the gentlemen are so much concerned about them.

Mr. CHINDBLOM (reading):

And many others, all of which will be found in the hearings.

Mr. COLLIER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I want to reiterate that all claims under $200,000 will be satisfied by 1933.

Mr. HASTINGS rose.

Mr. COLLIER. Does the gentleman want to ask a question along this line?

Mr. HASTINGS. If the gentleman will permit, I think there is not any concern about the big claims——

Mr. COLLIER. They are the only ones that will be delayed.

Mr. HASTINGS. Because, as I understand from this debate and from the report, those having the larger claims have agreed to this.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. They have.

Mr. HASTINGS. But what some of us are very much concerned about is when the claims of the American Government are to be paid or how long they are to be postponed? We are not concerned about these large claims which the gentleman from Illinois has read into the RECORD because, as I understand it, with their eyes open they have come in and agreed to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi has consumed one hour.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Inasmuch as the gentleman has asked me a question, I may say that first there will be $13,000,000 received from the German Government on account of the expense of the army of occupation. The total of that claim by our Government is $255,000,000. Then there is the 2¼ per cent out of the Dawes reparations payments, which amounts to about $10,700,000 per annum, and that can be used only for these claims.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does that go to pay the Government claims?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It could not be used to pay the Government claims. The Government will get its pay after the private claims have been paid.

Mr. HASTINGS. When does the gentleman estimate that the payment of the Government claims will begin?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The total time required to pay off 2¼ per cent of the priority mixed claims together with interest thereon, and the interest on deferred payments, is 5 years. To pay off the principle of $123,825,000 with interest, 17⅔ years; to pay off $25,000,000 unallocated interest fund without interest, 2⅓ years; making in all 25 years to pay off the private claims.

Mr. COLLIER. Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in conclusion I want to say that this is the best bill that we could get. This matter has been pending for nearly 10 years; we have children and widows in this country whose husbands and fathers and brothers lost their lives, and for 10 years that money has been held in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, and we have been letting it stay there. Do you not think it time that we ought to settle this matter? We have claims of thousands of American citizens who were damaged to the extent of a few hundred dollars. This bill immediately pays off all of them, practically, you might say, under $200,000.

Now, the first question is whether we are to appropriate $50,000,000 out of the Federal Treasury and authorize the appropriation of $50,000,000 more for ships which the evidence shows was worth that much to us. Another question is whether we are going to let this thing go on forever, or go ahead and confiscate the property.

We have solved the question according to our plan. The solution, I believe, has met the approval of the claimants. That is not binding, but it is gratifying to know that those interested approve the bill.

The question with us is, What will we do? I believe every safeguard possible has been thrown around the debt Germany owes to the Government of the United States. I am not concerned about those American claimants who have to wait, because, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM] has shown, they are not only limited in number and possessed of great means but also they have voluntarily taken the chance of getting their pay out of the reparations made by Germany.

Now, I did not intend to take up so much time to-day in general debate, but one question brought on another, and I have let Members ask each other questions, because I believed in doing so it would facilitate the discussion. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BRAND].

Mr. BRAND of Ohio. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not expect to discuss the bill before the House. I give you fair warning of that. I do want to discuss the 92 per cent index figure which the Secretary of Agriculture proclaims is the comparative situation of agriculture with other groups in the United States. He says there are only 8 points difference between the condition of agriculture and the condition of other groups. If that is true, it seems to me that agriculture has little cause to complain and has a poor case to come before the Congress and ask for special legislation.

The Secretary of Agriculture in his annual report said:

> The index number indicating the purchasing power of agriculture was 92 on September 15 last, with 100 representing the average for the five years preceding the war.

This report no doubt caused the President to say in his annual message to Congress that the purchasing power of the farmer is approaching a normal figure.

These optimistic words go out over the country and news columns and editorials proclaim that agriculture is again all right—everybody from the President down taking this report from the Department of Agriculture as the literal truth.

I wish to say that I am thoroughly convinced that these figures do not reflect the true condition of agriculture and that you can not get a true picture by price comparison. You must take into consideration the quantity of an article produced on the farm as well as the price before you have any knowledge of the farmer's revenue.

Prices may be high for an agricultural product, but that generally accompanies small productions and reduced revenue. For example: Cotton is high this year, but quantity produced is low, and as a result the cotton crop this year will produce $350,000,000 less for the farmers of the South than the crop produced in 1925. Again, corn was high in 1924 because of an exceedingly small crop, and the farmers suffered that year in revenue from the sale of corn and the livestock to which it was fed.

The index figure referred to by the Secretary of Agriculture has been raised many points this year by the price of cotton, but the revenue of cotton farmers is less than in a normal year.

The index figure in 1924 was raised many points by the high price of corn, but the revenue of farmers was reduced.

The real economic condition of the farmer is not indicated by the price he secures unless you also take into consideration the amount of the product he produces and thereby secure his actual revenue.

I have before me an article written by Mr. L. H. Bean, division of statistical and historical research, United States Department of Agriculture, on the subject of "Measures of agricultural purchasing power," in which he discusses the reliability and correctness of their index figure used so conspicuously by the Secretary of Agriculture in showing the purchasing power of the American farmer.

In this article Mr. Bean states:

> The three phrases "the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar," "the purchasing power of the farmer's product," and "the purchasing power of the farmer or the farmer's income" have been used interchangeably. Much publicity has been given to the first two of these phrases without recognizing that it is the third concept, namely, the purchasing power of the farmer, which is of greatest importance. This brief paper will attempt to deal only with the outstanding differences between these three forms of agricultural purchasing power and to indicate briefly the practical significance of the purchasing power of the farmer's income as a measure of agricultural welfare.

Mr. Bean says again:

> Not only have most comments on agricultural price movements been lax in their distinction between the buying power of units of farm products and the buying power of a unit of the farmer's money, but the comparisons used have resulted in questionable conclusions.

Again Mr. Bean says:

> The third form of agricultural purchasing power, the purchasing power of the farmer's income, is by far the most significant, since it takes into account both the price per unit and the number of units sold.

Again Mr. Bean says:

> If it is the purpose to indicate the real progress or condition of the agricultural producer, it would be best accomplished by measuring the purchasing power of the farmer's net income.

These excerpts from Mr. Bean's address are conclusive evidence that in the department of research in the Agricultural Department they look upon this index figure used by the Secretary of Agriculture as proving farm prosperity as a questionable calculation, and that the net income of the farmers of the country is the true measure of the condition of agriculture, and that while I seem to be criticizing the Department of Agriculture to-day, yet I am really in harmony with the research department.

Just to show you that the comparison using the prices only of agricultural products leads us astray I call your attention to two different tables issued by the Department of Agriculture. In one we have index numbers which are generously spread over the country, and in 1924 this index figure was 83.

Now, in the other table we have the net income of capital invested in land in the United States, which in 1924 was stated to be 3.2 per cent. A very low percentage, but, nevertheless, that is the report of the Department of Agriculture.

Now we will take these tables in 1926 and we find the index figure, developed from prices of agricultural products, shows an increase of 2 points, and came up to 85 since 1924, and therefore the farmer is more prosperous according to the Secretary of Agriculture than he was in 1924.

However, we turn over to the other table and we find in 1926 the Agricultural Department says that the net income of capital invested in land in the United States amounts to 2.7 per cent in that year. So then, according to their own reports, the index figure went up and the net returns of the farmers of the country went down probably a billion dollars.

The people in the Department of Agriculture know that this index figure, heralded over the country as evidence of the prosperity of agriculture, is not a true index of agricultural conditions.

Prices of industrial articles are different. When there is a big demand for pig iron, more is produced and prices are advanced. When the farmer raises more pigs he oversupplies the market and the price goes down. You can not compare the prices of agricultural products with the prices of industrial products and fail to reach wrong conclusions.

In my opinion there is but one way for the Agricultural Department to show to the country the condition of agriculture as it relates to all other groups, and that is to arrive at the production of each of the articles, ascertain the price of each, and arrive at the total income of agriculture. Then compare that income with the total income of the other groups in the United States. Of course, this is done and has been done and we have the figures, but they are not heralded to the country.

Agriculture is receiving about $12,000,000,000 a year now as its total revenue. The total national income is about $90,000,000,000 per annum. The people engaged in agriculture are about one-third of our population and they are receiving about one-eighth of the national income.

These figures likewise come from the Agricultural Department and there is full knowledge there of this discrepancy, but the real situation does not get out to the public and is not heralded abroad by the Secretary. If this information filled the columns of the newspapers, then everybody would understand why land continues to drop in price. It would be understood why the Department of Agriculture has to report this year that land again went down in value all over the United States last year 4 per cent, 6 per cent in Ohio, and 11 per cent in Iowa.

An interesting sale of farm land was made in Champaign County, Ohio, last week. In making out the deed it was discovered that the property had been previously transferred, the last time in 1877, and the price named in the deed was 20 per cent less than the price named in the deed in 1927, which was 50 years later. It would be interesting to show the large increases in value of other kinds of property in the United States during this same 50 years.

If this true statement of the comparative conditions was everywhere known it would explain why the Department of Agriculture must report this year that one million and twenty thousand left the farm last year, the largest number to leave the farms since war-time conditions.

I think the Agricultural Department should continue to show the comparative conditions of agriculture with others, but I feel that they should use the figures in their department that give the actual comparative condition and not adopt figures that are manifestly misleading. We have a condition that must be studied and remedied and all the people of the United States must know that there is an unfair and unequal condition and they should be prepared to grant equality to the people who produce the food and the material for clothing which is, undoubtedly, the most important production in the United States.

If we are to continue to compare price levels, I would like to make a price-level comparison—that of the actual results of my farming experience in Ohio, and the experience of a farmer in Ohio is very much the experience of a farmer in all of the Middle Western States.

I sell corn, oats, hay, milk, hogs, and wheat.

My expenditures are taxes, lumber, paint, fence, tile, and labor.

In selling corn this year I find the price, according to the Department of Agriculture in November, is 73 cents; and the price in the five years preceding the war was 64 cents, which is an increase of 14 per cent.

Now, I sell corn and pay taxes and I find taxes according to the Department of Agriculture have increased 253 per cent. If you will figure that out you will find that I have in paying taxes by selling corn a 45-cent dollar as compared with the situation before the war.

I might add here that the Department of Agriculture in arriving at their index figure eliminates taxes as one of the things the farmer pays or buys. Of course, it would spoil their index figure, but the department does report that farmers are paying in some agricultural States as much as 50 per cent of their net incomes for taxes, so it seems to me that any item that takes that proportion of an income is sufficiently a part of a farmer's expenditure.

The corporations of the country are appealing now to Congress to reduce their income tax which is to-day 13½ per cent and the Congress will comply. Of course, this does not represent all of the taxes paid by corporations, but the corporations of the country have never paid 50 per cent of their income for taxes.

Again, I sell oats and I find, according to the Department of Agriculture, that oats are now selling at 45 cents and did sell at 39 cents for the five-year average before the war, so we are receiving 112 for oats as compared with the prices before the war.

When I sell these oats, I buy lumber and I find the lumber price was $30 before the war and is now about $60, so lumber stands at 200. When you figure this out you have a 56-cent dollar when the farmer buys lumber with oats.

Again, I sell hay and the Department of Agriculture says that hay is $10 per ton in 1927 and $11 per ton in the five years before the war, so the price of hay is lower now than it was before the war and the farmer has a 90-cent dollar when he sells hay. He buys fencing. We find fencing has gone up from about 38 cents per rod to 62 cents, so that fence is 63 per cent higher than it was before the war. With his 90-cent hay dollar, the farmer buys fencing and when he figures it out he finds he is paying with a 55-cent dollar.

Then I want to paint the building and I sell wheat. According to the Department of Agriculture the price of wheat is $1.11 and it was 88 cents before the war, so I have a $1.26 dollar as compared with conditions before the war. I buy oil, white lead, and I find they are higher by 100 per cent than they were before the war, so the farmer finds he has a 63-cent dollar when he exchanges wheat for paint for his building.

Now, I have some milk to sell and I want to tile some land. Milk per hundred pounds before the war was $1.80 for 4 per cent and last month was $2.55, and we have in milk a $1.39 cent dollar. We buy tile with the dollar and we find 4-inch tile before the war cost 25 cents per rod and now 45 cents, or it takes a $1.80 dollar to buy it.

Therefore when you trade milk for tile you have a 77-cent dollar.

Again, we have hogs to sell. The price before the war was $7.23, and the price at home to-day is $8.50, and the hog dollar is therefore a $1.18 dollar.

We have labor to buy, and the Agriculture Department says that it takes a dollar worth $1.63 to buy labor.

When you use the hog dollar to buy labor you therefore have a 70-cent dollar. I could go on trading agricultural products for other things the farmers buy—farm machinery, clothing, groceries, and so forth—if I had the figures at my command, and it may be necessary at another time to go into them, but I have compared the principal exchanges, and the value of the dollar used by the farmer is as follows:

The corn dollar exchanged for tax	$0.45
The oats dollar exchanged for lumber	.56
The hay dollar exchanged for fencing	.55
The wheat dollar exchanged for paint	.63
The milk dollar exchanged for tile	.77
The hog dollar exchanged for labor	.70
	6)3.66
Average dollar worth	.61

Are these exchanges fairly computed? Would weighting them make any radical change? Would the addition of farm machinery, clothing, gasoline, furniture, and groceries make any material difference?

What becomes of this 92-cent dollar of the Department of Agriculture? My own experience indicates that the northern farmer has a 61-cent dollar and that the price comparison alone is unfair to the farmer, because when he secures a high price he has low production and small actual revenue.

Leaving out labor and taxes, as the Agriculture Department does, does not explain all this discrepancy between 92 and 61 as the value of the farmer's dollar. What else have they subtracted or added? But leaving out all this price comparison, which leads to error, why does the Department of Agriculture not herald to the world that the total revenue of the farmer is twelve billion as against seventy-eight billion for the other groups? Then the country would know why the farmer is trying to be heard. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HULL] such time as he may desire.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the pending bill is not, and I doubt in the circumstances if it could be made, entirely satisfactory to but few if any persons. The bill relates to the settlement of transactions arising during the war more than nine years ago. The long delay in effecting these settlements chiefly accounts for the extremely difficult problems one must face in attempting a belated settlement. The bill presents a sorry situation, a situation which there would doubtless be every disposition to correct or improve were it not for the fact that the only alternative to this bill is probably something worse, although some changes might be made to an advantage. In this situation I feel constrained, without discussing the merits or demerits of the course of our Government since the war in dealing with reparations, to trace and describe that course and policy, and to base my action in voting for the pending bill upon the unavoidable conditions that are presented to us to-day as a direct result of the long failure and delay of our Government to take seasonable and effective steps to settle these claims. I shall therefore repeat in substance what I have said on a former occasion, the history of the general reparations problem since 1918 and the strange course of nonaction and delay on the part of our Government in connection therewith.

The Reparation Commission was organized in 1919 by the delegates to the Versailles Peace Conference. The relation of the United States to reparations has always been unofficial. Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Albert Rathbone was instructed to attend the meetings from December, 1919, to the spring of 1920, when R. W. Boyden succeeded him until February 19, 1921, when, as a courtesy to the incoming Republican administration, he was withdrawn. In May, 1921, Boyden was instructed by Secretary Hughes to sit again unofficially on reparation commission. He was succeeded by James A. Logan August 1, 1923. On October 15, 1923, Secretary Hughes notified the allied governments that the United States could only take part in the conference on German reparations, provided the conference should be merely advisory and that the United States could not appoint a member of the Reparation Commission since such appointment could not be made without the consent of Congress. In other words, the United States could not officially participate in the proceedings of the Reparation Commission. Again, on December 12, the United States turned down another invitation to participate officially in the proposed work of the Reparation Commission. The separate Berlin treaty contained a Senate reservation prohibiting the United States from being represented on the Reparation Commission without consent of Congress. President Harding in a letter to Senator Lodge on December 27, 1922, urged the removal of this prohibition, but no action was taken. Secretary Hughes on October 15, 1923, suggested that competent American citizens would be willing to participate in an economic inquiry relating to the balancing of the German budget, measures to be taken to stabilize her currency, and the further development of the reparation problem.

The first suggestion on this general subject culminated in an agreement for the appointment of the so-called Dawes committee of experts on November 30, 1923. This committee met at Paris January 14, 1924. The Dawes committee made its report to the Reparation Commission April 9, 1924. This report was accepted by the Reparation Commission as a suitable basis for a new solution of the reparations problem. The London reparation conference convened July 16, 1924, to consider the Dawes report, and out of it to develop a modified reparations plan. This meeting was successful and adjourned on August 30 following. The United States sent delegates to the London conference, but "with strictly limited powers." Frank B. Kellogg, ambassador to London, on July 16 stated that—> we do not come in the same capacity, with the same powers, as the other delegates, because we are not parties to the Versailles treaty or the sanctions now in force, etc.

The American delegates, therefore, refrained from signing the final act of the London conference on August 16, 1924.

The Paris conference was held January 7 to 14, 1925, to agree upon and allocate to the allied governments their respective shares of German reparations under the Dawes plan. American delegates participated in the Paris conference. Secretary Kellogg, in a letter dated August 5, 1924, announced that—> in view of the fact that the purpose of this conference will include the question of the allocation of German payments since January 1, 1923, etc., the United States should be represented.

The Paris conference resulted in an agreement between all the allied governments and the United States relative to the distribution of the German reparations to each Government in the future. The Dawes plan as adopted by the London conference provided, among other things, that—> the payments made by Germany are to comprise all amounts for which Germany may be liable to the allied and associated powers for the costs arising out of the war, including reparation, restitution, clearing-house operations, etc.

In other words, all charges payable by Germany to the allied and associated powers for these war costs. This included the United States. It was due to this agreement that the United States was cut off from receiving any payments from Germany for any purpose under the separate Berlin treaty between our Government and Germany, but all payments that might be received could only come out of reparations provided for by the Dawes Commission. It was in these circumstances that the United States, speaking through Ambassador Kellogg, hastened to request permission to sit for the first time as a full-fledged delegate in the Paris conference convened to allocate reparations to the allied governments under the Dawes plan. The final outcome was that the United States was allowed out of the Dawes annuities 55,000,000 gold marks per annum, beginning September 21, 1926, in payment of the costs of our Army occupation in Germany after the war, or from November 11, 1918, to the date of withdrawal of our army of occupation on January 24, 1923. The American delegates to the Paris conference were so afraid of becoming "involved" even in the single problem of associating with the allied governments in collecting reparations that they strenuously protested against signing the full Paris agreement. When they discovered that America would get nothing under the Dawes plan unless they did sign the entire agreement, they proceeded to do so. This agreement was dated January 14, 1925. At this time the American debt against Germany for Army occupation was around $255,000,000 and the estimated debts due American nationals was $350,000,000. The pittance allowed for these estimated amounts under the Dawes plan would not pay interest, much less any part of the principal. The figures as to claims of American nationals, however, have been reduced so that the allowance of 2¼ per cent would pay off these claims within 60 to 80 years. This is the kind and character of settlement that our Government made with respect to the payment of these two debts against Germany in January, 1925, more than six years after the armistice. To the past year not one dollar had accrued to our Government either in payment of Army occupation debt or American claims, save the amount just recited and certain small amounts in the nature of requisitions made by our Army in Germany under the Rhineland agreement, which the allied governments had placed in operation.

It is important to contrast the steps of the allied governments taken during all the years prior to 1925 to collect from Germany their Army occupation costs and claims of their respective nationals, while the American Government was pursuing its chosen policy of utter inaction, aloofness, and isolation, even with respect to the operations of the allied Reparation Commission, dealing alone with the question of collecting money due from Germany for war costs. In the first place, the Allies collected for themselves from Germany during the period prior to June 30, 1923, in cash and in kind, the sum of $1,280,000,000 through the Reparation Commission. The United States having failed to ratify the treaty of peace with Germany of June 28, 1919, proceeded on August 25, 1921, to negotiate a separate treaty of peace with Germany. This treaty proposed to give the United States all rights, privileges, indemnities, or advantages stipulated for the benefit of the United States in the treaty of Versailles. Article 2 of that treaty specified among other rights accruing to the United States should be those under parts 8, 9, and 10 of the treaty of Versailles, relating, respectively, to reparation, financial, and economic matters. These included claims of our nationals. The treaty of Versailles provided that the costs of the armies of occupation should be the first charge upon reparations. The United States, however, having made a separate treaty with Germany, which was designed to enable the United States, acting separately from the allied governments, and individually, to collect from Germany direct her Army costs and the claims of her nationals, the allied governments proceeded to demand and receive the chief portion of their army costs, which were accordingly paid through the Reparation Commission; but America, failing either to request or to accept payment through this agency, received nothing, not even direct from Germany, as the Berlin treaty contemplated.

During the years 1919 to 1925 the allied governments, acting under articles 296 and 297 of the treaty of Versailles, which provided for the liquidation of debts of the nationals of either side due to the nationals of the other, proceeded to set up clearing offices for handling these mutual claims and arbitral tribunals for matters involving questions of law. These clearing offices functioned for more than five years and settled the majority of the claims. When the value of Germany's claims did not offset that of the creditor States, Germany made special monthly payments to balance the clearing-office accounts. The United States refusing to avail itself of the clearing-office system, did not, of course, have any claims of this character disposed of and has not to this day collected and paid to our nationals a penny of their claims against Germany. It, of course, is true that 2¼ per cent of the Dawes annuities commenced in the first year of the Dawes plan, September 1, 1924, to August 31, 1925. It is also true that in an effort to pursue relations direct with Germany under our separate Berlin treaty, and hence not to look to the Reparation Commission or to avail ourselves of the clearing-office system, our Government did, on August 10, 1922, effect an agreement with Germany for a Mixed Claims Commission to determine the amount to be paid by Germany on account of our nationals and our Government from the German Government and German nationals. That commission has not even yet concluded its work. The allied governments, on the other hand, proceeded with dispatch to collect from Germany vast amounts both on account of army occupation and debts due their nationals while Germany was able and in a humor to pay.

It is remarkably strange that although the allied governments during the years following our separate Berlin treaty were constantly inviting the American Government to participate in the work of the Reparation Commission, thereby utilizing both the Berlin treaty and the Reparation Commission as agencies through which to secure payments for Army expenses and on claims of our nationals. The inevitable result was that until 1925 our Government failed to realize a penny on any obligation by Germany, either under the Berlin treaty or through the Allied Reparation Commission. These facts strikingly reveal how and why American rights and claims are to-day unpaid in whole or in part.

The general result of our course left our Government in the position, finally, of an agreement with Germany that the property of her nationals seized by our Government should be retained as security for debts due our Government and nationals or until such debts were discharged, while at the same time we were later forced to become parties to the Paris agreement, under the Dawes plan, which would require the German Government 80 years to pay obligations to our nationals. This conflicting situation imperatively required our Government either to confiscate German property held by the Alien Property Custodian or provide for its release within a far shorter period than 80 years, the time necessary for payment of the American claimants. It was this course and these conditions resulting which have rendered it impossible for our Government now to make a really satisfactory adjustment pro or con of indebtedness between our Government and Germany and our nationals and German nationals. In point of fact, the Dawes plan requires our Government to turn back as a credit on our annuities under the Dawes plan any excess or final balance, or, in fact, any property finally retained by our Government must be credited on the annuities of the Dawes Commission otherwise due us.

It seems that our Government, in the spring of 1923, for the first time awakened to the fact that neither the debts for Army occupation nor those due our nationals might ever be paid separately and directly under the Berlin treaty. It was decided, therefore, to send Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Wadsworth to Europe to secure, if possible, an agreement for payment of Army costs as specially provided by the armistice agreement. This Army cost agreement was negotiated on May 25, 1923, but was never ratified by France, although Belgium, in the meantime, had deposited 62,500,000 gold marks in New York to be turned over to the American Government whenever France ratified the agreement, which she never did. Our Government declined to accept payment in kind at any time. The fact that the Allies did accept payments in kind to a measurable extent greatly aided in balancing off and settling indebtedness between them and their nationals and Germany under articles 296 and 297 of the treaty of Versailles.

It seems that Ambassador Kellogg in his letter of August 5, 1924, not only sought to have America represented in the Paris conference later to be held, but also sought an understanding to the effect that the right of the United States to share in reparation distributions for debts due our nationals as well as Army costs should be recognized, and that this gave rise to an extended debate in the plenary meeting of August 12. This controversy appears also to have been renewed at the outset of the Paris conference. It was charged by the British representative that the United States had several times been requested to present a detailed schedule of the claims of our nationals in order that the allied experts could examine them, "but this request has not been acceded to." The American expert contended that he had formerly raised the question of the participation of the United States in the plan annuities, although it was admittedly at a belated stage. The facts seem to warrant the conclusion that the unratified Wadsworth Army cost agreement of May 25, 1923, was recast at the instance of the United States Government as a condition precedent to the allowance of the 2¼ per cent annuity for the payment of American nationals under the Dawes plan. Under the Wadsworth plan our Army debt was payable in 12 annual installments, or $21,000,000 per year. In order, therefore, to secure any share of the Dawes annuities with which to pay any part of the claims of our nationals, it was agreed that the payment of our Army cost should be 55,000,000 gold marks per annum, or about $13,000,000, and extending over a period of nearly 20 years. It was only then that the 2¼ per cent was squeezed through the Paris conference as a last-minute and very grudging concession. The United States, therefore, secured nearly $23,000,000 of the total annual amount of German reparations when they become payable in full of $625,000,000. To the stage of the Paris conference, or from November 11, 1918, to February 28, 1925, the total amount of German reparation payments of every kind aggregated $2,250,000,000, not including income from the Ruhr occupation amounting to near $300,000,000.

The question has been asked whether the Paris agreement surrendered or modified any treaty right of the United States or in any way limited the amount of the claims of the United States. It is true that no treaty right nor the amount of the claims of the United States was limited or modified by the Paris agreement, but the opportunity or chance for securing payment of American claims was tremendously limited. It is true that in the event the Dawes plan of reparations should break down, all unpaid American claims and debts would stand intact against Germany. It is equally true that they would no more be collectible from Germany under our separate Berlin treaty than they were collectible under this treaty from 1921 to 1925. It is greatly surprising that our Government negotiated and entered into the separate treaty of Berlin upon the assumption and belief that we could secure payment for debts due our Government and our nationals direct from Germany under the Berlin treaty. It is even more surprising that our Government did not awake from this patent delusion until 1924 when, in the language of Secretary Kellogg, "it was believed that participation in payment under the Dawes plan would be advantageous to the United States." This fatal lapse on the part of our Government during these years accounts for our present predicament in attempting to deal with the American and German debt situation. We lose as a result all interest on our Army cost bill of $240,000,000 principal. Assuming that the principal will be ultimately paid, the interest loss to our Government will aggregate much over $100,000,000. Long delay and substantial losses have also been suffered by American claimants. Let me make more clear the conclusions just stated. America embraced and ratified the Berlin treaty upon the plea, among others, that according to article 1 the United States should enjoy "all the rights, privileges, indemnities, reparations, or advantages, and so forth, stipulated for the benefit of the United States in the treaty of Versailles, which the United States shall fully enjoy notwithstanding the fact that such treaty has not been ratified by the United States."

The allied governments, when the United States sought to participate in the London and Paris conferences for the purpose of securing payment of amounts due from Germany, called attention to article 248 of the Versailles treaty by which Germany "constituted the reparation obligations the first charge upon all her assets," and that she could not, therefore, legally acknowledge any new obligations to a separate government which had not ratified the Versailles treaty. Attention was further called to the terms of the treaty of Versailles to the effect that the amount of damage for which compensation was to be made by Germany should be left to the Reparation Commission. The fact should be kept in mind that the original Reparation Commission of 1919 is still alive and functioning. The allied governments also insisted in this connection that at no time prior to the London conference in 1924 did the American Government offer the slightest hint or suggestion to the Reparation Commission of any claim against Germany which it was desired to have paid through the Reparation Commission. To the further contention of the United States that nothing in the Versailles treaty prohibited or incapacitated Germany from making separate and direct settlements with and payments to the United States, the allied governments again emphasized article 248 of the treaty of Versailles, and insisted that according to the terms of this treaty the assessment of the reparation claims of the Allies is the exclusive business of the Reparation Commission, and that it is a "general controlling agency set up by the treaty with jurisdiction over all the reparation claims of the powers contracting with Germany," and so forth; that the Reparation Commission both before and after the Dawes plan has sought to collect off Germany to the limit of her ability to pay. The allied governments made the final reply that "one or more of the allied and associated powers could properly make a separate agreement" relative to the payment of its own claim, but that when a joint treaty in behalf of 25 associated powers and creditors has been negotiated and entered into, it would not be justifiable for a single associated power to undertake to enter into a separate treaty with provisions that would deprive the other 25 creditor nations of German payments contemplated by the joint treaty previously entered into with the knowledge of all nations. At least some notice and some understanding with the 25 joint creditor countries was necessary at the time the separate treaty was made. In other words, when 25 crediters adopt a plan of dealing with the assets of a debtor, it is doubtful whether a twenty-sixth creditor may later proceed to deal with the assets as though the 25 creditors and their previous arrangement were not in existence. Some sort of concert is naturally necessary and logical.

I have sought briefly to detail the substance of the conflicting views of our Government and those of the allied governments as they have related to the course of the American Government in dealing with our claims against Germany for Army costs and for our nationals. Without expressing definite opinions relative to the merits of these international discussions, it does seem that our Government at least was driven to the resort of invoking "all defenses." At any rate, our Government was overwhelmingly overruled and somewhat sheepishly abided the decision. While it is true that our indebtedness against Germany will stand intact in the event the Dawes plan should fail, it has been demonstrated also to be true that any payments thereafter made to us by Germany would come through the Reparation Commission and not direct under the Berlin treaty. In addition to the losses I have already pointed out due to the failure of this Government to keep in touch with the Reparation Commission prior to 1925, our Government must now take the position of a deferred creditor with possible payments far in the future, even if the provisions of the pending bill are carried out. I shall as the only possible way out of an extremely bad situation vote for the pending bill, but I shall never be able to excuse the obtuseness and unpardonable negligence of our Government in handling its claims and the claims of its nationals. In the grossly unsatisfactory and now impossible situation, we can only charge off to profit and loss more than $100,000,000 interest on German debt for Army occupation, and later charge off likewise such portions of the debt of $60,000,000, with interest, due our Government and payable after 25 years, which may not then be paid. Such losses will of course constitute a penalty which our people must pay on account of our Government's policy of delay, inaction, and aloofness since the war. I say this because the only alternatives to the passage of some such bill as this, which makes the Government a long-deferred creditor, would be to confiscate the property of the German nationals we hold, or make individual claimants the long-deferred creditors rather than the Government.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DALLINGER].

Mr. DALLINGER. Mr. Chairman, as evidence that there is a widespread belief upon the part of a very large body of our citizens that they are denied the equal rights guaranteed them by the Constitution of the United States, I wish to read the petition of the National Equal Rights League and Race Congress on behalf of the colored citizens of the United States for the enforcement of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. It is as follows:

To Honorable Members of the Congress of the United States:

In the Constitutional Convention of 1787, held for the purpose of creating a "more perfect Union," the question of perpetuating the institution of slavery was the cause of acrimonious debate therein. So heated, indeed, became this controversy between those who were for and those who were against the system of slavery that two compromises upon this issue had to be reached before agreement upon the Constitution could be attained.

George Mason, of Virginia, a delegate to the convention, urged the abolition of slavery, and stated that unless the institution was abolished a war between the northern and southern sections of the United States would ensue—the clash of opposing sectional interests could terminate in no other way. This prophet found himself without honor in his own land and walked out of the convention, refusing to affix his signature to the instrument as finally adopted.

From 1787 to 1861 the history of the United States discloses the truth that moral issues dodged, no matter how deftly, will one day strike with crushing force.

Slavery was abolished on the battle fields of the Republic, but in its wake there followed peonage, disfranchisement, lynching, civil and political disabilities imposed upon the people who had just escaped from age-long bondage.

After the passage of 60 years we find colored Americans victimized in many parts of the land, and especially in the South, by the same evil forces of arrogance and hate which had held them so long in slavery with the aid of governments, both State and Federal.

Fortunately the great leaders of the Nation, at the close of the Civil War, so amended the Constitution as to make it square with the Declaration of Independence and the principles of free, democratic government, and under the amended instrument Congress was empowered to enforce these new articles wherever and whenever they should be violated.

We therefore most respectfully invite the attention of Congress to the fact that colored American citizens have been deprived of the right to vote by laws enacted and State constitutions adopted. Cunningly worded statutes were devised to accomplish this purpose, so that, if possible, these regulations might be held to conform to the amended Constitution.

Much success has thus far attended the efforts of reactionary communities to rob colored American citizens of the right to vote upon terms of equality with their white fellow citizens, but the immediate penalty paid by such communities has been to find themselves pushed backward into the least progressive communities of the land. They have fallen behind economically, educationally, and represent politically ideas which have brought and are continuing to bring in many parts of the world upheaval and revolution. They are not only not abreast of the best American thought, but their hideous reaction has given birth to a lawless organization now engaged in spreading corruption and terror in wide sections of our country.

The failure of the Federal Government to carry out the provisions of the Constitution, which guarantees republican forms of government to every State within the Union, has resulted in lawlessness on such a widespread scale that even southern officials are becoming alarmed over the situation, and are so expressing themselves.

When white women as well as men are being whipped and maimed by a nationally organized band of disguised things, we have a perfect demonstration of the extent to which lawlessness will go, from its black to its white victims, when once it is allowed to take firm root.

Another moral issue now faces the constituted authorities of the land. Will it be met or will it be dodged, as was the slavery issue?

We most respectfully call upon the Congress of the United States to carry out its sworn obligation, to protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, to the end that the rights of all citizens may be secured under republican forms of government. The Constitution provides the way.

We most respectfully urge upon Congress increased Federal aid to southern education, passage of the Dyer antilynching bill, a law-making segregation of colored employees of the Federal civil service a statutory offense, enforcement of the fourteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, to the end that disfranchisement and racial segregation upon common carriers shall be abolished.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOWREY].

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, on general principles I do not advocate Government ownership or Government operation of industries. In the first place, such operation is generally both extravagant and inefficient. In the second place, the citizen hardly gets a fair deal when the Government comes into competition with him in some line of enterprise, and then collects taxes from him to establish and maintain this competition. Such a policy if generally pursued by the Government would tend both to destroy private initiative and to dry up the streams of public revenue. In spite of these views, however, I have revised and reintroduced my bill for at least indirect and temporary Government operation of Muscle Shoals.

I say "indirect," because the bill provides for a Government corporation rather than direct management through some Federal department; and "temporary," because the life of this corporation is fixed at only 10 years. So the Congress may perpetuate this plan or arrange for private control as may seem wise after the proposed scheme has been sufficiently tested.

For these years the Congress has been trying in vain to arrive at some conclusion as to what should be done with the Muscle Shoals enterprise. The plant looks like a great public asset, and I trust that it will finally prove such. Yet so far it has been only a problem and a burden. We have hesitated about Government operation and yet we have been unable to secure a bid for private operation upon which we could agree. Certainly these conditions should not continue longer.

The chief trouble seems to be that nobody is prepared to take hold of this business with full confidence or certainty. Neither the Congress nor the business organizations of the country have sufficient experience of such a plant to enter with full assurance into a contract for its permanent operation.

The Government has spent huge sums of money upon the enterprise, and large sums will yet be needed to get it to working at full capacity. Government management may be or may not be the final solution of the problem, but our experience so far convinces me that the Government would for the present best keep the property in hand and operate it at least through the experimental stage.

The original purpose of the Muscle Shoals development was to provide explosives for the use of the Army and Navy in times of war and fertilizer for agriculture in times of peace. Later there has come into the problem the very large question of hydroelectric power to be used in public utility and for industrial and commercial development. This great enterprise therefore concerns especially three phases of our country's welfare—agriculture, national defense, and commerce and industry. Therefore in framing my bill I have provided that the operation of Muscle Shoals should be directed by a Government corporation of which the three directors should be the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of Commerce. The immediate management of the business is to be in the hands of a general superintendent selected by the directors with two assistants selected by the general superintendent. One of these assistants must be a man of information and experience in the fixation of nitrogen and the production of nitrogenous materials, and the other an expert on hydroelectric power.

I have intentionally provided that the directors shall have large powers and broad latitude, because I am sure that they will need that if they successfully meet the conditions and work out the problems.

The plan proposed contains a very vital provision for national defense and a provision for very large industrial and commercial development through the production and distribution of power. Yet I should say that in its finality it is a farm-relief measure. The production and distribution of fertilizer and the consequent relief of agriculture are made primary; and any net profits derived from the sale of power are to be used for production of fertilizer and improvement of soils.

I invite my colleagues to read this bill carefully, and I presume to believe that you will find its provisions worthy of very careful consideration. The bill was introduced to-day. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I would not ordinarily at this time in the evening ask your indulgence, because I know it is rather trying after a day's session to expect the few gentlemen who are always on guard to listen to one to whom you have listened probably many times on unimportant subjects, but flood control is of paramount importance to any Member representing a district from that section, and particularly to those born and bred in that section. What I am going to say might not appear strictly relevant to the discussion of this bill under consideration, but I think it has some bearing upon it. I have heard several gentlemen here discuss this bill from the same standpoint, that the funding bill was so generally and so ably and adroitly considered and discussed last year and two years ago. Capacity to pay was the outstanding feature of almost every speech and with each gentleman was the controlling factor of the main point in every speech, and all the changes were rung upon it in the consideration of the funding of the debts due us by European nations—the capacity to pay. I believe that is a correct doctrine. At any rate I have no fault to find with it. I am going to vote for this bill. I believe it is a proper thing, as the American attitude, to vote for a bill of this kind in order to preserve our national prestige and in order to maintain our traditions. I voted for all the debt bills logically based upon the capacity of the peoples involved to pay. I know our country is generously disposed to European nations, and I believe when those people are in affliction or sorrow or financial distress that our people and our country, our Government, should be generously inclined. That is a duty we owe to humanity, and as long as we remain a free, liberty-loving, fine people we will continue to dream and do noble things and discharge the moral obligations we owe the world and mankind. Not only do we discharge very generously our obligations to the alien beyond the seas, but we legislate benignly for the well to do, the rich, the opulent, the powerful, as is evidenced in the several tax reduction bills passed since the termination of the war. We have made a reduction when there was no general demand for it. The bill passed yesterday was not very popularly demanded by the people of the United States. I do not think they paid much attention to it. But I voted for that bill, even while recognizing that its main provisions practically brought about a reduction of $274,000,000, which was in the nature of a gift to the corporations, for the bill remits a tax which had already been collected, as it was made a part of the price of the goods sold by the corporations.

In other words, instead of applying the reduction to 1928 and subsequent incomes it is retroactive and includes 1927 incomes. Now, this generous and overgenerous disposition may be all right. But I have always thought that charity and related sentiments should not only begin at home but always be applied when and where most needed. The thing that has always occurred to me as one of the inexplicable characteristics of the American people is that they hesitate to deal as generously with their own when in absolute distress, but who do not want to solicit charity, believing that if granted the relief which they think they are entitled to that they would be able to stand erect and work out their own salvation by their toil and patience as they unfailingly and emotionally do by the stranger and the kinsman who does not need the helping hand. I know we get up a Red Cross movement very quickly when any disaster suggests, but these are temporary impulses that soon pass away. What I mean is that as a general thing there is more national concern over the misfortunes of other nationals than any disposition to recognize a great national obligation to an immense section of our own country, such as the Mississippi Valley, where dwell millions and millions of our own—our American countrymen, our kith and kin, blood of our blood, and bone of our bone. Read the refunding bills and the legislative literature on those bills and then read up to this moment the written word by the administrative branch of the Government. Render unto Cæsar at home and abroad all that is due unto Cæsar. If I thought it would promote the welfare of the world and make mankind a little more happy, a little more contented, and I had the power, I would cancel all of the debts due us. I would give industry and commerce every chance and opportunity to give vast permanent employment to our toilers, our working people in factory and foundry, in field, on the farms, and in the mines by removing every tax that might slow up the wheels of prosperity; all of which brings me back to a repetition of what I have already said, and that is that we are in many respects a most generous people, particularly to those we owe the least, while with our kinswomen and kinsmen, people who have been struggling for many, many years to keep up their civilization in spite of tremendous difficulties—war, famine, disease, disaster, the breaking of the Mississippi River levees—we find a disposition to be most exacting.

That is illustrated by the engineers' report recently made with reference to the proposed flood control and the President's message on the subject. I wish to say now, with all the deference that it is possible for me to express the thought in, that the attitude of the President of the United States could be more generous under all the circumstances without even in the slightest or remotest way impinging or violating any economic or governmental principle or well-established policy. And it is our hope that upon a further reflection of a matter that I know has been one of gravest concern to him, that he will realize that we of the valley have nothing to contribute.

What is the use, my friends, of submitting a proposition legislatively to a people who can not meet the conditions? What is the use of asking the people of that section, broken on the wheel of adversity, bowed down in their grief, prostrate, and absolutely ruined, to make a contribution of 20 per cent, which, after all, does not represent the exact contribution they have to make? It is almost adding insult to injury. It is laughing at them in their woe to ask them for money which they have not got, something that it is impossible for them to secure. In my judgment it is not treating the matter as solemnly as it should be treated.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Certainly.

Mr. COLLIER. I recently read in an editorial in one of the large newspapers of the country—I forget which one of them, now—in which they seemed to treat 20 per cent as the maximum contribution, and, in fact, all the contributions that those people would make. As the gentleman from Louisiana has the floor, will he tell us how much more they have to make in buying lots and turning that property over to the Government for the purpose of flood control?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Yes; 20 per cent, my friends, is really the minimum. I was born and reared behind the banks of the Mississippi River. I have witnessed many crevasses. Like all those to the manner born, I have never been in terror of a break in the river bank, though I know that a crevasse is not a trifling thing. Our people will continue to live where they were born and reared, regardless of river danger. And when you reflect upon the peculiarities of human nature and consider that men and women have lived on the slopes of Vesuvius and Ætna during all the ages, notwithstanding the volcanic eruptions which always threaten, and have gone back and resumed their habitations after every catastrophe, it is no great matter for wonderment that our own people want to struggle back to their homes behind the levees after a flood, however disastrous it might have been.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Will the gentleman kindly let me have five minutes more?

Mr. COLLIER. Subject to the approval of the gentleman from Iowa, I will agree to give the gentleman five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana is recognized for five minutes more.

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Our people have done so repeatedly and will continue to do so, and dwell along the banks of the Mississippi River because it is home, which means and says it all. But I want to answer the point raised by my friend from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER]. Twenty per cent is the minimum that it will cost to try to live up to that report, and that is an impossible condition. Why should not the Government bear the full cost of acquiring and operating spillways? If the engineers had recommended exclusively larger and stronger levees, I do not think the recommendations would be taken seriously by the House, because it is entirely logical and it appeals to your sense of reason that if you raised the levees and restricted the waters within them the result would be in the nature of a dam and would not have been different from the plan the engineers have been following for 40 years. During my lifetime I have seen reclaimed practically 20,000 square miles of that area which were formerly reservoirs of the great river. The White River, the St. Francis, the Yazoo, and the Tensas Basins were once the great natural storage reservoirs for the Father of Waters.

I believe in one of the recent magazine issues of the Isaak Walton League it is stated that 20,000 additional miles were taken up and reclaimed of a once swampy and alluvial nature soil and made habitable. It is these tremendous reclamations that have done a whole lot in bringing us into the perilous position we are in to-day. I repeat, and I can not repeat it too often, the spillway sites should be paid for by the General Government.

Now, gentlemen, I would like, if you would give me your attention, to speak for a few moments on that angle or slant of the flood problem, because it is all important. As I say, if the proposition were brought before the House just simply to enlarge the levees, I do not think it would take the country by storm, for it would simply be an enlargement of the present situation, and, what is more, the subsoil of Louisiana would not permit of much larger levees.

Without the spillway site, which, in my judgment, is sine qua non and absolutely essential in order to make for the success of the new plan, we might as well not legislate on the plan. Therefore the spillways, being a part of the whole system and being for the benefit of the whole river, should be considered a part of it and should not be looked upon merely as a local proposition, for our people in Lousiana and the people of Louisiana be expected to furnish that site and devote a tremendous area to the carrying off of the waters that pour down upon us from 34 States of the Union. I want to get that to Mr. TILSON and Mr. LONGWORTH, who are doing me the honor to listen to me, because probably that obvious observation may not have occurred to them. Sometimes we do not look at our feet because we are busy looking at the horizon. That struck me as being important and that a higher levee system would not mean much, and I do not know that you could get it through the House at the expense involved without spillways and outlets. And that is the only logical way to take the water out of the river before it strikes and drowns us as a result of an accumulated volume that will not suffer restraint.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman means by spillways not only the site where it leaves the main river but the entire land that would be covered by these overflows? That is what the gentleman means by spillways?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. Yes; all of the land covered by these overflows through what is known as a spillway.

Mr. TILSON. And the gentleman's idea is that that should be paid for as a part of the expense, the same as the levees?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I think so.

Mr. TILSON. Then to whom would this land belong?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. To the National Government. There should be national responsibility in toto. I do not think the States or local communities ought to have anything to do about it, because it is a national proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has again expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman an additional minute.

Mr. TILSON. In these spillways there would be a considerable territory that would be covered by water in time of flood. To whom would these lands belong and who would use the lands during the years when there are no floods?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. They would belong exclusively to the National Government.

Mr. TILSON. They would lie fallow and not be cultivated?

Mr. O'CONNOR of Louisiana. I do not think we can have a divided responsibility or a divided ownership with the States or localities. It is a national responsibility, a national obligation, and there can not be divided ownership. Divided ownership simply means the confusion that has followed up to this time. If it is a national obligation the country ought to discharge that obligation exclusively, and the States should not be permitted to have anything to say about the manner in which that discharge should be made. I want to thank the gentleman. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MAPES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7201) to provide for the settlement of certain claims of American nationals against Germany and of German nationals against the United States, for the ultimate return of all property of German nationals held by the Alien Property Custodian, and for the equitable apportionment among all claimants of certain available funds, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with its previous order, adjourned until Monday, December 19, 1927, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

SATURDAY, December 17, 1927

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly and to love mercy and to walk humbly with thy God.

Almighty and everlasting God, who art always more ready to hear than we to pray, and art wont to give more than either we desire or deserve, grant to us, Thy children, such a consciousness of Thy indwelling presence as may give us utter confidence in Thee. In all our doubts and perplexities may we throw ourselves upon Thy besetting care, that knowing ourselves fenced about by Thy loving omnipotence we may serve Thee always with singleness of heart. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last, when, on the request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

The other appeared in the Washington Post of yesterday, the 16th instant, and I am informed that it was written by Mr. Ira W. Bennett. I commend these two editorials to every Member of the Senate. They are real gems.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The speech and editorials are as follows:

SPEECH OF HON. FREDERIC M. SACKETT, UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM KENTUCKY

The results of the Mississippi flood of 1927 give clear indication that the whole system of flood control in that valley has broken down, to the extent that a new and much more effective plan must be evolved before safety can be assured to the vast territory that lies between the Ohio River and the sea.

That great valley is one of the most valuable portions of the United States. It is wonderfully fertile. It grows the long staple cotton. It has yielded to the call for diversification of crops in the South and is producing a wide variety of agricultural products.

Within the last few years the Mississippi Valley has been recognized as preeminently adapted by climate, transportation facilities, and labor conditions for industrial expansion. Its industries are growing rapidly, and capital of all sections is seeking industrial investment throughout the South. The new factory building now evident in the valley is the most important development in America to-day.

It is of tremendous moment to the country that adequate protection from almost yearly inundation be provided in order that this valuable section shall be preserved. Its money resources have been called upon for more than a hundred years, until financially its limit of local ability has been reached.

The recommendation of the Government engineers was laid before the Congress on December 7.

It is not my purpose to discuss with you to-day the kind of a plan of flood control that should be adopted by the Congress but to present arguments which may appeal to a thinking public as reasons why the flood-control work of the Mississippi Valley should be a national project—designed, constructed, and paid for by the National Government.

If you had stood in the broad valley of the Mississippi in April and May of the current year and had seen the raging water, descending through the main funnel of the river, eating its way through the protecting dikes that line its banks, you would more readily appreciate the tremendous task that lies before the Nation in providing a protection against the death and destruction that year after year have followed in the wake of the recurrent floods. Can you picture the danger point of threatened levee; the intensive, desperate work of all hands to strengthen the dikes; the failure of brawn and brain in this titanic struggle; the first break in the dike; the widening crevasse as the water plows its way through the levee, flooding the countryside; the destruction of homes and fields; the drowning of livestock; the desperate people clinging to the higher places as yet unsubmerged; the rescues just ahead of the rising waters; the despondency of the ruined; the utter hopelessness that follows the subsiding flood?

That is the vivid story that was told as the mighty flood left its trail of desolation in the valley of the Mississippi. Eighteen thousand square miles of land suffered from this destruction in 1927. The economic loss upon the country will run to $400,000,000. It represents a national disaster that affects every section. No such money loss can fall upon this country but what its ramifications must be felt in every city of the land. In financial cost the present ineffective control of the Mississippi floods involved an economic disaster that is national in scope. In the rapidly growing evolution of the valley into industrial communities there resulted a destruction of capital that is felt in every avenue of trade. Such a national loss is indicative of a national responsibility for prevention.

The early settlers of the valley began in their own limited way a local method of protecting their immediate neighborhoods through the building of dikes to keep out the waters in time of flood. These efforts, puny in comparison with the force of the river in its turbulent state, grew and gradually assumed the form of heavy levees constructed along each side of the river, confining the waters as nearly as practicable into a main channel. Every levee so built reclaimed large sections of overflow land. In so doing it destroyed a natural reservoir that had previously served to flatten the volume of the water in time of flood and relieve the main channel of the necessity of discharging excessive quantities. These overflow lands served in a sense as safety valves against the onrushing waters of the flood. As these overflow areas were eliminated by protective dikes, the congestion of flood waters in the lower reaches of the river was augmented. It became necessary to build new levees higher and stronger to maintain protection of the lower section. The cost of this levee protection became greater year after year and it was early recognized that there must be a continuing charge for levee maintenance upon the lands reclaimed and protected from the danger of the flood. In recent years the cost of this protection mounted to such heights and became so impossible a burden that the Federal Government, in a sense of fairness, became a large contributor to the general funds of flood protection in the valley.

The finances locally provided for flood protection took the form of voluntary levee district charges and were supposed to be distributed according to the benefits to be received. As the organization of each levee district was voluntary, no complete system of flood control could be compelled. Such control as resulted from the organization of these levee boards became only as strong as the weakest link in this voluntary protective chain. The collapse of "protection by levees only" in the 1927 flood through the 17 crevasses that relieved the pressure of the river, resulted in inundation by flood water for more than 50 miles on either side of the river. Is brings poignantly before the Congress the need of an adequate system of flood control for the Mississippi.

In any democracy the subject of flood control and the part which the Federal Government is to play in such control must be applicable to all sections of the country. The enormous expense which would be placed upon the Federal Treasury were the Government to take over the whole expenditure of protection from floods in all parts of the country gives pause to the generous impulses of the people, even when involving the saving of life and property. The President in his message transmitting the engineer's report sounds such a warning. The vastness of the damage, the danger to life, and the effect upon the economic welfare of the Nation of so great a disaster as the flood of 1927, calls for every reasonable effort within the power of the Government. To justify the exclusive application of Federal funds to the problem of the Mississippi Valley requires some reasonable differentiation of that situation from the normal flood problems arising in the country at large. Some degree of differentiation becomes apparent when it is recognized that the Mississippi flood of 1927 constituted the greatest disaster affecting life and property in the whole history of the Nation. The ramifications of that disaster financially were more widespread than any actual loss of property that America has suffered. The people of the valley feel that such differentiation exists in the problem here presented as to permit such a criterion to be established for exclusive Federal expenditure as will protect the Treasury and at the same time enable the Government to afford adequate protection.

The Mississippi forms the boundary of many States, and in that particular it is differentiated from any intrastate stream. Levees have been built and maintained largely with local funds. On the main river alone $170,000,000 have been expended from local sources. The levee system there constructed at local cost would be sufficient to protect the territory if the same methods were effective as are required to confine the flood waters of every other drainage system within the country. However, the complete failure of the levee system so provided is due in no sense to the waters of the territory affected but to the run-off of the rainfall of the 31 States of the drainage area, and requires the adoption of a new protective plan.

The report of the Army Engineers, formulated under the direction of the Federal Government during the past several months, indicates a cost of the execution of these plans that is unfair to the already depleted finances of the people of the valley. The characteristics of the plan call for a kind of flood protection that is different in form from that which it is necessary to use in any other overflowed areas in the United States. The need of the new plan is due to confining the flood waters by the levees of the entire length of the stream and the consequent congestion in the lower stretches of the river. They find that there can be no adequate protection to the menaced territory save by drawing off the accumulated flood waters through newly constructed parallel channels. Such a plan means the adoption of a spillway and by-pass system for withdrawing from the lower stretches of the river a large part of the accumulated waters rushing down from the higher reaches. The building of such parallel channels interconnecting with the now existing rivers estimates an expenditure of $300,000,000. It will require a period of years to complete, and a positively operating plan of construction. No system of voluntary associations, such as the present levee boards that have functioned for building the levees heretofore, can be contemplated in creating such a complicated system of spillway outlets. The actual cost which the adoption of such a plan makes necessary for the adequate protection from the Mississippi floods staggers the imagination of the people who have heretofore exhausted their strength and treasure in the building of the levee system as it now exists.

It falls upon the lower sections of the river through no fault of their own. It is due to waters which do not originate with them and serves again to differentiate the problem of the Mississippi from the normal problems of flood control which face the other sections of the country. It furnishes a criterion to determine the national aspect of the flood-control project. Other drainage districts, after having contributed to their own protection as have the people of the Mississippi Valley, would be justified in requiring flood protection at the expense of the National Government wherever the situation demanded a new system of improved works of a relief character because of burdens placed upon them from regions more remote. Such differentiation serves to protect the Federal Treasury against unjustified calls for flood protection. Federal expenditure for this purpose is analogous to that approved for sea-coast harbors and those other internal improvements which have ever been held to be the portion of the Federal Government under the general welfare clause. The valley has been saved through the financial resources of its own people, voluntarily supplied, up to a point where the growing needs of the country as a whole require a new undertaking which would place a burden upon it beyond any benefits to be received in increased values.

The engineers' plan will disclose an estimated cost to the Nation of some thirty millions a year spread over a period of 10 years. It will show the need of repairing the crevasses of the present works and their careful maintenance for the best protection they can afford until the new work can be completed. These figures should readily relieve the people of the United States of any legitimate fear of any raid upon the National Treasury. We must find the way to accomplish protection to the valley which will protect. If contributions to these new works is required of the States and communities of the lower valley, who have already done their full part, it will seriously delay, if not foreclose, their construction. The Federal Government can well afford the price. By paying that price a national benefit is bought. The Federal Treasury is protected since no other drainage system can present to Congress similar characteristics that will warrant exclusive national aid. The country will be relieved not only of a great menace to American progress but of a drain upon the charitable impulses of private citizens who are under constant call to relieve suffering and loss through the wonderful organization of the Red Cross. Under such circumstances there seems to be indicated such a reversion from local to national needs in the valley of the Mississippi as to justify exclusive Federal expenditure to secure this new protection for the whole country's good.

THE PRESIDENTIAL MESSAGE BLUNDERS ON FLOOD CONTROL

[From the Baltimore Manufacturers Record, December 15, 1927]

When President Coolidge, in his message to Congress, took the position that because the land of the Mississippi Valley would be benefited by protection from floods, it must therefore bear a special assessment to pay for such reclamation, he revealed the fact that in spite of his unmatched opportunity for viewing the situation as a whole and studying it in a broad and comprehensive fashion, he is nevertheless peeping at it through a knothole. His thoughtless use of the word "reclamation" alone reveals a woeful failure to grasp the essentials of the problem, a failure that could hardly have persisted had he once visited the flooded area. We speak of reclaiming land that has not yet been put to use—swamps or deserts. We do not speak of reclaiming long cultivated and highly developed farming sections, cities, factories, and the intricate and costly networks of highways, railways, telegraph, telephone, and electric power lines necessary to serve such farm and urban communities.

To think of reclamation is to think of barren lands or swamps that may some day be made productive. That section which Mr. Coolidge speaks of is already producing farm and factory products worth half a billion dollars annually. Such a section does not need reclamation. It needs protection.

But this misuse of a word would not be worthy of editorial comment if it did not indicate the attitude that is responsible for a grievous blunder in policy. In the same paragraph the President said that the land to be protected must be assessed for a special share of the cost of protection. But the land is only a small part of all that is to be protected. There are several thousand miles of highways, and a similar mileage of railways. Millions of dollars are invested in them. There are the telephone, telegraph, and electric power lines. There are factories. The ownership of these things is not local; it is national. Every man, woman, and child, who has a dollar invested in the securities of the nation-wide telephone or telegraph companies, in one of the power companies serving the district, in one of the great railroad systems traversing the valley, or in one of the factories located there, is interested in protection in exactly the same fashion as a man whose property interest happens to be in farm land or city lots. We can not protect the railways and leave the land exposed. We can not protect the land and leave these other forms of property exposed. Is it, then, just or reasonable to require the farmers who live on the land in the seven affected States to pay a special assessment on their particular form of property, while exempting the owners of the other forms of property who live in the other 41 States?

The President's proposition leads directly to a reductio ad absurdum. The question answers itself. All of them will be taxed, directly or indirectly, to provide the Federal funds. Discrimination between classes of property owners would be as unnecessary as it would be unjust. Furthermore, it would be a flat contradiction of the President's earlier utterances on the same subject. The problem of the great river's control, he said last spring, is national. The flood he called a national disaster, and he declared it must never occur again. Now he has backed down from this position and declared it is only partly national. His present proposition is unsound. It can not stand.

LET THE NATION PAY

[From the Washington Post, December 16, 1927]

The financial features of the flood-control plan prepared by the Army engineers, and now awaiting action by Congress, are not acceptable to the States that have suffered inundations. It is proposed that they shall pay a large proportion of the cost of flood control. They give notice that they are not able to bear the burden.

The Mississippi River will never be put under control if the feeble resources of the flood States are called upon to finance the work. Those States are suffering enormous and almost fatal losses already. They have paid out millions in ineffectual efforts to control the river. Their people are paying taxes for work that has long ago been swept away. Now, it is proposed that these same people shall vote crushing taxes upon themselves in assisting the United States Government to perform a purely national task.

It is not fair to the flood States to demand that they should pay more than any other States. The control of the Mississippi is a problem of national defense not against a foreign enemy but against a still more dangerous and powerful enemy—nature itself. The elements that have defied man's control must be mastered if the Mississippi is to be kept in its channel. Only the Nation can achieve that mastery.

Flood control is not a question of reclaiming lands that have been damaged or which may be submerged. It is a question of protecting American life, which will surely perish unless the United States extends protection. The millions that are generously forthcoming whenever disaster occurs will be spent again and again with utterly futile results if the Mississippi is not placed under control. The people can not be moved away. They can not ward off the floods. They are at the mercy of two powers—the river and the national authority which can overpower the river.

If any project of a purely national character was ever presented to Congress it is the project for control of the Mississippi River. The entire cost of this work should be borne by the Treasury. The people inhabiting the flood regions should pay no more and no fewer taxes than are paid by the inhabitants of Maine or California to defray the cost of this national work.

When the flood-control legislation is enacted it should provide for exclusive jurisdiction over the undertaking by the United States. The States affected by floods should have no voice in this enterprise, except to contribute what they can from their slender resources. They should not be permitted to influence the location, size, cost, or arrangement of any levees, spillways, by-passes, or other devices included in the national plan. As the work is a national duty, the authority over the work should rest in the Government exclusively.

ARMISTICE DAY A NATIONAL HOLIDAY

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, through an error Senate Joint Resolution No. 25 was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution, and that the joint resolution may lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, what is the nature of the joint resolution, may I ask the Senator from Texas?

Mr. MAYFIELD. It is a joint resolution declaring November 11, armistice day, to be a legal holiday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Texas will be agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I present resolutions adopted by the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association at its recent annual meeting in the city of Baltimore. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD, treated as petitions, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE ATLANTIC DEEPER WATERWAYS ASSOCIATION AT ITS TWENTIETH ANNUAL MEETING IN THE CITY OF BALTIMORE MD., SEPTEMBER 9–15, 1927

The Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association convened in its twentieth annual session in the city of Baltimore, Md., with delegates in attendance from every State along the Atlantic seaboard, respectfully submits the following statement of its purposes and policies and also certain resolutions:

STATEMENT

This association takes pride in its achievements. Its announced purpose at its organization in 1907 was to secure the construction of an intracoastal waterway from Maine to Florida. Physical conditions divide this waterway into several links or sections. Through its manifold activities several of these links have either been adopted by Congress or their construction has been completed. From north to south the purchase of the Cape Cod Canal has been authorized and it only awaits an appropriation; the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal has been completed to the project depth of 12 feet; the Norfolk-Beaufort waterway has been authorized and is still under construction; the waterway from Beaufort to Cape Fear River has been authorized and awaits construction; another survey has been authorized for the link from the Cape Fear River to Georgetown, S. C.; the series of natural waterways from Georgetown to Jacksonville are under improvement and maintenance; and, finally, the Florida East Coast Canal has been authorized with a project depth of 8 feet. These achievements are momentous in their results, and their importance can only be realized by a more careful study. Substantially the most important link still remains unauthorized, and that is the waterway across New Jersey, to which reference will be hereinafter made.

At the last meeting of this association in Richmond the following declaration was adopted:

"This association has combined utility with its service. It has realized that channels are intended for navigation and the promotion of commerce. It has encouraged the construction and operation of adequate boat lines. It has emphasized the necessity of water terminals. It has recognized that transportation by water constitutes only one instrumentality of commerce and has insisted that boat lines must be coordinated with the railroads and the highways. It took note of the fact that our great system of transportation by railways was predicated upon a free interchange of traffic between different railroads on a through bill of lading and with fixed joint and proportional rates. This association has urged that carriers by water should be made an integral part of this system, to the end that they should be made an equal factor in the distribution of products by water and rail under similar joint and proportional rates. Under the leadership of this association much progress has been made in the enactment of legislation providing for the coordination of rail and water carriers."

After due consideration the above declaration is hereby approved and reaffirmed.

The route of the intracoastal waterway, which may be termed the trunk line, and its feeders and tributaries in the way of rivers, bays, and inlets to the ocean, are so varied as to demand specific attention by this association.

CAPE COD CANAL

Congress, in the last river and harbor bill, approved January 21, 1927, authorized the purchase of this privately owned canal and undoubtedly at the coming session will make the appropriation therefor. This marks the consummation of years of effort by this association. We congratulate New England and the country.

NEW ENGLAND RIVERS AND CANALS

New England has been richly endowed with navigable rivers and spacious harbors. We again recommend for consideration the extension northward of the intracoastal waterway from Boston Harbor to a suitable point on the coast of Maine, the importance of which will be appreciated with further study. Such extension would augment opportunities for enlarged commerce on the Merrimac, Kennebec, and other rivers. The Taunton River serves a great industrial section, and we recommend its further improvement as an important artery of interior communication. The Connecticut River well deserves further improvement, both for navigation and the development of water-power.

SEEKONK OR PAWTUCKET RIVER, R. I.

Local interests are seeking the further improvement of Seekonk or Pawtucket River to the city of Pawtucket, with the view of procuring greater depth and width and easier bends in the channel. We recommend this work to the favorable consideration of the Army Engineers.

NEW YORK RIVERS AND CANALS

The Hudson River is under improvement by authorization of Congress and will afford a more adequate channel between Hudson and Albany. We recommend an extension of the 27-foot channel to Troy. When these improvements on the Hudson are completed there is no good reason why the industrial cities along the river should not engage in overseas commerce.

The Erie Canal represents a great enterprise, constructed at the expense of the Empire State. When certain obstacles are removed, we believe that its purpose in creating a through waterway between the ports of the Great Lakes and the sea, by way of the Hudson River, will be realized. We have faith that the same intelligence and foresight on the part of the people of New York and of the country which effected the construction of the Erie Canal will provide for its full utilization for industry and commerce.

We again recommend the further improvement of the Harlem River, Spuyten Duyvil and Bronx Kills, which is necessary to meet the demands of local commerce and a further connection between the Hudson and the waterways of New England.

LONG ISLAND

We again recommend the proposed waterway along the south shore of Long Island, connecting Jamaica Bay, Peconic Bay, and also the Coney Island Ship Canal, and the harbor and terminal developments in Jamaica Bay.

NEWARK BAY

Port Newark is distinctly on the map and is now classed among the most modern water terminals. We congratulate the citizens of Newark upon the foresight and enterprise which made possible this development.

PORT OF NEW YORK AUTHORITY

The wisdom of the States of New York and New Jersey in entering into a compact as provided in the Federal Constitution, with the consent of Congress, whereby was created the Port of New York Authority, has been vindicated. Jurisdiction over the harbors and waters of the port of New York, and certain harbors and waters in the State of New Jersey, has been consolidated under the above name. Much progress has been made in facilitating and cheapening the distribution of commodities to and from this great port, both in domestic and foreign movement. It has been fortunate in the personnel of the officials who have administered this responsible trust. The intracoastal waterway between the Cape Cod Canal and the entrance to the proposed New York-New Jersey waterway intersects the waters under the jurisdiction of the Port of New York Authority. We respectfully invoke the sympathetic consideration and aid of the Port of New York Authority, not only in providing the approaches to the New Jersey waterway, but in securing the authority of Congress for the construction of this most important link connecting New York Bay with the Delaware River.

PORT RARITAN DISTRICT COMMISSION AND THE SOUTH JERSEY PORT DISTRICT

We have observed with interest the creation by the Legislature of New Jersey of the Port Raritan district commission, upon which jurisdiction has been conferred to promote the improvement of the Raritan, South, and Woodbridge Rivers and the Arthur Kill, and also the construction of appropriate terminal facilities. The activities of this commission augur well for the future, and we extend our good wishes and promise of cooperation.

It is also gratifying to note that the Legislature of New Jersey has created the South Jersey port district, upon which jurisdiction has been conferred to promote channels and terminals on the Delaware River, including the terminus of the proposed New Jersey canal and the city of Camden. Under the jurisdiction of this port district, the city of Camden is now considering the construction of a modern terminal on its Delaware River front. The personnel of this port district is gratifying, and we believe they will be able to report substantial results during the coming year.

CHESAPEAKE BAY-DELAWARE RIVER SECTION OF THE INTRACOASTAL WATERWAY

The improved waterway connecting the Delaware River with the head of Chesapeake Bay is now a reality. With a mean depth of 12 feet, with ample width, with its conversion into a sea-level canal, and with all modern improvements, it represents in its completion a most valuable contribution to interior navigation and commerce. Its completion was fittingly celebrated by this association, and it may be truthfully classed as one of the monumental achievements of this association. But it is clear to those who have taken advantage of the new waterway that a larger channel must be provided. The big task was to convert an inadequate lock canal into a sea-level waterway. That was achieved. Commerce is responding to facilities offered by the new utility. Larger boats are being employed to traverse the waterway. A 12-foot depth will not meet the future requirements of commerce or of war. We urgently recommend that Congress authorize an immediate survey for a 25-foot channel, depth and width to correspond.

NEW YORK BAY-DELAWARE RIVER SECTION OF THE INTRACOASTAL WATERWAY

This proposed waterway across the State of New Jersey is still unauthorized by Congress. Its outstanding relation as a link in the intracoastal waterway is obvious. It connects directly the metropolis of New York with the city of Philadelphia and other cities on the Delaware River. It is an essential link between the Cape Cod Canal and the sections south of the Delaware River. It is manifestly obvious that it will attract a large commerce. Under authorization of Congress, it has been under examination by the engineers for more than two years. This association at large expense has completed what it believes to be reliable data, showing a prospective annual commerce of more than 10,000,000 tons. A favorable report has not yet been submitted by the engineers. This association has the privilege of again emphasizing its importance and of urging speedy and favorable action by the engineers, to the end that a favorable report may be submitted to Congress. Until the proposed deeper waterway across the State of New Jersey shall be authorized and completed, we recommend that the present Delaware and Raritan Canal be continued in operation as formerly, in accordance with the provisions of existing law. The president of this association is requested to forward a copy of this resolution to the engineer having immediate charge of the examination of this waterway and also to the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors and to the Chief of Engineers.

DELAWARE RIVER

The Delaware River, simply considered in its relation to Philadelphia, Camden, Wilmington, Chester, and other cities located thereon, is one of the great commercial highways of the country. It is traversed in part by the intracoastal waterway. We recommend to Congress the further improvement of this river, to the end that the 35-foot project may be completed. The improvement of the channel in the upper river between Philadelphia and Trenton to a depth of 20 feet has been authorized, and we earnestly recommend that this work of construction proceed promptly. The ultimate depth of the Delaware River below Philadelphia should, in the judgment of this association, be not less than 40 feet, and we recommend a survey therefor.

INLAND WATERWAY FROM CHINCOTEAGUE, VA., TO DELAWARE BAY

This is an important waterway and is substantially the only means of transportation for the section intersected by it. We recommend its further improvement, with the view of securing easier navigation.

THE PORT OF BALTIMORE AND CHANNELS

The port of Baltimore embraces substantially the Patapsco River and its estuaries and Curtis Bay. The existing project provides generally for a depth of 35 feet and a width of 600 feet. The growth of the commerce of this port has been progressive. Its foreign-trade tonnage last year was 11,562,458 long tons. Its aggregate water-borne commerce, including both foreign and coastwise, for 1926 was approximately 16,600,000 cargo tons. The port is rightfully demanding enlarged channel and anchorage facilities. The Baltimore Association of Commerce and its affiliated commercial interests, after deliberate consideration, have submitted to the engineers requests for the following improvements: They ask for increased depth to 40 feet for the main harbor and essential subsidiary channels, with a width of 1,000 feet and with a further width of 1,500 feet at the necessary turning basins. They submit that these increased channels are necessary to provide for the expanding water-borne commerce of the port and to enable Baltimore to extend adequate navigation facilities to the large tonnage vessels which are now unable to enter the port under existing conditions. They further submit that existing anchorage basins at the port of Baltimore are entirely inadequate to accommodate ships drawing more than 30 feet, and they recommend that an anchorage 3 miles long and 4,000 feet wide be provided along the northeast side of the Fort McHenry Channel, and that the proposed anchorage basin have a minimum depth of 35 feet, and that, in the event a 40-foot channel is authorized, a part of the anchorage basin be provided with a depth of 40 feet.

This association congratulates the port of Baltimore upon its commercial progress and is sympathetic with its aspirations for increased channel facilities, and we recommend to the Congress and the engineers that favorable consideration be given to the justifiable demands of this port.

NORFOLK HARBOR

Hampton Roads is replete in our historic annals and affords one of our most capacious harbors. The port of Norfolk, as consolidated, embraces the Elizabeth River and its three branches and the channel leading to Newport News and the Thimble Shoal Channel. The cities of Norfolk, Portsmouth, Berkley, Newport News, and other communities are served by these waters. We recommend the maintenance of the 40-foot channel leading to the navy yard, and the further improvement of the channel to Newport News to a depth of 40 feet, as heretofore authorized by Congress.

JAMES RIVER, VA.

At the last meeting of this association at Richmond the following resolution was adopted, which we now reaffirm:

The James is the premier among the rivers tributary to Hampton Roads. Considering its fine natural channel and prospective commerce, we submit that its improvement has not kept pace with many other rivers of like commercial resources. This association has learned with interest of the important cooperative work by the city of Richmond in the making of extensive surveys and plans for its improvement, particularly of the upper river. These plans include the elimination of four circuitous bends which impede navigation between City Point and Richmond by the construction of intervening canals, and also the construction of a deep-water terminal for larger vessels about 2 miles below the city limits, and also an intermediate terminal farther up the river. The recognition of the necessity of terminal construction, both for facilitating local commerce and for coordination with the railroads and highways, is most creditable to the intelligence and enterprise of the officials and citizens of the capital city. The offer of local cooperation with the Federal Government should remove any remaining obstacle to the further improvement of the James River by Congress. The strategic relation of the James River to Chesapeake Bay and Hampton Roads lends national significance to the necessity of its adequate improvement. We urgently commend to the Congress and to the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers the commercial importance of the James River from Richmond to Hampton Roads in furtherance of and in cooperation with the plans of the city of Richmond. To the Federal Government we pledge the active assistance of this association.

APPOMATTOX RIVER

The Appomattox River is an important tributary of the James, and we again recommend its further improvement to a minimum depth of 12 feet to correspond with the standard depth of the intracoastal waterway.

EASTERN SHORE OF VIRGINIA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

This organization has made report to this association of its activities in behalf of the improvement of waterways in its section of that State. The results have been gratifying. We extend our felicitations and best wishes for continued good works.

THE STATE PORT AUTHORITY OF VIRGINIA

The Commonwealth of Virginia has exhibited faith in its waterways by creating the State Port Authority of Virginia. We have observed the activities of this organization and commend its example to other Atlantic seaboard States.

NORFOLK-BEAUFORT WATERWAY

This was the first link adopted in the chain of the intracoastal waterway. While still uncompleted, the work of construction is progressing and in a few years the route recommended by the engineers will be open to navigation. In the meantime a depth of 12 feet is available through the open waters of the Albemarle and Pamlico Sounds. We recommend that funds for further construction be allotted in a more generous way to the end that this waterway may be completed from Norfolk to Beaufort along the route recommended by the engineers.

BEAUFORT INLET, N. C.

Until such time as the Beaufort-Cape Fear link shall be completed, Beaufort Inlet will remain as the southern entrance to the intracoastal waterway. It has an authorized project depth of 20 feet from Beaufort Harbor to the sea. We recommend that this depth be secured and maintained.

HARBOR OF REFUGE AT CAPE LOOKOUT

This is a natural harbor located in the bight of Cape Lookout and is immediately accessible from the ocean. Its improvement was authorized some years ago, but work was suspended during the war period. Its improvement is not only of importance as a harbor of refuge, but presents possibilities of a great commercial harbor. We note with interest the present agitation for connecting this harbor by rail with the mainland, and express our faith in its practicability and our hope for ultimate success.

BEAUFORT-CAPE FEAR WATERWAY

As stated in the preamble, Congress in the last river and harbor act authorized the construction of this link between Beaufort and the Cape Fear River to the standard depth of 12 feet, in accordance with the plans of the engineers. The completion of this improvement will promote through commerce between the North and the South by way of the inland route. Access to the ocean from the mouth of the Cape Fear River for navigation southward will avoid the dangers of Cape Fear and Frying Pan Shoals. It will greatly facilitate inside navigation between the North and the South and, incidentally, will greatly augment the movement of pleasure yachts and other small craft.

CAPE FEAR-GEORGETOWN WATERWAY

This association has marked another milestone in the progress of the intracoastal waterway southward. Congress at its last session authorized an additional examination and survey of the waterway from Cape Fear River to Georgetown, S. C. We congratulate the communities immediately tributary to this extension and hail the day when it shall be completed. This association approves this extension and offers its services in any available way in securing and preparing data justifying its commercial importance.

COOPER RIVER, S. C.

At our last meeting we emphasized the importance of this river as a lateral feeder to the intracoastal waterway, which we again renew. We also renew our recommendation for the construction of the Santee-Cooper Canal for navigation and power, thereby linking central South Carolina by water with the intracoastal waterway.

FLORIDA EAST COAST CANAL

For years this association has recommended that the Government purchase and improve the privately owned canal intersecting the east coast of Florida. Congress at its last session authorized this inland waterway with a depth of 8 feet at mean low water from Jacksonville to Miami, Fla. This will be an important addition to the commerce of Florida and will also attract through commerce. We offer congratulations and recommend the improvement of this waterway at the earliest practicable date.

WATERWAY ACROSS FLORIDA

This association has always realized that the construction of the intracoastal waterway must be undertaken link by link, and that ultimately connection with the Gulf would be essential by the construction of a waterway across the State of Florida. In the last river and harbor act, approved January 21, 1927, a survey was authorized of this waterway "from Cumberland Sound, Ga. and Fla., to the Mississippi River." Congress has heretofore authorized the construction of an intracoastal waterway along the Gulf coast from the Mississippi to the Rio Grande. This proposed waterway across the peninsula of Florida will connect the inside routes along the Atlantic and the Gulf, and thereby promote through traffic. We urge upon the commercial interests of the State of Florida the submission of appropriate data, which will demonstrate the importance of this waterway across the State, to the end that a favorable report may be submitted by the engineer.

SAVANNAH RIVER AND HARBOR

The commercial growth of Savannah, both coastwise and overseas, has afforded just pride to its citizens. This commerce justifies an ample channel from Savannah to the sea. We again recommend the extension of the 21-foot project up the river from the lower end of Kings Island to the coastal highway bridge.

FLORIDA HARBORS AND WATERWAYS

Jacksonville, Miami, Key West, Tampa, and other ports are not only essential to the commerce of the State, but of the country. We have been gratified at the progress made in providing for adequate channels at the port of Miami. We recommend the improvement and maintenance of the many important rivers of Florida penetrating the interior.

We have observed with increasing interest the activities of the Gulf-Okeechobee-Atlantic Waterway Association, and have faith in the ultimate accomplishment of its purposes.

FLOOD CONTROL AND THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY

The members of the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association have keenly felt the suffering and tremendous losses which have been brought about in flood regions of the Mississippi River and its tributaries. To those who have suffered in one way or another we would extend our deepest sympathy. In view of the fact that the Mississippi River and its tributaries, stretching from the Rocky Mountains to the Alleghenies, and from the Lakes to the Gulf, drain more than one-third of the total area of the United States, or 1,200,000 square miles, and these rivers are under the control of the Federal Government, we would express the hope that the Government will promptly come to the rescue of those who have suffered, actively cooperate in the rehabilitation of the overflowed districts and begin as promptly as possible a campaign for safeguarding the Mississippi Valley forever from such a disaster as that of the present year. We recognize the fact that this will involve the safeguarding of all of its tributaries from damaging overflows. Every disaster from these floods, whether it be on the Ohio, the Tennessee, the Red River, the Mississippi, or any of the tributaries of the Mississippi, is a disaster to the entire country. The protection of all of the country tributary to these rivers is a problem for the Federal Government, and the entire country must unite whole-heartedly in this great campaign.

WATER TERMINALS

This association has emphasized in previous years the essential importance of water terminals for the proper utilization of waterways and harbors. This proposition is now understood by the country, as illustrated by the number of water terminals which are under construction or have been completed. At this time we simply reaffirm our declaration of their necessity and recommend to all towns and cities the importance of constructing terminals with a view to utilizing improved channels and promoting water-borne commerce, and also as an essential for interconnection between the railways and the waterways.

CONNECTING TOWNS AND SHIPPING POINTS WITH THE MAIN LINE OF THE INTRACOASTAL WATERWAY

There are towns and shipping points located in each State intersected by the intracoastal waterway which are more or less distant from the main channel of this waterway. These towns and shipping points should be physically connected by an adequate channel leading to this waterway. We recommend that all such towns and shipping points be provided with adequate channels, preferably of the standard depth of 12 feet, leading to the main channel of the intracoastal waterway.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION

Commendable progress has been made by the Department of Commerce in establishing the necessary aids to navigation. Wherever these are lacking we urge upon localities the importance of properly marking all improved channels.

OBSTRUCTIONS TO NAVIGATION

The proposition that the navigation of channels should not be impeded by obstructions, except where absolutely essential, is obvious. The accelerated movement in recent years in the construction of improved highways and the increasing use of automobiles and trucks, typifies an important innovation in transportation. This has augmented, in large degree, the demands for bridges across navigable waters, and has proceeded to such an extent as to seriously obstruct navigation. We realize that bridges for railroads and for connecting highways are sometimes so essential as to justify their construction, but the present movement indicates that we are proceeding far beyond the limits of prudence and necessity. We urge upon the people of the country the importance of unobstructed navigation upon our navigable waters. As the country grows in industry and distribution, we will find increasing need for our rivers. This heedless demand for additional bridges should be checked to the end that these natural highways may remain as an unimpaired heritage for the future.

POLLUTION OF WATERS

It is gratifying to note the success of the movement seeking to prevent the unnecessary pollution of our waters. Public sentiment has secured both Federal and State legislation. We recommend continued activity in this respect.

Mr. WARREN presented a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Powell, Wyo., protesting against any amendment of the immigration act for the purpose of further restricting the immigration of citizens of Mexico, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas presented a resolution adopted by the quorum or levying court of Chicot County, Ark., favoring the enactment of legislation to replace the bridges destroyed by the recent floods in Arkansas and to appoint emergency agents in the flooded counties, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by the printing industry of Wichita, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation restoring the 1924 basis of postal rates, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE presented memorials numerously signed by citizens of the State of Wisconsin, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DENEEN presented a petition numerously signed by citizens of Chicago, Ill., and Toledo, Ohio, favoring a prompt and favorable response by the United States to proposals of M. Briand for the settlement of international disputes by the use of peaceful methods, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented memorials numerously signed by citizens of White Hall and vicinity, in the State of Illinois, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for compulsory Sunday observance in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLAINE presented petitions of sundry citizens of La Crosse and of Adams Counties, all in the State of Wisconsin, praying for the passage of legislation granting increased pensions to Civil War veterans and their widows, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Joint resolution relating to the outlawry of war

Whereas war between nations under existing international law is a lawful institution, and any nation, with or without cause, may declare war against any other nation; and

Whereas war is the greatest existing menace to society, and the next great war is almost certain to be more terrible than any previous war and is likely to engulf and destroy civilization: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring), That war between nations should be outlawed as an institution or means for the settlement of international controversies by making it a public crime in international law, and that every nation should be encouraged by solemn agreement or treaty to bind itself to indict and punish its own international war breeders or instigators and war profiteers under powers similar to those conferred upon our Congress under Article I, section 8, of our Federal Constitution, which clothes the Congress with the power to define and punish offenses against the law of nations; and be it further

Resolved, That the President of the United States and Congress be, and are hereby, memorialized to take the necessary steps to make this country the leader in the movement for the outlawry of war through agreements with other nations and through legislation curbing all instigators of war and war profiteers; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, properly attested, be sent to the President of the United States, to the presiding officer of each House of Congress, and to each Wisconsin Member thereof.

HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. BLAINE also presented the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Joint resolution relating to the Menominee Indian Reservation

Whereas the Federal Government has indicated its intention to allow a survey of the potential water power of the Wolf River in the Menominee Indian Reservation to be made by private interests; and

Whereas published news reports from Washington City carry the story that Indian Commissioner Burke "assumed a bullying attitude toward Indian witnesses" at the hearing recently held; and

Whereas it is thought that this proposed damming of the Wolf River may destroy one of the last spots of natural beauty in Wisconsin, and may also increase the flood danger to a region already sorely harassed by periodical inundation; and

Whereas Wisconsin has no national park, with the exception of the Winnesheik Bottoms, which is a game refuge; and

Whereas the last extensive stand of virgin timber in Wisconsin is located on the Menominee Reservation and is rapidly being cut off by the Government and private interests: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Federal Indian Bureau be, and is hereby, requested to refrain from finally leasing the power site to private interests until Congress has convened and until after a full, fair, and properly announced hearing or hearings have been conducted; be it further

Resolved, That Wisconsin's Representatives in the Congress of the United States be requested to investigate the feasibility of making a national park of the river and timber tract on the said Menominee Indian Reservation so that its natural beauty will be saved for future generations, and that these representatives make every effort possible to carry this plan to fruition should they deem it practicable and necessary in order to save the reservation from spoliation; be it further

Resolved, That Wisconsin's representatives be requested to use every effort to protect the interests of the Indians with regard to the proposed damming of the Wolf River and the leasing of the power site to private interests; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, suitably attested by the presiding officers of the senate and assembly, be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior, to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and to the Senators and Representatives from Wisconsin.

HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. BLAINE also presented the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to provide for earlier seating of Senators and Representatives elect

Whereas Members of Congress are elected in November of even-numbered years, but under the present Constitution of the United States do not meet in regular session until December of the year following; and

Whereas in the so-called short sessions of Congress, which convene in December following each general election, there are always many Members who were defeated for reelection and repudiated by their constituents; and

Whereas this provision of the Constitution operates to prevent the will of the people from being expressed in legislation within a reasonable time: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin hereby earnestly requests and petitions Congress to adopt and submit to the States the so-called Norris amendment to the Constitution of the United States for the earlier commencement of the terms of President, Vice President, and Members of Congress and for the convening of Congress in January of the year following its election.

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, duly attested by the presiding officers and chief clerks of the senate and assembly, be forwarded to the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress and to the Wisconsin Senators and Representatives therein.

HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Joint resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to provide for a nation-wide referendum on the question of modifying the Volstead Act

Whereas the voters of the State of Wisconsin at a recent referendum registered their disapproval of prohibition by a majority of approximately 176,000 votes; and

Whereas the people of Wisconsin have emphatically expressed themselves in favor of a modification of the Volstead Act to permit the manufacture and sale of 2.75 per cent beer; and

Whereas a nation-wide test on the question of modifying the Volstead Act would afford the means of accurately measuring the sentiment of the entire country: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Wisconsin Legislature hereby goes on record as respectfully memorializing Congress to provide the necessary machinery for the holding of a nation-wide referendum on the question of modifying the Volstead Act to legalize the manufacture and sale of 2.75 per cent beer; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution duly attested by the proper officers of the assembly and senate be transmitted to the presiding officers of each House of Congress.

HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Mr. BLAINE also presented the following joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which were referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Joint resolution relating to the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project

Whereas the prosperity of Wisconsin, as well as the whole of the United States, is in large measure dependent upon lower rates of transportation on agricultural and manufactured products to markets in Eastern States and foreign countries; and

Whereas it is possible to secure such lower rates of transportation through the completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project, which would enable ocean-going vessels to enter the Great Lakes; and

Whereas this project has been repeatedly pronounced by qualified engineers to be practicable in all respects and a good investment from a business point of view, most recently by the joint international board of engineers and by Hon. Herbert Hoover, Secretary of Commerce: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That we hereby respectfully urge the Congress of the United States to take immediate action to make possible the early completion of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence waterway project; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution, properly signed by the presiding officers of both houses and attested by the chief clerks thereof, be sent to the presiding officers of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States and to each Senator and Member of Congress from Wisconsin.

HENRY A. HUBER,
President of the Senate.
O. G. MUNSON,
Chief Clerk of the Senate.
JOHN W. EBER,
Speaker of the Assembly.
C. E. SHAFFER,
Chief Clerk of the Assembly.

Joint resolution memorializing Congress to grant Federal aid in the construction of interstate bridges

Whereas the boundaries dividing the several States in many instances consist of natural watercourses and rivers; and

Whereas the cost of interstate bridges is very great, since the rivers in many instances are wide and the engineering and construction problems difficult to solve; and

Whereas the Constitution of the United States vests in Congress control over all interstate communication and the Federal Government is vitally interested in developing national highways cutting across State lines: Therefore be it

Resolved by the assembly (the senate concurring), That the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin earnestly requests and petitions the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to give Federal aid for the construction of interstate bridges; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution, properly attested, be forwarded to the presiding officers of both Houses of Congress and to the Wisconsin Senators and Representatives therein.

ENFORCEMENT OF CONSTITUTION

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I present the memorial to Congress from the Elks and other fraternal negro organizations and ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the Congress of the United this memorial is respectfully addressed by the undersigned representatives of America negro organizations and citizens:

1. We urge the sustaining of the entire Constitution of the United States and the enforcement of all its provisions and laws. No greater blunder could be committed by Government than to make the avowal or allow the impression that it has power to enforce all of its laws with certain exceptions. Such policy would to the man of ordinary mind and common sense mean one of two things, or both of them: (a) That the Government has no real power to enforce any of its laws, or (b) that Government officials are consummate hypocrites, who are resolved to enforce only such laws as they favor.

2. It is our conviction that every amendment of the National Constitution is as vital a part of fundamental law as is the first article of that instrument; and that every act passed by the lawfully constituted legislative body, until such legislation is repealed or properly nullified by the courts, is as sacred as the Constitution itself. In the call for enforcement we therefore make no implied exception of so-called unpopular laws, since, and as long as, the people have the remedies of protest, agitation, further legislation, amendment, and repeal.

3. We therefore deplore the dangerous policies of those time-serving political leaders of any party or section, who are disposed to compromise with the sentiment that certain of our laws and constitutional provisions can not be enforced because of the fact that a minority, even a powerful minority, is opposed to such laws and provisions. For if the opposition to such constitutional and legislative acts be not a mere minority, then such acts can be, and should be, regularly and legally amended or repealed. In a democratic-republican form of government there is no logical and reasonable excuse either for violation by the citizen or for failure of enforcement by the administration. The violation is a crime; the failure to enforce is betrayal to anarchy. Such tactics on the part of private citizens and officers of law tend to bring the whole business of government into weakness and disrepute even among those for whose favor such tactics are employed.

4. If the foregoing is a true statement of the general principle of just government and sane statesmanship, then it is easy to specify; that the thirteenth, the fourteenth, the fifteenth, and the eighteenth amendments to the Constitution should be as honestly enforced as the fifth or sixth. For the statesman the only alternatives are respect or repeal. To flagrantly violate or neglect certain parts of the law is not statesmanship, but it is contemptible and even dangerous politics.

5. Similarly, the community of interests that obtains among our laws obtains also among our citizens. When the rights of one citizen are willfully violated by other citizens or shamefully neglected by officers of law, the rights of all citizens are at least jeopardized. No informed American doubts that the administration of suffrage laws in many of the States aims to limit unfairly and does unfairly limit the number of negro voters, but many otherwise intelligent Americans have not yet penetrated far enough into the matter to see that the unfair curtailing of negro votes has resulted in a curtailment of the votes of white people, so that in some States where more than half a million citizens should go to the polls, we may see a "rotten borough" election with less than 50,000 votes cast. In the last analysis, white people and black people in America have a common interest in the sacredness and the security of the ballot and of all constitutional rights.

6. It is the same with the nature of freedom and liberty; either both races must have the freedom of expression and the liberty of action or neither race can fully enjoy these blessings. We note with concern that in those parts of the country where the negro is not free to express himself the white man is also not free to express himself about the negro. In such a society even the so-called freest white must conform in his expressions and overt acts toward the negro and about the negro, which leads inevitably to a smothering of liberalism and a paralyzing conformity on subjects that are alien to the "negro question." Liberal and progressive ideas do not prosper in such communities. The human mind is a unit, or a unitary resultant at least, and it can not be very narrow on the great issues of life in one direction and very liberal on the same issues when directed toward others; it can not be a criminal for some and a saint for others. Oppressive discrimination is dangerous, because it creates a type of mind which may no longer descriminate but which will continue to oppress. The signers of this memorial could, therefore, just as logically and reasonably address their appeal to the country in behalf of the freedom and liberty of the white American, which necessarily includes the freedom and liberty of the black American.

7. In this conviction, and as patriots of the Republic, we wish to register our belief that no politician and no party which declares an unwillingness or confesses an inability to enforce any part of the Constitution can be trusted to enforce any other part, and that they who so declare and confess, if they be not conscious enemies of the Republic, are at best its unwise friends.

Jernagin, National Equal Rights League and Race Congress; Charles T. Freeman, Grand Encampment K. T.; Mrs. Ora B. Stokes, presiding shepherd of Order of Shepherds; Robert F. AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency a resolution adopted at the recent meeting of the Indiana Farm Bureau Federation at Indianapolis, Ind., the minutes of the annual meeting of the National Association of Federal Farm Loan Borrowers, of Chicago, Ill., and the report of a special committee of the American Farm Bureau Federation, indorsed by the National Association of Federal Farm Loan Borrowers.

There being no objection, the papers were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The following resolution was passed at the recent annual meeting of the Indiana Farm Bureau Federation at Indianapolis:

"Believing that the Federal farm-loan system was formulated with the idea of helping the farmer, and believing that it has been honestly and intelligently administered in the past, we view with alarm the raid on the Federal farm-loan system by Mr. Mellon and the Treasury Department, whereby certain directors representing the farmers of the country were replaced by President Coolidge with the appointment of Mr. Eugene Meyer and his associates, who we know are representing New York financial interests and are known to be hostile to the real interests of the farmer.

"We therefore demand that the appointments of Mr. Meyer and his associates be contested and all influence possible be used to prevent the United States Senate from confirming these appointments."

MINUTES OF ANNUAL MEETING OF NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FEDERAL FARM LOAN BORROWERS, CHICAGO, ILL., HOTEL SHERMAN, DECEMBER 6, 1927

The annual meeting was called to order by President Carl S. Vrooman. The following persons were present: Carl S. Vrooman, president; O. M. Kile, secretary-treasurer; C. H. Gustafson, honorary vice president; Herman Steen, member of board of directors; C. A. Sorensen, counsel; F. W. McLean, vice president of the Wheat Growers' Cooperative Association, Grand Forks, N. Dak.; Robert Cowles, secretary Illinois Agricultural Association; Mr. Wood, secretary of Farm Loan Association in Missouri; Lieut. Gov. F. O. McCormack, of Montana, director in the Spokane land bank; Mr. Martin, director of the St. Louis land bank; and Mr. Kraft, representative of a Chicago commercial bank.

In addition, the following were in touch with the meeting, either by brief visits or through close contact with other members: Murray D. Lincoln, secretary of the Ohio Farm Bureau Federation; Charles A. Hearst, president of the Iowa Farm Bureau Federation; L. J. Taber, master of the National Grange; Samuel R. Guard, editor of Breeder's Gazette; Earle Houghton, president California Farm Bureau Federation; Mr. Hartshorn, of Kansas; Gray Silver, of West Virginia.

Messages from Vice President Huelle, of Nebraska, and Director W. B. Hanly, of Oklahoma, were read by the secretary, expressing regret that they were not able to be present.

The secretary read extracts from the report sent to members at the close of the Sixty-ninth Congress reviewing activities down to that date. He also reported verbally on activities since the close of Congress, mentioning particularly the brief prepared by the secretary for use of a special committee appointed by the American Farm Bureau Federation to investigate the shortcomings and legislative needs of the Federal farm-loan system. The secretary reported that he had been invited to work with this committee in formulating proposed amendments to the Federal farm loan act and had spent several days meeting with that committee. The secretary also called attention to the situation that had arisen through the appointment of Eugene Meyer and his two associates to the Federal Farm Loan Board despite the protests of farm organization leaders. The secretary asked for definite instructions as to the organization's viewpoint and desires in this latter matter.

The secretary reported also that while much interest had been shown in the formation of a national federation of local farm-loan associations, and that a considerable number had contributed to this end out of their own funds, yet rapid expansion of the organization is impossible as long as the 1920 Farm Loan Board ruling against financial participation in such activities still stands on the books, even though it apparently is not now being enforced and could not be legally enforced, according to the opinion of leading lawyers.

Following the secretary's report, President Vrooman discussed briefly the accomplishments of the association to date, the need for active work at this time, and the future scope of the activities of our organization. He pointed out particularly the advantages of an organization such as ours to be used as a coordinating agency for activities carried on by other national farm organizations. He emphasized the necessity, however, of continuing our organization as a separate unit, since our ultimate purpose is mainly along the lines of upbuilding and representing the local units.

Under the order of new business the secretary read the report of the special farm bureau committee above mentioned. This report is attached hereto. After general discussion, Mr. Sorensen made the following motion:

"That we indorse the amendments to the Federal farm loan act proposed by a committee of the American Farm Bureau Federation as being in line with the present efforts and policies of our organization and that we add thereto an amendment providing for the separation of the Federal intermediate credit banks from the Federal farm loan banks."

This motion was seconded by Mr. McLean and on vote carried unanimously.

General discussion brought out the fact that often it is the aribtrary rulings of the Federal Farm Loan Board in conflict with the spirit of the act, rather than any specific shortcoming of the law itself, that causes the difficulty. The consensus of opinion was that in revamping the act every effort should be made to insert prohibitions which would guard against these arbitrary rulings in conflict with the spirit of the act.

The question of opposing the confirmation of the recess appointments to the Farm Loan Board was discussed at some length and resulted in the following resolution offered by Mr. McLean, seconded by Mr. McCormack, and passed without a dissenting vote:

"As a prerequisite to the sympathetic administration of the act—indeed, as a prerequisite to the enactment of necessary amendments—we urge the absolute necessity of a Federal Farm Loan Board made up of members known to be thoroughly familiar with the credit needs of agriculture and recognized as being entirely in harmony with the sympathetic administration of the act.

"And believing that the recent arbitrary removal of three farmer-minded members of the Federal Farm Loan Board and the substitution during a recess of Congress of members representative of commercial banking and Treasury Department interests is a clear violation of the principles set forth above.

"We therefore urge that the officers and members of the National Association of Federal Farm Loan Borrowers make every effort to prevent the confirmation of the pending recess appointments of Messrs. Meyer, Cooksey, and Harrison; to secure the appointment of capable men better fitted by training, experience, and environment to represent agriculture; and that following this a bill be drafted and urged in accordance with memoranda attached herewith."

The "memoranda" mentioned in this resolution refers to the suggested amendments listed at the end of this report.

Mr. Sorensen moved the reelection of the officers of the past year, with the substitution of Mr. F. W. Lingquist, of Helena, Mont., to replace Mr. Hearst on the board of directors, and the addition of Mr. F. W. McLean as an honorary vice president. The motion was duly seconded and passed.

The president appointed an auditing committee consisting of Messrs. McLean and Sorensen, to audit the accounts of the organization. After checking over the receipts and expenditures and comparing the latter with canceled checks, the committee reported that the accounts were correct.

The organization authorized the secretary-treasurer to carry on a campaign for increased membership and funds and to use every means available to carry out the purposes for which it was formed.

President Vrooman indicated that he expects to be in Washington much of the time during the coming winter and will render all assistance possible.

On motion the association adjourned.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE OF AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION, INDORSED BY THE NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FEDERAL FARM LOAN BORROWERS

Since the capital stock of the Federal land-bank system originally advanced by the United States Treasury has now been almost entirely repaid and the system is now owned by farmers, the time is opportune to effect certain desirable readjustments in administrative practice and to make certain modifications in the policies that have grown up during this period of management by the Treasury Department.

This rural credit system has made good progress in the face of severe opposition and has come through a period of extraordinary agricultural depression with its credit standing unimpaired and its bonds universally recognized as gilt-edge securities. The safety and solidity of the system has been severely tested and found to be of the best.

Such criticisms as your committee has investigated and such recommendations as we desire to make have to do chiefly with safeguarding the system against encroachments from interests inimical to those of the farmer, securing a more sympathetic administration of the act as originally conceived, developing greater flexibility in the use of credit facilities and their better adaptation to the peculiar needs of agriculture, and the encouragement of increased activity and responsibility among local borrower-stockholders who are now the real owners of the system.

As a means of bringing about these desired changes your committee recommends amendments to the Federal farm loan act and rural intermediate credit act in accordance with the following 18 suggestions:

1. That the law be so amended as to establish the Federal Farm Loan Board as an independent body, removing same from its present status as a bureau of the Treasury, and endeavoring to assure its autonomy.

2. That the Federal Farm Loan Board consist of seven persons, one of whom shall be the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall be ex-officio chairman of the board, and the other six of whom shall be residents of and selected, respectively, from regions as follows:

First region, consisting of the districts served by the Springfield and Baltimore Federal land banks.

Second region, the Louisville and Columbia land-bank districts.

Third region, the St. Louis and New Orleans land-bank districts.

Fourth region, the Omaha and St. Paul land-bank districts.

Fifth region, the Houston and Wichita land-bank districts.

Sixth region, the Berkeley and Spokane land-bank districts.

3. Whenever there is a vacancy on the Federal Farm Loan Board it shall be the duty of each of the Federal land-bank boards in the region which is not represented on the board by reason of the vacancy to suggest to the President of the United States two or more persons who may be considered suitable for such position.

4. Federal land-bank appraisers shall be selected and employed by the respective land-bank boards, subject to the approval of the Federal Farm Loan Board, and such banks shall have the power to remove appraisers so employed, but the Federal Farm Loan Board shall have and retain full power and authority to appoint and remove reviewing appraisers.

5. The board of directors of each Federal land bank shall consist of seven persons, who shall be residents of their respective districts, two of whom shall be known as regional directors and shall be appointed by the Federal Farm Loan Board, and five of whom shall be known as local directors and shall be elected by the national farm-loan associations of the district. The directors may elect one of their number as president of the land bank, but no other director shall be or become an official or other salaried employee of the land bank or intermediate credit bank of which he is a director, but this shall not be construed to prevent his receiving special pay or per diem as a director or executive committeeman. No member of the Federal Farm Loan Board, director, or official of any Federal land bank, or employee of the system shall use any influence in or take part in the election of local directors of any land bank, under penalty of forfeiture of his position upon charges preferred before the Farm Loan Board, but this shall not be construed to interfere with the candidacy of any such person for any office.

In the election of local directors the national farm-loan associations shall have 20 days' notice for the purpose of nominating candidates, and also 20 days' time in which to elect. There shall be no redistricting within six months preceding an election in any district.

That it shall be a part of the duty of the directors of each land bank, when and as ordered by the board of directors, to confer with the officers and directors of the farm-loan associations of the district from time to time in an effort to encourage such associations in the proper performance of their duties.

6. That national farm-loan associations be authorized at their discretion to appropriate out of their funds an amount not to exceed 25 cents per member per annum for the purpose of forming and/or maintaining associations of shareholders, district, state, or national in character.

7. That when the Farm Loan Board makes the annual report of its operations to the Speaker of the House, as is required by law, it shall also furnish a copy thereof to each Federal land bank and to every director thereof.

8. That each national farm loan association shall receive annually one-tenth of 1 per cent of all interest collected on loans made through such association, which fund shall be paid to it by the land bank regardless of whether such association is entitled to receive dividends or not, and shall be used by the association for its necessary expenses or for reserve.

9. That the joint-stock land banks and Federal farm-loan banks be put on a basis of equality as to eligibility of loans and as to loan limit.

10. The amount represented by real estate acquired by any land bank as the result of the foreclosure of a mortgage shall be charged off at the rate of 20 per cent per year from the time of the final acquisition of title to such real estate.

11. That the board of directors of each Federal intermediate credit bank shall elect a vice president thereof, who shall be considered the active executive officer of such credit bank, and shall be charged with the duty of seeing that such bank functions properly subject to the general direction of the board of directors.

12. That section 202–C be so amended as to permit Federal intermediate credit banks to discount paper having a maturity at the time of making or discounting of not less than 60 days.

13. That section 202, paragraph A–3 be so amended as to permit Federal intermediate credit banks to make loans to cooperative associations when the notes or other such obligations representing such loans are secured by real estate or by other tangible property owned by such cooperative.

14. That the Federal Farm Loan Board shall have power, and it shall be its duty, to select and appoint land-bank examiners.

15. That production credits of the intermediate credit banks be as a policy limited in the future to farmer-formed organizations or corporations, or to such organizations as can show that the funds will not be used against the interests of cooperative-marketing organizations.

16. That extension of installment payments be granted at discretion of the land bank, with the requirement of suitable and full assurance of such payment.

17. We request of the Federal Farm Loan Board that the recent ruling of the intermediate credit bank at Berkeley, Calif., prohibiting the forward sale of mortgaged crops, be suspended until a field investigation be made.

18. That a separate section of the Federal intermediate credit banks be created for the purpose of loaning funds to cooperatives to purchase or build physicial properties, the security to rest on crop pledges, as set forth in the Neely amendment to the McNary-Haugen bill of 1926–27.

AMENDMENT TO TAX REDUCTION BILL—DUTY ON HIDES, ETC.

Mr. PITTMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 1, the tax reduction bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

PRICES OF GASOLINE

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial published in the Washington Post of this morning in reference to the report made by the Federal Trade Commission on the prices of gasoline. I wish to read to the Senate the concluding sentence of the editorial, which is as follows:

It is difficult, in view of these figures, to accept the statement of the Federal Trade Commission that gasoline prices are controlled by conditions of supply and demand.

Mr. President, the Washington Post is a conservative newspaper, and when a conservative newspaper draws a conclusion such as that it is a sad commentary upon the Federal Trade Commission, which was organized and instituted for the purpose of protecting the public interest. I ask that the entire editorial be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the editorial presented by the Senator from South Dakota will be printed in the RECORD.

The editorial is as follows:

THE PRICE OF GAS

[From the Washington Post, December 17, 1927]

About a week ago the Federal Trade Commission issued a clean bill of health to the oil companies that produce and distribute motor fuel and lubricants. The commission, acting under the authority of a Senate resolution, reported to Congress that it had been unable to find "recent evidence" of agreements or manipulations of any size among large oil companies to raise or depress prices of crude petroleum or refined products. The report added "that the inquiry tended to show that price movements over the longer periods were controlled by conditions of supply and demand, but that these conditions were reflected in shorter periods partly because crude prices are determined by the decisions of a few large purchasing companies, among which there is generally very little real competition."

Just how long a time was devoted to the investigation by the Federal Trade Commission is not revealed in the report. But judging from the known celerity of the movements of that ponderous body it is probable that many months and much travel were necessary to reach the conclusion that "no recent evidence" is obtainable.

While the Federal Trade Commission was preparing to send its report to Congress in response to the resolution of the Senate another organization made a somewhat similar "survey" of the gasoline situation and its findings are, to say the least, slightly at variance with those of the commission.

This independent survey was carried on by 950 motor clubs affiliated with the American Automobile Association. The inquiries extended into every section of the country. The reports from these unofficial inquirers indicate that there are in use, or were as late as November 22, no fewer than 47 varieties of gasoline prices. High-test gas sells in some sections as low as 13 cents per gallon and in others the price is 29 cents. "Straight run" prices range from 10 to 27 cents. It was found also that proximity to the source of supply has no bearing on prices, or, if any, it is the reverse of what would be expected. Nor was there found to be an advantage in favor of the buyer in the tidewater region as against the buyer in the interior, for it was learned that on the whole prices at tidewater were higher than those charged at inland points.

It is difficult, in view of these figures, to accept the statement of the Federal Trade Commission that gasoline prices are controlled by conditions of supply and demand.

INVESTIGATION OF CONDITIONS IN AMERICAN SAMOA

Mr. BINGHAM submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 2), which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a joint committee of Congress to consist of two members of the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three members of the Committee on Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, is hereby authorized to visit American Samoa, and to investigate fully existing conditions there with a view to the recommendation of necessary legislation in respect thereof. The committee shall elect a chairman from among its members. For the purposes of this resolution such committee is authorized to hold hearings and to sit and act at such times and places within American Samoa or the United States, to employ such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, including interpreters, to require by subpœna or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic service to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of such committee, which shall not exceed the sum of $15,000, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers approved by the chairman. The committee shall make a report to the Congress as to its findings, with such recommendations for legislation as it deems advisable, on or before December 13, 1928.

INVESTIGATION OF THE FOREIGN SERVICE

Mr. HARRISON. I submit a Senate resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 76), as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations is authorized and directed (1) to investigate the administration of the act entitled "An act for the reorganization and improvement of the Foreign Service of the United States, and for other purposes," approved May 24, 1924, as amended, and particularly the work of the Foreign Service Personnel Board, for the purpose of determining what results have been obtained under the provisions of such act, and (2) to report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its investigation, with such recommendations as it deems advisable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think that the resolution is entirely proper. It relates to a matter of which the Senator spoke in the committee the other day. I will ask the Senator, Is it necessary that the resolution should go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. HARRISON. No; it is not.

Mr. BORAH. Unless some member of the committee thinks otherwise, I see no objection to the resolution.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I wish to ask, Is this such a resolution as will require bye and bye another resolution authorizing the payment of money for the employment of stenographers to report the hearings, and so forth?

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senator from Washington that the resolution does not ask for the appointment of any special committee or anything of that sort. It merely calls on the Committee on Foreign Relations to investigate the results of the administration of the so-called Rogers Act of 1924. There has been considerable dissatisfaction in the Consular Service. We may be able to iron out the difficulties in some way by having an investigation.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. MOSES. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. HARRISON. I did ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator will recall the discussion that took place in the committee the other morning and will recall that there were a good many members of the committee who were in full sympathy with the general proposition, but I think, under all the circumstances, the resolution had better go to the committee inasmuch as the committee meets regularly and will have a meeting on Wednesday, I presume.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to the resolution going to the committee, but I did not think there would arise any opposition to it, and I am sure there is no opposition to its adoption.

Mr. MOSES. I think the preponderant sentiment of the committee is in favor of some sort of an investigation in view of certain things that have taken place particularly in the personnel board under the operation of the Rogers Act.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ANNA KENYON

Mr. MOSES submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 77), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Anna Kenyon, widow of Harold Kenyon, late Capitol policeman, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

FORECASTS OF FARM PRICES

Mr. HARRIS. I offer a resolution and ask that it may be read and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read.

The resolution (S. Res. 78) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas the Department of Agriculture in the month of September, 1927, made public a report relating to probable farm-price situation during the balance of the year, which contained predictions that there would be a decline in the price of cotton and of other agricultural commodities; and

Whereas this report was not authorized by law and resulted in decline of prices of such commodities, with a loss of many millions to the farmers; and

Whereas similar reports issued in the future would tend to have a similar effect upon farm prices: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the practice of issuing such unauthorized reports is detrimental to the farmers throughout the country, and that the activities of the Secretary of Agriculture and any officer or employee of the Department of Agriculture in connection with the issuance or publication of any such reports are hereby disapproved and condemned.

SURVEY OF CONDITION OF INDIANS

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 79), which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

Whereas there are 225,000 Indians presently under the control of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, who are in contemplation of law citizens of the United States but who are in fact treated as wards of the Government and are prevented from the enjoyment of the free and independent use of property and of liberty of contract with respect thereto; and

Whereas the Bureau of Indian Affairs handles, leases, and sells Indian property of great value, and disposes of funds which amount to many millions of dollars annually without responsibility to civil courts and without effective responsibility to Congress; and

Whereas it is claimed that the control by the Bureau of Indian Affairs of the persons and property of Indians is preventing them from accommodating themselves to the conditions and requirements of modern life and from exercising that liberty with respect to their own affairs without which they can not develop into self-reliant, free, and independent citizens and have the rights which belong generally to citizens of the United States; and

Whereas numerous complaints have been made by responsible persons and organizations charging improper and improvident administration of Indian property by the Bureau of Indian Affairs; and

Whereas it is claimed that preventable diseases are widespread among the Indian population, that the death rate among them is not only unreasonably high but is increasing, and that the Indians in many localities are becoming pauperized; and

Whereas the acts of Congress passed in the last hundred years having as their objective the civilization of the Indian tribes seem to have failed to accomplish the results anticipated; and

Whereas it is expedient that said acts of Congress and the Indian policy incorporated in said acts be examined and the administration and operation of the same as affecting the condition of the Indian population be surveyed and appraised: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate is authorized and directed to make a general survey of the condition of the Indians and of the operation and effect of the laws which Congress has passed for the civilization and protection of the Indian tribes; to investigate the relation of the Bureau of Indian Affairs to the persons and property of Indians and the effect of the acts, regulations, and administration of said bureau upon the health, improvement, and welfare of the Indians; and to report its findings in the premises, together with recommendations for the correction of abuses that may be found to exist, and for such changes in the law as will promote the security, economic competence, and progress of the Indians.

Said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to employ such clerical assistance as is necessary, to sit during any recess of the Senate, and at such places as it may deem advisable. Any subcommittee, duly authorized thereto, shall have the powers conferred upon the committee by this resolution.

G. TOM TAYLOR

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 80), which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service:

Whereas in 1921 an examination was held by the Civil Service Commission at Memphis, Tenn., for postmaster at that place; and

Whereas G. Tom Taylor, then claiming to be a resident of Memphis, made application and took the examination, but the Civil Service Commission declined to certify him as one of the eligibles; and

Whereas in 1925 another civil service examination was held in Memphis for postmaster in that place, and the said G. Tom Taylor again became an applicant and again was refused a place on the list of three eligibles; and

Whereas no appointment was made for about a year after said 1925 examination because apparently it was not desired by the political powers that any one of the three eligibles should be appointed postmaster; and

Whereas the political powers finally induced Mr. Bugg, the third man on the list of eligibles, to withdraw his name; and

Whereas the Civil Service Commission again refused to certify the said G. Tom Taylor, but did have a reexamination made into his application and qualifications; and

Whereas the report of the examiners in 1921, in 1925, and in 1926 all showed that the character and reputation of said G. Tom Taylor unfitted him for postmaster at Memphis, and held he was not qualified for postmaster by reason of not possessing the proper character and fitness; and

Whereas, notwithstanding these facts and findings of its own examiners, the Civil Service Commission on or about the 1st of June, 1927, placed the said G. Tom Taylor on the list of eligibles by a majority vote; and

Whereas the said G. Tom Taylor was at once appointed acting postmaster and took charge of the office; and

Whereas his name was sent in to the Senate for confirmation early in December, 1927; and

Whereas opposition appearing to the confirmation of G. Tom Taylor his nomination has been withdrawn; and

Whereas the said G. Tom Taylor has been continued an acting postmaster at Memphis, notwithstanding his lack of qualifications and fitness as required by the civil service laws: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Civil Service be, and it is hereby, authorized, ordered, and directed to send for persons and papers and report at the earliest possible day its findings on the following questions:

First. What were the facts as ascertained by the Civil Service Commission as to the character and qualifications and fitness of the said G. Tom Taylor to be postmaster in Memphis.

Second. What reasons actuated the Civil Service Commission in disregarding the findings of its own examiners and in certifying the said G. Tom Taylor as eligible for postmaster at Memphis, notwithstanding his lack of qualifications and fitness as found by the examiners.

Third. That the said committee is authorized to report any other pertinent facts concerning the eligibility of the said G. Tom Taylor for postmaster or as to the action of the Civil Service Commission, or any member thereof, in certifying the said G. Tom Taylor as eligible for postmaster at Memphis.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON TERRITORIES AND INSULAR POSSESSIONS

Mr. WILLIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 81), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized during the Seventieth Congress to send for persons, books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words, to report such hearings as may be had on any subject before said committee, the expense thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during any session or recess of the Senate.

HEARINGS BEFORE THE COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 82), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions, or any subcommittee thereof, hereby is authorized during the Seventieth Congress to send for persons, books and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer at a cost not to exceed 25 cents per 100 words, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

PRODUCTION OF COAL IN WEST VIRGINIA

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article which appeared in the Wheeling Register of the 16th of December, 1927, written by Mr. Hugh W. Roberts, a Washington newspaper correspondent, entitled "West Virginia becomes greatest coal State in Union."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is here printed, as follows:

WEST VIRGINIA BECOMES GREATEST COAL STATE IN UNION—PENNSYLVANIA DISPLACED, AND RANK WILL STAND PERMANENTLY, BELIEF

By Hugh W. Roberts

WASHINGTON, December 15.—In the production of bituminous coal, Pennsylvania, after a reign of countless years as monarch in that field, will be displaced by January 1, 1928. The new king will be West Virginia.

A definite statement to that effect is possible because of the officially reported production of bituminous coal in the two States for the first 10 months of the current year. The figures, as prepared by the Bureau of Mines of the Department of Commerce, follow:

Pennsylvania, 110,600,000 tons.

West Virginia, 131,000,000 tons.

From unofficial reports West Virginia maintained its proportionate advantage in November. Apparently nothing can prevent its victory. It is possible, from what is indicated, that the full year's production will increase West Virginia's lead as established at the end of October.

STATE GAINING FOR YEARS

While the officials of the Bureau of Mines do not issue comparative figures or do not state the case in the form of a comparison, and thus avoid the kindling of State pride and State jealousy, its figures are readily obtainable at all times. From past reports it is made evident that never before at the conclusion of any 10-month period was West Virginia found in advance of Pennsylvania. The trend has been, however, for the past several years in favor of West Virginia. Each year West Virginia gained. And now it goes over the top.

It is the fact that West Virginia the past several years has gained rather than the fact that this year it will win the prize that is regarded as significant of the probability that West Virginia in future years will make fast its present victory. While Pennsylvania is contending that the strike in its coal fields has more seriously handicapped production this year than the strike in West Virginia no argument is offered to offset the gains scored by West Virginia in each of the past several years. The statisticians of the Bureau of Mines, while withholding expression, indicate a conviction that West Virginia has simply come into its own and come to stay indefinitely.

CRITICISM OF PUBLICATION IN HEARST NEWSPAPERS

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I invite the Senate's attention to an able editorial written by Hon. William E. Chilton, a distinguished former Member of this body, which appeared in the Charleston (W. Va.) Gazette of the 16th day of December, and which is as follows:

ROTTEN JOURNALISM

No one with an iota of sense entertains for an instant the slightest belief that four United States Senators were the recipients of large sums of money from a slush fund provided by the Mexican Government. The public has implicit faith in the complete and absolute integrity and unswerving loyalty of Senators BORAH, NORRIS, LA FOLLETTE, and HEFLIN. One may differ with these men in matters of opinion, but their sincerity goes unquestioned with the American people. Moreover, no sensible person will think for a minute that the Mexican Government would resort to such underhand tactics, even if the purpose of these tactics were clear, which it decidedly is not. The prompt denial of the four will be accepted at full face value.

The matter was brought on entirely by agitation and propaganda in the Hearst chain of newspapers. Pictures were published, with names carefully blocked out, which purported to be originals from Mexican files. They were submitted to at least two Senators some time ago, and these men said at the time that an investigation of them showed such illiteracy as to brand them as forgeries at once, regardless of the content. But Mr. Hearst secured the documents in some way, perhaps through one of his own multifarious agents, and sprang what was intended to be a sensation upon the two countries just at the time when Ambassador Morrow and President Calles were reported to be reaching a complete rapprochement, and when of all times calm and friendly feeling were imperative in both countries. Mr. Hearst has always stood in the front rank of the jingoes where Mexico is concerned, and this latest "scoop" is strictly in line with his wretched policy of agitation. Mr. Hearst, of course, has immense holdings in Mexico. Is there any connection? He says he has published these documents through patriotism, but from where we sit it looks like a piece of rotten journalism that will fall as flat as the proverbial pancake.

WAR FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I submit a Senate resolution and ask to have it read. Then I shall ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 84), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the Committee on Banking and Currency of the United States Senate, or any subcommittee thereof appointed by its chairman, be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the administration and transactions of the War Finance Corporation during the period of its existence and to report to the Senate the result of such investigation. For the purpose of such investigation the said committee or subcommittee is hereby authorized to call upon any department or establishment of the Government to aid and assist in the examination of the books, records, accounts, and data of and pertaining to the transactions of the said War Finance Corporation, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby requested to make available such books, records, accounts, and data for that purpose and to facilitate the examination thereof.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, it occurs to me that before we actually order an investigation—if I understood the purport of the resolution from its rapid reading—it should be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency for consideration at least to the extent of ascertaining whether we could secure sufficient information by sending for members of the board; in other words, to be enlightened as much as it is possible to be enlightened.

As I understand, this resolution orders an investigation. Is that correct?

Mr. FLETCHER. It orders an investigation.

Mr. EDGE. I think before we actually order an investigation the Committee on Banking and Currency should at least ascertain as far as they can, to their satisfaction so far as possible, just the situation, and then they can vote for an investigation if they desire it. I think that is the method usually pursued.

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course, it depends on how far the committee wants to go in that connection.

Mr. EDGE. Will not the Senator be satisfied to have it referred to the committee?

Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to have immediate action on it. I make that request. I do not think there can be any real ground of objection.

Mr. NORBECK. Mr. President, I ask to have the resolution read again.

Mr. EDGE. If the Senator will not agree to have it referred to the committee, I must ask that it lie over under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

Mr. FLETCHER subsequently said: Mr. President, this morning I offered a resolution to investigate the operations and transactions of the War Finance Corporation, and asked unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] objected, and was under the belief at that time that the resolution ought to go to the Committee on Banking and Currency for their report, inasmuch as it directed them to make this investigation.

I now ask unanimous consent that the resolution, which was passed over until the following day under the rule by reason of that objection, be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRATTON in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INVESTIGATION OF PUBLIC UTILITY CORPORATIONS

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I send to the desk a resolution which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 83), as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of five Members of the Senate be appointed by the President thereof, and be hereby empowered and directed to inquire into and report upon: (1) The growth of the capital assets and capital liabilities of public-utility corporations supplying either electrical energy in the form of power or light, or both, however produced, or gas, natural or artificial, of corporations holding the stocks of such public-utility corporations, and of nonpublic-utility corporations owned or controlled by or affiliated with such holding companies; (2) the method of issuing, the price realized, or value received, the commissions or bonuses paid or received, and other pertinent facts with respect to the various security issues of all classes of corporations herein named, including the bonds and other evidences of indebtedness thereof, as well as the stocks of the same; (3) the extent to which holding companies or their stockholders control or are financially interested in financial, engineering, construction, and/or management corporations, and the relation, one to the other, of the classes of corporations last named, the holding companies and the public-utility corporations; (4) the services furnished to public-utility corporations by holding companies and/or their associated, affiliated, and/or subsidiary companies, the fees, commissions, bonuses, or other charges made therefor, and the earnings and expenses of such holding companies and their associated, affiliated, and/or subsidiary companies; and (5) the value or detriment to the public of holding companies owning the stock or otherwise controlling such public-utility corporations immediately or remotely, with the extent of such ownership or control, and particularly what legislation, if any, should be enacted by Congress to correct any abuses that may exist in the organization or operation of such holding companies.

The committee is further empowered and directed to inquire and report whether, and to what extent, such corporations or any of the officers thereof or anyone in their behalf or in behalf of any organization of which any such corporation may be a member, through the expenditure of money or through the control of the avenues of publicity have made any, and what effort to influence or control public opinion on account of municipal or public ownership of the means by which power is developed and electrical energy is generated and distributed, or to influence or control elections.

That the said committee is hereby authorized to sit and perform its duties at such times and places as it deems necessary or proper, and to require the attendance of witnesses by subpœnas or otherwise; to require the production of books, papers, and documents; and to employ counsel, experts, and other assistants, and stenographers, at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page. The chairman of the committee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses and sign subpœnas for witnesses; and every person duly summoned before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, who refuses or fails to obey the process of said committee, or appears and refuses to answer questions pertinent to said investigation, shall be punished as prescribed by law. The expenses of said investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers of the committee or subcommittee signed by the chairman and approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit during the sessions or the recesses of the Senate, and until otherwise ordered by the Senate.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Montana if he would object to having the resolution referred in the first instance to the Committee on Interstate Commerce?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I see no occasion whatever for that.

Mr. MOSES. The resolution is a long and somewhat involved one; and it might be well to have some standing committee of the Senate consider the merits of the various proposals contained in it, rather than to send it immediately to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not know any reason why that subject could not as well be taken up on the floor. The resolution is merely a redraft of a resolution that I offered at the last session of the Senate. I made a somewhat elaborate speech at the time, in which I attempted to set forth all of the reasons why this investigation should take place.

Mr. MOSES. From the Senator's own point of view.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. From my point of view; yes. I do not know any reason why the matter should go to the committee. I dare say that some of the Senators, at least, did me the honor to listen to my speech and perhaps read what I said.

Mr. MOSES. I did the Senator the honor to read it.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But if they did not it is available to them, and there is no reason why the matter could not be debated upon the floor just as well as in the committee.

Mr. MOSES. Then, Mr. President, in view of the Senator's position, and inasmuch as there may be some Senators who have not read the speech of the Senator from Montana which was delivered last February, I shall have to ask that the resolution go over, in order that those Senators who have not read the speech may occupy Sunday in doing so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

REPORT OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION ON STOCK DIVIDENDS (S. DOC. NO. 26)

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I move that the report of the Federal Trade Commission on stock dividends of December 5, 1927, be printed as a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if the Federal Trade Commission have not already had this report printed?

Mr. HOWELL. They report that they have not the funds.

Mr. SMOOT. That is just the trouble. If we begin the practice of printing here as public documents reports from all of the commissions and departments there will be no end to it. The practice has been in the past that under no circumstances would we do it. We appropriate all the money they ask for the purpose of printing. I certainly must object to the printing of this document, not because it is a report of the Federal Trade Commission, but because that has been the practice for years now. Therefore I must object to its being printed as a public document.

Mr. McMASTER. Mr. President, will not the distinguished Senator withdraw the objection? The particular report to which the Senator from Nebraska refers is the gasoline report, is it not?

Mr. HOWELL. No; it is a report on stock dividends.

Mr. SMOOT. It would not make any difference what report it was if it was a report which ordinarily is printed by the body issuing it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska to what the report relates, and whence it comes?

Mr. HOWELL. It comes from the Federal Trade Commission. It is a report on stock dividends. It was made in response to a resolution introduced by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] of date of December 17, 1926. This report was made on the 5th day of December of this year. The commission has not the facilities to print the report, and I am merely asking that it be printed as a document.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, is it available for the use of the Senate without printing? Is there any way a Senator can get a copy of it without now making an order to print?

Mr. MOSES. In other words, was it ever printed under the printing appropriation for the commission?

Mr. HOWELL. No.

Mr. MOSES. Is there a letter of transmittal with it?

Mr. HOWELL. I presume that there are enough copies of the report available, though I am not informed as to that, to supply a reasonable number of Senators; but it is an important report, and it ought to be printed as a public document.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I have no objection to the request.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I objected to the request; but I understand it is not a report of the affairs of the Federal Trade Commission. From what the Senator has said, it is a report submitted to the Senate in response to a Senate resolution. Am I correct?

Mr. HOWELL. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I have no objection to its being printed. I thought from what the Senator said that it was a report of the Federal Trade Commission, but it is not; it is a report from the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. HOWELL. To the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. To the Senate. Therefore I do not object.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Nebraska stated, in answer to my question, that it was in response to a Senate resolution, and I felt that it should be printed.

Mr. SMOOT. I withdraw my objection to the request because of the statement of the Senator that it is in response to a Senate resolution.

Mr. BINGHAM. Would the Senator have any objection to referring it to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. HOWELL. I do not think that is necessary. It is a report to the Senate, and it ought to be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska? The Chair hears none, and the report made in response to Senate Resolution 304, Sixty-ninth Congress, second session, agreed to December 22, 1926, will be printed as a document.

REPORTS OF PUBLIC UTILITIES

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for an order for the printing of the annual report of the 10 public utilities of the District of Columbia, in accordance with the usual custom.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator if the appropriation bill for the District of Columbia does not carry sufficient funds to meet the necessary requirements of the Utilities Commission?

Mr. CAPPER. It never has been handled in that way. For years and years the reports have been printed in the manner stated in my request.

Mr. KING. That is undoubtedly true, but I thought that when we created the present Public Utilities Commission we enlarged their powers and gave them a sufficient appropriation to meet all legitimate demands for printing and otherwise of that commission.

Mr. CAPPER. I do not think it contemplated the printing of these reports.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let us have the order read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the annual reports of the following-named public utility companies in the District of Columbia, for the year ending December 31, 1926, heretofore transmitted to the Senate, be printed as a Senate document:

Capital Traction Co., Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator & Railway Co., Potomac Electric Power Co., Washington Gas Light Co., Georgetown Gas Light Co., Washington Railway & Electric Co., City and Suburban Railway of Washington, Georgetown & Tennallytown Railway Co., and Washington Interurban Railroad Co.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator object to the order going over until Monday to enable us to ascertain whether or not provision has already been made?

Mr. CAPPER. I have no objection to its going over until Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The order will go over until Monday.

TAX REDUCTION

The bill (H. R. 1) to reduce and equalize taxation, provide revenue, and for other purposes was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

HEARINGS ON FLOOD CONTROL

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 6) was referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the printing act, approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Flood Control of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed, with illustrations, 3,000 additional copies of the hearings held before the committee during the Seventieth Congress, first session, on the control of the destructive flood waters of the United States, of which the Public Printer shall deliver 1,400 copies to the folding room of the House of Representatives and 600 copies to the folding room of the Senate for equal apportionment to the Members of each House, respectively, and 1,000 copies shall be delivered to the House folding room and placed to the credit of the Committee on Flood Control of the House of Representatives.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5800) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1928, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 11, 28, 29, 30, 38, and 39.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 20, 22, 24, 25, 26, 27, 31, and 40, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 18: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 24 of the matter inserted by said amendment, after the word "Oklahoma," insert the following: "are authorized to execute and"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 21: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out and at the end of the matter so restored, after the numerals "1925," insert the following: ": Provided, That the inmates of the United States Industrial Reformatory shall be employed only in the production and manufacture of supplies for the United States Government, for consumption in United States institutions, and in duties necessary for the construction and maintenance of the institution"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 35: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 35, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit all of the matter inserted by said amendment after the sum $370,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have not agreed on amendments numbered 19, 23, 32, 33, 34, 36, and 37.

CHARLES CURTIS,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

MARTIN B. MADDEN, WILL R. WOOD,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WARREN. I move the adoption of the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, with the permission of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and the consent of the Senate, I should like to make a few observations on one of the matters involved in this report. I feel that it is my duty to myself and, what is more important, to my people that I should do so. I refer to the people of Baltimore city and of the State of Maryland generally.

When the World War came along the Government thought it expedient to establish an ammunition depot at Curtis Bay, on the southern boundary of the city of Baltimore, and there, for the purposes of the war, were stored vast quantities of high explosives—T. N. T., tetrol, and the like—and great quantities of black and smokeless powder, too. At the present time these explosives amount to some 16,800 tons in bulk, and to some $20,000,000 in value.

As I am informed, the purposes for which this ammunition depot was established were not realized at the time by the people of Baltimore. They supposed that the structures the Government was erecting were being erected for the assembling of airplane materials on an immense scale, and therefore had no opportunity to protest against the storage of ammunition in that locality, even if they had been disposed to do so. But it is hardly necessary for me to say, in the light of the military record that the people of Baltimore made for themselves during the bombardment of Fort McHenry in 1814, the Revolutionary War, and the World War, that even if they had known the object for which the depot was established they would not have uttered any remonstrance whatever. At that time their patriotic zeal was aroused to the highest degree and, like the people of every other portion of the United States, they were prepared to make any and every sacrifice to bring the World War to a successful issue.

That war passed. Shortly afterwards full knowledge of the purposes for which the Curtis Bay depot was being used was brought to the attention of the people of Baltimore, and they commenced to beseech—that is not too strong a word for the occasion—the National Government to remove at least the greater part of the high explosives from that site.

It is on the southern boundary of the city of Baltimore. Right across the Patapsco from it is Fort McHenry. Near it are such great industrial plants as those of the Davison Chemical Co., one of the largest manufacturers of sulphuric acid in the world, and the United States Industrial Alcohol Co., and elevators and terminals of the Pennsylvania Railroad and the Western Maryland Railroad Cos., to say nothing of other important business improvements. The city hall of Baltimore itself is only 6 miles away, and at a much less distance is the very heart of the great commercial interests of Baltimore.

The board of inquiry that was organized by the Government after the Picatinny and Lake Denmark explosions reported that for purposes of safety there should be a 2-mile zone around every place where high explosives are stored by the Government. If that is true, were there to be a general detonation of the high explosives now at the Curtis Bay depot, terrible destruction of property would follow not only in the Curtis Bay industrial district of Baltimore but at Canton, one of the most important of all the business sections of Baltimore, and in other business areas of Baltimore. Of course, I might mention also the destruction of homes and the fearful loss of life that would result from such an explosion.

Moved by the keen edge of this sword of Damocles perpetually suspended above their heads, the people of Baltimore in every possible way in which an appeal can be made by a community to the humanity of the Government, to which it has a right to look for protection, have besought the President, the Director of the Budget, the Secretary of War, and Congress to extricate them from the frightful, the appalling situation in which they are involved.

I am glad to say that, so far as the President is concerned, he promptly and generously responded to our appeal. He has too kind a heart not to have done so. The mayor of Baltimore solicited his help, the Governor of Maryland went before him, I and my colleague, Senator Weller, went before him, the leading citizens of Baltimore City, including representatives of the Baltimore Association of Commerce, went before him, and we implored him to come to our rescue; and he did come to our rescue as fully as he had the power to do. He approved at the last session of Congress an appropriation of upward of $800,000 for the removal of the great mass of high explosives from the Curtis Bay depot, and the Director of the Budget and the Secretary of War united in his approval. The recommendation came down to the House of Representatives, and there, for reasons which it is all but impossible for me to understand, the item which had been inserted in the deficiency bill of last session was disallowed by the House Committee on Appropriations, of which Mr. MADDEN is chairman.

When that bill reached the Senate I presented to the Senate Committee on Appropriations the perilous predicament of Baltimore, and it unanimously restored the item. Then the bill became the subject of a conference between the two Houses, and the Senate conferees insisting upon their amendment, the House conferees finally acceded to it, but when the bill came back to this body with the item the bill perished in the filibuster which followed, and with it perished, of course, the item itself.

When the present session came on representatives of the people of Baltimore again appealed to the President and the Director of the Budget for an appropriation for the removal of the high explosives from Curtis Bay. Again the President honored our appeal, though in a somewhat smaller amount. Again the Director of the Budget honored it. Again the Secretary of War honored it in his estimates, as he had done at the last session of Congress. But again the House Committee on Appropriations, under the lead of Mr. MADDEN, disallowed the appropriation, with the result that the deficiency bill of this session came over to us without it. But the Senate Committee on Appropriations restored the item. Then the deficiency bill of this session went to conference, and the most that our conferees could secure was a compromise between the Senate and House conferees, pursuant to which there is to be a survey by Army and Navy officers, to be rendered not later than March 15 next, of the points of storage of supplies of ammunition and components thereof for the use of the Army and Navy, with special reference to the location of such ammunition and components as are in such proximity to populous communities and industrial areas as to constitute a menace to life and property.

For six years, with the most tense, the most distressing anxiety, our people have been knocking at the door of the central Government for relief. As far back as 1919 a promise was given to Senator John Walter Smith, of Maryland, and Mr. Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, that orders would be issued for the removal of certain of the more dangerous explosives at the depot. In 1920 Maj. Gen. George W. Burr, Assistant Chief of Staff, in writing assured Senator John Walter Smith, of Maryland, that the Ordnance Department of the Army had taken steps to remove all the T. N. T. and tetryl at the depot. I have omitted to say that the Maryland Legislature, too, has adopted a resolution begging the Federal Government to relieve Baltimore of the menace to which it is exposed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow an interruption?

Mr. BRUCE. Certainly.

Mr. FLETCHER. If the Secretary of War is in favor of the removal of these explosives and everybody seems to want it, why does he not proceed to do it? Is it necessary to have additional legislation or is it necessary to have a special appropriation for that purpose?

Mr. BRUCE. The trouble is that each time that the House Committee on Appropriations has met, Mr. MADDEN, who is chairman of that committee and seems, for some reason or other, to be actuated by a spirit of bitter partisanship in the case, has produced before him Gen. Clarence C. Williams, Chief of Ordnance of the Army, and obtained from him testimony which has afforded him a pretext for his obstruction. At the present session General Williams went so far as to use the following language with regard to the matter:

> Of course, there is an element of danger in those explosives, but we do not consider that it is a very great danger. However, there is a danger.

Note how measured this language is. When the deficiency bill of last session came up General Williams said that the danger was remote. Now he speaks in an entirely different tone—and why? Because since Congress adjourned last spring there has been an explosion at that depot. Thanks to the God of mercy, it did not lay flat a large part of our city and destroy the lives of great numbers of our people, but this was only because the explosion took place at a comparatively isolated point on the site. I was at my home at Ruxton, 9 miles out from the city of Baltimore, when a reporter of the Baltimore Sun called me up and said, "Senator, shells are going off at the Curtis Bay depot." My feelings can readily be imagined, thoroughly familiar as I was with all the dangers which surrounded the depot. In all my life I do not think that my soul has ever been tortured by such sensations of fear, anxiety, and distress as it was then, because I knew that some of the foremost experts of the country employed by the mayor of Baltimore and the Baltimore Association of Commerce had testified that should a general explosion take place at the Curtis Bay depot a large part of the city of Baltimore would be laid low and hundreds of human lives extinguished.

For all I knew, out in the country where I was at the time those frightful results were about to follow; that is to say, all of those great industrial plants and structures at Curtis Bay were about to crumble into dust, and all those great commercial warehouses across the Patapsco River were about to be shattered. Not only that, for all I knew, trust companies and bank buildings, too, might be more or less demolished, with the millions of dollars of securities and valuables in their vaults.

Fortunately, as I have said, this explosion, which took place on the 23d day of September last, occurred on a spot at the depot too isolated to be communicated to the main structures in which the great bulk of the explosives are stored. So it is perfectly natural that General Williams, when he was put on the stand at this session of Congress, should speak a very different language from that which he spoke at the last session of Congress. Then he said that the danger was remote. Now he says, to repeat his words:

> Of course, there is an element of danger in those explosives, but we do not consider that it is a very great danger. However, there is a danger.

I quote these words from page 461 of the House hearings at this session.

In 1925, when the peril threatened by the Curtis Bay depot was brought to the attention of the Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Davis, now Secretary of War, his confident reply was that the value of their method of storage was reflected by the fact that not a single explosion or fire of any magnitude had occurred among World War stocks of ammunition on the ground of any ordnance depot which resulted in any damage.

Hardly were these words out of his mouth before those frightful explosions took place at Lake Denmark and Picatinny Arsenal, which resulted in the destruction of hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of property and the loss of many lives.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] will correct me if I am in error in the statement that in New Jersey they have had explosions due to the storage of Army ammunition at Raritan, near South or North Amboy, at Toms River, and at Lake Denmark and Picatinny. I think that the latter are two different points, are they not?

Mr. EDGE. They are two different points, but in very close proximity.

Mr. BRUCE. So frightful was the effect of the explosion at Lake Denmark that the town of New Hope, 2 miles away, was wrecked.

As I said, Mr. MADDEN, for some reason or other, has proved himself to be, as I look at it, a blind—I was about to say a passionate—partisan in this matter. He ignores all testimony except that of General Williams, and attaches no importance to the great mass of testimony which fully contradicts the statements of General Williams with regard to the degree of danger created by the Curtis Bay depot. "I believe in my soul," Mr. MADDEN declares, "that there is no menace, based on what the Chief of Ordnance has said" and he deprecates the expense that the Government would incur in making Baltimore safe. If the explosives could not be removed to points where there would be no danger to the people living in their vicinity that would be a different situation. If we must have ammunition, and its storage is inevitably attended with peril, there is no reason, of course, why the people of Baltimore should not incur that peril as justly as the people of any other community in the United States. But the testimony taken in the House hearings last year and again this year shows that the Army has ammunition depots at different points in the United States where, if the Curtis Bay high explosives were stored, there would be no danger to the surrounding territory. One is Fort Ogden, in the State of Utah. It is in a sparsely settled community, 7 miles away from the town of Ogden. Then there is Savanna, on the Mississippi River, in the northwest corner of Illinois. The Government ammunition depot there is seated on a Government tract of some 13,000 acres in a secluded region.

There is another Army storage depot situated on a Government tract of more than 850 acres, in South Carolina, which is 11 miles distant from Charleston, in a very thinly populated community. Then there is another storage point at Pig Point, 8 or 10 miles away from the town of Portsmouth, Va., which is situated on a Government tract of 650 acres. The country around Pig Point is quite thinly settled, I believe.

I want to be perfectly accurate in every statement that I make. So far as Ogden is concerned, not a protest has come from the people there.

Mr. SWANSON. Does the Senator refer to Pig Point?

Mr. BRUCE. No; to the depot at Ogden.

Mr. SWANSON. That is true as to Ogden.

Mr. BRUCE. No protest has come from any individual at that place. General Williams has so testified. The same thing is true as to Savanna, in the State of Illinois, and whilst some inquiries have been made by the people of Charleston and its vicinity with regard to the removal of munition to that quarter, no remonstrance of any kind has come from them to the War Department. The same thing is said by General Williams of Pig Point. He testifies that inquiries have come from citizens of that region in regard to the proposed transfer of ammunition to Pig Point, but that no serious objection has been raised to the transfer.

Mr. SWANSON. I have repeatedly received remonstrances opposed to that proposition. They have a large supply of ammunition there. It is so large they have been reducing it, as it is dangerous to everything in that section. I would not consent, if I had power enough to prevent it, to have any bill pass the Senate that would remove any more ammunition to the depot at Pig Point. I have aided the Senator in his effort to give relief to Baltimore, but that relief to Baltimore should not be given by increasing the danger to other communities which already have more dangers than they ought to have. I have been assured that if a transfer shall be made, the ammunition will not go to Pig Point, Va. Consequently, I have aided Baltimore in every way I could.

Mr. BRUCE. That is perfectly satisfactory to me. I know the Senator is moved by nothing but perfectly proper motives about the matter. I am sure that he does not want Pig Point to be known as Hog Point because of mere local selfishness. I am bound to admit that the least desirable one, for one reason or another, of all the points of removal that I have mentioned is Pig Point. So far as the other points of removal are concerned, there is no objection on the part of the people, and I do not think that there could well be any.

Mr. SWANSON. I should like to say to the Senator that I have complete and full assurance that if the removal shall be made the depot will not go to Pig Point. Consequently, with that assurance I have not interfered with the Senator in any manner in his effort to secure the removal he desires.

Mr. BRUCE. Precisely. We do not want the depot removed to Pig Point. We are perfectly satisfied that it should not go there. But there is Ogden, for instance, which appears to have no objection to being made a point of removal. Of course, one of these Army munition depots brings much business into a community, and a small town might well desire to have one located near it if due regard were paid by the Government to the safety of its people.

I wish to take occasion to thank the Senate Committee on Appropriations for the spirit in which they have handled this application for relief of the people of Baltimore. They have done everything in their power to give us relief; they have gone to every extremity to which they felt that they could properly go in order to assure it to us.

Our conferees have been compelled to accept the compromise which I have mentioned. I have no faith in it. The report to be submitted is not to deal with Curtis Bay or with Raritan especially, but it is to deal with the storage of Army munition throughout the United States. However, I have no choice except to submit to the results that have been reached in the conference. All that I can do is to protest and to remonstrate and to say that I think that it is simply disgraceful that the prayer of our people for security has not been long ago heeded, and that even now, when it is reluctantly heeded, is to be heeded in such a begrudging, limited, and selfish spirit as it is.

Suppose this petition were emanating from the city of Chicago or from the city of Philadelphia or from the city of Cleveland or from the city of San Francisco or from any other city in the land, under those circumstances I could not conceive of myself as being such a brute, so absolutely insensible to all the generous impulses of human nature, as to be unwilling to do everything in my power to bring such hazard as I have described to an end. Not only is there that threat at Curtis Bay to existing business plants and to human life in Baltimore, but necessarily such conditions as those which prevail at Curtis Bay can not but chill the spirit of business enterprise and progress in Baltimore and check the general growth of the city. What company wants to spend thousands or millions of dollars in establishing another great plant at Curtis Bay or within the radius of its dangers if it is to be daily or hourly in peril of being totally destroyed by an explosion?

When the explosion took place last summer—one which happily was not far-reaching in its effect—terrified men, women, and children, fled from their homes in the Curtis Bay locality; and when some of the bolder citizens of Baltimore sought to find out what had caused the casualty, they found themselves practically facing the bayonets of the military authorities who denied them, and properly denied them, admittance to the places of storage at the depot.

All I have to add is to say to Mr. MADDEN that if an explosion should occur at Curtis Bay before any relief shall be given to the people of Baltimore, I commend to his perusal the old story of Cain and Abel, as it is told in the Book of Genesis:

> And the Lord said unto Cain: Where is Abel, thy brother? And he said: I know not; am I my brother's keeper?
> And He said: What has thou done? The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto Me from the ground.
>
> And now art thou cursed from the earth, which hath opened her mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand.
> When thou tillest the ground, it shall not henceforth yield unto thee her strength; a fugitive and a vagabond shalt thou be in the earth.
> And Cain said unto the Lord, My punishment is greater than I can bear.
> Behold, Thou hast driven me out this day from the face of the earth; and from Thy face shall I be hid; and I shall be a fugitive and a vagabond in the earth; and it shall come to pass that everyone that findeth me shall slay me.

"Shall slay me," as Mr. MADDEN will have slain many of the good people of our city—men, women, and children—to say nothing of those industrial plants, warehouses, and homes which will have toppled to the ground and been abased in the dust.

Mr. WILLIS obtained the floor.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. I thank the Senator. I merely wish to say a very few words on the same subject touched upon by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE].

The condition which the Senator from Maryland has so vividly portrayed as existing in Baltimore, in the State of Maryland, exists, I might say, fourfold in the State of New Jersey. I use the term "fourfold," as that proportion is indicated by the appropriations necessary to remove the explosives. As I recall, the Budget estimated—and the estimate was approved by the President—that a sum of approximately $2,100,000 would be required to remove the very high explosives, including T. N. T., the most dangerous type of high explosive, from the Raritan Arsenal, N. J., to remote points in the country. I think the appropriation necessary to remove similar explosives from Curtis Bay Arsenal is in the neighborhood of $300,000 or $400,000. I do not make that comparison for any other reason in the world than to emphasize the terrible situation, as we view it, existing in the State of New Jersey.

As the Senator from Maryland has pointed out several times during the discussion, some of the officers of the War Department in their testimony seem to consider the danger remote. At the same time, in the State of New Jersey only a little more than a year ago it was not so remote when the depot at Lake Denmark and at the Picatinny Arsenal, located approximately 2 or 3 miles apart, or portions of them, at least, were destroyed by an explosion and twenty-odd lives were lost, as I recall, and millions of dollars' worth of Government and private property were destroyed.

I recognize, Mr. President, that we must have locations for these explosives. I am sure New Jersey is as patriotic as any other State and that all the States are equally patriotic and are prepared to assume their full share of responsibilities of this unattractive nature. New Jersey has within its borders many powder works, and frequent explosions have occurred. A number of governmental activities of this character were located there during and shortly after the World War. We expected that to happen and we were ready for it. They were all a part of our war contribution, but now to retain this appalling threat, as it were, to public life and property, right in the midst of congested sections, in my judgment, is absolutely indefensible.

Again, from a business standpoint there is no occasion for this. Congress years ago enacted legislation and approved an appropriation to build storage houses for this type of explosive and other inflammable material in sections that were remote from development. At an expense of several hundred thousand dollars one was built in Utah. My information is that it is not used at all, or, if at all, only in a very slight degree; yet the Government has expended the money, and the storage house is there, and explosives stored there would not be a menace to private property, because, from my information, there is not a village within 7 miles of the storage house.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EDGE. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I do not want to lose my rights. I think I have the floor, but I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me to ask a question, what became of the project we had before the Naval Affairs Committee?

Mr. EDGE. I was just going to refer to that. Also, the Navy have asked for a storage house in a section, as I understand, likewise removed from ordinary municipal development, out in the State of Nevada; and, if I am not mistaken, permissive legislation was passed in the Senate at the last session in order to build such a storage house.

Why should we spend the hundreds of thousands of dollars necessary to build these storage houses if we are still going to keep this explosive material in the midst of sections where development is rapid? The Raritan Arsenal in New Jersey, from which it is sought to remove this material, is located within a couple of miles of the large city of New Brunswick. It is now being hemmed in all around; there is practically a town on every side of the arsenal excepting the river side. To have that arsenal in the midst of that growing population is unfair to the people residing there, and in my judgment it is not good business from the standpoint of the Government.

I want to express my appreciation of the earnest efforts that I know the conferees have made to have the amendment appropriating money for removal, as unanimously adopted by the Senate, retained in the bill. I can not understand at all the logic of the conferees on the part of the House. This reference to a committee, of course, is merely that type of compromise which means little, if anything. However, I want to give our conferees full credit. They have provided, in the amendment which will shortly be read at the desk, that a report shall be made by this board of officers on the location of explosives and where they should be removed not later than March 15, 1928. It is that definite assurance that we will have a report before this session of Congress is apt to adjourn that moves me to accept without further discussion the decision on the part of the conferees.

I give notice now that on March 16, 1928, if the report is not in, I shall demand the report, and that immediately following that report if there is anything in it upon which we can base action—and I am sure no report could be brought to the attention of Congress except one that would recommend the removal of these explosives—I shall ask for an appropriation in some appropriation bill during the present session of Congress that will direct the removal of this menace.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I only desire to take a moment.

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, this matter was brought up near the end of last session. I became much interested in it. The Appropriations Committee of the Senate permitted it to come up without objection and go on the celebrated second deficiency bill, which later went down in the tumultuous ending of that session through filibustering.

While this definite action was not proposed originally, yet we inserted these various appropriation items freely in the Senate committee. I think this language, which compels Army and Navy heads to move quickly and report quickly, will enable us to take care of this matter later, perhaps in this Congress.

I wish to say a word to my friend from Maryland [Mr. BRUCE], whom I regard as one of the greatest lovers of justice in this body or in the Nation. While perhaps I may be guilty of using some word that has caused it, I think he is a little severe on our friend the chairman of the House committee, Mr. MADDEN. I will say that while the House conferees objected point-blank to the action of the Senate, Mr. MADDEN interested himself at once to cooperate with us in some way to provide for carrying out the aim of the Senate; in fact, he was almost the author of something that they could do in the House that we could not do on this side under our rules..

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I desire to direct the attention of the Senate very briefly to amendment numbered 21 and to make some brief observations thereon, and then to ask a ques- of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

It will be recalled that when this bill was before the Senate it struck out, after somewhat extended discussion, lines 9 to 19, inclusive, on page 52, those lines containing the provision that authorized the appropriation of $100,000 for the construction of a brick plant at the United States Reformatory at Chillicothe, Ohio.

The conferees have provided, in amendment numbered 21, as follows:

> That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 21, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: Restore the matter stricken out, and at the end of the matter so restored, after the numerals "1925," insert the following.

Then follows, verbatim, the language of section 6 of the act of January 7, 1925, that language being as follows:

> That the inmates of the United States Industrial Reformatory shall be employed only in the production and manufacture of supplies for the United States Government, for consumption in United States institutions, and in duties necessary for the construction and maintenance of the institution.

It will be recalled that when this matter was under discussion a few days ago, the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] expressed himself as follows—I will read what he said at that time so that there can be no doubt about it. At page 558 of the RECORD he used this language, and I particularly desire the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to this. I had asked him whether he would accept an amendment providing that the brick to be manufactured at that reformatory should be used only in that institution. The Senator from Wyoming then said:

> As to using the bricks at one institution, there may be a good many little buildings that are connected in a way and yet are separate buildings; but, if I can do so in order, I should not object to an amendment that would carry out the very idea that the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee expressed in the House in his debate, near where the Senator is reading, where he was very vehement in his idea that this brick should be for the use of penitentiary buildings only and nothing else.

Subsequently, on the same page, the distinguished Senator from Wyoming very properly read what the chairman of the House committee had said, evidently to enforce the idea that the bricks to be manufactured there were to be used only at that institution. The Senator from Wyoming read the following from the RECORD. I will start with what was said by the gentleman from Texas, Mr. LANHAM:

> Mr. LANHAM. Let me ask the gentleman if it is contemplated that the brick to be manufactured in this plant shall be used at this institution?
> Mr. MADDEN. Only.
> Mr. LANHAM. Only; and not put in competition with outside brick manufacturers?
> Mr. MADDEN. That is it. It is a humanitarian proposition.

The question I desire to submit to the able Senator from Wyoming is this: Is it the understanding, then, based upon that statement, that this provision extends, as the chairman of the House committee said, only to the manufacture of brick for the completion of that institution and for the construction of the necessary buildings of that institution? Is that the understanding of the chairman?

Mr. WARREN. It is not only my understanding, but I fully believe the institution would not be permitted, under this proposed legislation, to do otherwise. I will say to the Senator that I am just as well satisfied as I was when I said at an earlier date that all I wanted done was to confine the manufacture and use of this brick to the one institution where these convicts are incarcerated, not for the purpose of competing with the market in any way, but because, for the good of the morals and the health and general improvement of those convicts, they must be in some way kept at that or some other industry.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, in view of the statement the Senator has made, and in view of the fact that this is a great appropriation bill with very many important provisions, I do not feel inclined to oppose its passage, though I should very much have preferred if the Senate provision could have been accepted and this language stricken out. In view, however, of the assurance that comes from the distinguished Senator from Wyoming that it is the understanding that the bricks made here shall be used only in this institution for the purpose of constructing the necessary buildings in this institution, and upon the assurance from the chairman of the House committee which I have just read, I shall not further oppose the passage of the bill.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not see at this moment the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HOWELL] in his seat. I believe he wanted to say a word in relation to the proposed appropriation for the Cape Cod Canal.

A year ago I was in agreement with the Senator in adding five and one-half millions or six millions to the proposed appropriation for purchasing the bonds and other evidences of indebtedness of the canal; but information afterwards reached me, as it reached Members on the House side, that it was too early to accomplish what was wished for in the interest of the canal. Hence, we differed on the floor the other day as to the immediate use of this money. I made a point of order, which was overruled, and the Senator put the matter to the Senate, and I was further overruled. Since then, however, the matter has come up in such a way that I think we are in perfect agreement, because I wish to do just what the Senator wishes to do, and with the information we now have I believe it can be safely and well accomplished, probably before the end of this Congress. It is, however, one of those things that the Government has loaned its credit to, and prepared a contract which is being lived up to, but which is not ready to close, and ultimately it will take more money than we have appropriated. The money already appropriated is not fully used—in fact, very little of it so far—so that I do believe it is wise to wait.

I move to agree to the amendment of the House to amendment of the Senate numbered 32.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I move to recede from amendments numbered 19, 36, and 37. They refer to the same subject, different storehouses and arsenals put over for this examination.

The motion was agreed to.

PAY OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I report back favorably from the Committee on Appropriations the resolution (H. J. Res. 92) authorizing the payment of salaries of the officers and employees of Congress for December, 1927, on the 20th day of that month, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives are authorized and directed to pay to the officers and employees of the Senate and House of Representatives, including the Capitol police, the office of legislative counsel, and employees paid on vouchers under authority of resolutions, their respective salaries for the month of December, 1927, on the 20th day of that month.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOLIDAY RECESS

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which was referred the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 8) providing for a holiday recess, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Wednesday, December 21, 1927, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian, January 4, 1928.

REGENT OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

Mr. FESS. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on the Library.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRATTON in the chair). Without objection, the report will be received.

Mr. FESS. From the Committee on the Library I report a joint resolution and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 49) providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress, which now exists, be filled by the appointment of John Campbell Merriam, of the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMISTICE DAY A NATIONAL HOLIDAY

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 25, to declare the 11th day of November, celebrated and known as Armistice Day, a legal public holiday, along the same lines that other days have been declared legal holidays by the Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BORAH. How many legal holidays have we now?

Mr. MAYFIELD. I do not know, but I know that November 11—armistice day—is not a legal holiday, and all the posts of the American Legion over the country have passed resolutions requesting that it be made such. I will appreciate it if the Senate will pass the joint resolution at this time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am opposed to our creating any more legal holidays, unless there is a most exceptional occasion for so doing. It seems to me we can properly show our respect for this day without making it a legal holiday. I once heard an eminent scholar say when one of the great powers of Europe fell from a first-class to a fourth-class power, it had finally created 93 holidays.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator will let this one go through, I promise that I will not offer any more.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have no objection personally to the joint resolution at this time, but I understand it has not gone to a committee. At the last session we agreed that all joint resolutions and bills should go to committee first, and I hope the Senator from Texas will not ask us to deviate from that rule.

Mr. MAYFIELD. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] had one passed just before I called up this joint resolution.

Mr. CURTIS. That was reported from a committee. The Senator from Texas can get a report on his measure by Monday, and I hope he will agree to that, because I would dislike to see the rule which we adopted violated. If we violate it or waive it in one case, we shall have to do so in others. It will be only two days longer, if the Senator will wait until Monday, and I ask that it may go to the appropriate committee.

Mr. MAYFIELD. If it is to be sent to a committee it is immaterial to me where it is sent, because I do not suppose we shall ever hear of it again.

Mr. BORAH. This is a more important matter than I believe the Senator realizes. Let us take time to consider it.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Do I understand the Senator to object?

Mr. BORAH. It seems so.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Is it so?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the joint resolution will be referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. MAYFIELD. The Chair said, "If there is no objection." Should not the inquiry be, "Is there objection to its consideration?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been made to its consideration.

Mr. MAYFIELD. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be re-referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

INTERNATIONAL RADIOTELEGRAPH CONVENTION

On motion of Mr. BORAH, and by unanimous consent, the injunction of secrecy was removed from the International Radiotelegraph Convention and General and Supplementary Regulations Relating Thereto, transmitted by a message from the President of the United States on December 12, 1927.

DWIGHT WHITNEY MORROW

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an article by Proctor Hall, published in the New York Times magazine on October 16, 1927, relative to Dwight Whitney Morrow, the American ambassador to Mexico.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

MORROW TAKES ON OUR KNOTTIEST JOB—TO HIS MISSION IN MEXICO THE NEW AMBASSADOR BRINGS AN ANALYTICAL MIND AND A GREAT CAPACITY FOR WORK

By Proctor Hall

Dwight Whitney Morrow will soon present his credentials in Mexico City as American ambassador to undertake the solution of the most difficult problem that has confronted a diplomatic representative of the United States in recent years. From a personal standpoint it is a new test in a new field for a man whose career up to this time has been extraordinarily successful. Not only because of the weighty issues involved, but also because of the challenge of the man and the task, the result will be watched with the closest interest.

The selection of Mr. Morrow by President Coolidge was a personal appointment—with a difference. Ordinarily personal appointments are one of the items entered on the debit side. They carry with them the implication that the appointing Executive might well have gone further, beyond the circle of his friends, and found one more fit for the job. They are excused as one of the prices paid in electing any human being to an executive office.

The personal appointment of Mr. Morrow, on the other hand, was a case in which the long friendship of Mr. Coolidge for the lawyer-financier gave the President a lever by which he could lift a man pre-eminently fit from such an entrenched position as a partnership in J. P. Morgan & Co. Here was a personal choice which reached up, not down.

It is altogether probable that no other President except Mr. Coolidge could have persuaded Mr. Morrow to take the ambassadorship. Mr. Morrow has given generously of his time and abilities to public services, and it is known has cherished a wish to devote himself entirely to some task in this field. The circumstance that the President of the United States, his friend of years, was faced in our relations with Mexico with a long-standing problem of enormous importance and intricacy, was the special event which led to Mr. Morrow's retirement from the Morgan partnership. And the problem, too, is one of which he has intimate knowledge.

Mexico City has exhibited the liveliest curiosity concerning the new ambassador. If it will relieve President Calles's suspense, he may as well know that the differences between Mexico and the United States are now to be tackled by a man who will make all previous ambassadors seem as if they had been toying with our diplomatic exchanges. The United States has been represented in Mexico City by men of good caliber, but never by one of Mr. Morrow's ability, energy, and capacity for this particular task. Calles will know very shortly after the new ambassador presents his credentials that a new order has been established.

The Mexican President will find it impossible not to like Mr. Morrow, not to admire him. Mr. Morrow will be patient, diplomatic, pretty careful of Mexican sensibilities and ways of doing things. But the pressure will be constant. Morning, noon, and night the ambassador will be mastering the problem, piecing it together, getting a little forward with the job. Working with Mr. Morrow on a hard task is never recommended as a rest cure or for one who likes short hours.

Mr. Morrow was one of the ranking partners of the house of Morgan. The enormous load of responsibilities and labors can not be equally distributed at 23 Wall Street any more than in other partnerships. Some of the partners, equipped by special abilities, carry more of the burden than others. J. P. Morgan, Thomas W. Lamont, and Mr. Morrow have been the three associated by the financial world with the major operations and policies of the banking firm. Russell C. Leffingwell, also a lawyer, is a newer partner, and Thomas Cochran and George Whitney are supposed to be active chiefly in connection with the Morgan interests in domestic industrial corporations. Mr. Morrow has been one of the wheel horses in the Morgan international banking activities, to which the firm has given an increasingly large proportion of its attention, as well as in its railroad and industrial corporation connections.

The list of directorates from which Mr. Morrow withdraws in leaving the Street is not impressive. Neither, for that matter, is the list of directorates of any other partner. On January 3, 1914, the Morgan firm publicly announced the withdrawal of the members from scores of directorates, such as the New York Central, American Telephone & Telegraph, and others, the statement asserting that "the necessity of attending many board meetings has been so serious a burden upon our time." Mr. Morrow has lately been a director on only six boards—Bankers' Trust Co., Foreign Finance Corporation, General Electric Co., International General Electric Co. (Inc.), National Broadcasting Co. (Inc.), and Palisade Trust & Guarantee Co., Englewood, N. J.

Mr. Morrow withdrew from the Morgan partnership on September 30. His interest in the firm was liquidated; he accepted payment in full for it. The partnership agreement of the Morgan firm contains a paragraph to the effect that the estate of a deceased member must accept without question whatever valuation the firm puts upon the partnership at the time of death. No estimate of what Mr. Morrow received can be made with any authority. But in leaving the house of Morgan, with which he had been since 1914, Mr. Morrow severed more than a mere business association. The relations of the partners are peculiarly personal and close, and men such as Mr. Morgan, Mr. Morrow, and Mr. Lamont feel it so.

Mr. Morrow's desk was in the row of partners on the Broad Street side of the first floor of 23 Wall Street—his was inside the partitioned inclosure with Mr. Morgan's and Mr. Lamont's—and his office was on the second floor on the Wall Street side. A visitor might think that these dark paneled offices with open fireplaces were the libraries in private homes. One partner sits in an armchair at a refectory table, with leaded casements of tall bookcases behind him. On the table the portfolios of papers, tied with ribbons, might be manuscripts instead of files of decoded cables, corporation statements, and contracts.

Mr. Morrow's office was plainer. He never has been greatly interested in appearances—even in his own, for that matter. He is intent only on what is going on in his mind. One had but to interview him there, to listen to him, as he sat on the leather-covered sofa, one leg doubled under him, explain all the details of something about Amherst College, the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, the Interborough Rapid Transit situation, or the wide distribution of foreign bonds among investors, to realize what concentration of mind and labors had gone on in this man's brain in this setting. In many respects Mr. Morrow impressed one as being the most intellectually active man in the financial world.

A man small in height but with head and brow large and very well proportioned; firm, chiseled face; eyes clear and keen—Mr. Morrow is a figure of whom one takes notice. His voice is strong. He talks rapidly, not smoothly, but always explicitly. If a listener restates something not quite correctly, Mr. Morrow is not content to leave it so. He phrases it right. One is convinced after hearing Mr. Morrow expound a situation that here is a man who has mastered every detail thoroughly, put it in order in his mind, and worked out the underlying principles as well. He is an attentive listener so long as the information which he is getting is what he wants and at a pace to satisfy his active mind. He knows how to search out and assemble information.

Mr. Morrow's financial and business experience fit him especially well to grapple with the vexed questions in these fields involved in our Mexican relations—and these questions are many and important. A number of persons, however, will ask whether the able Mr. Morrow is diplomatic in a trying situation.

The answer is that he has accomplished notable things in the many public services he has rendered, and these are proof that Mr. Morrow is successful in manner as well as in results. Perhaps his outstanding public service was his work as adviser to the Allied Maritime Transport Council in London from February to December, 1918. It is a well-shared secret that the difficult work of this war organization in alloting tonnage had not been made easier by the attitude of openly expressed suspicion of other allies on the part of certain American representatives. Mr. Morrow was quick to see the danger in the feelings aroused; he straightened out an ugly situation with tact and dispatch. There was a noticeably better feeling in London for his having been there.

President Calles might well ask his ambassador in London to make a full report on Mr. Morrow's work in this one task. It was for this and for his labors on the Military Board of Allied Supply that he was awarded the distinguished-service medal. There need be no fear in Mexico City that Mr. Morrow does not grasp the human equation in any situation, or that he is not appreciative of the value of friendly good nature in reaching his goal. His sense of humor is as keen as his insight.

The troubled situation at Amherst College which led to Dr. Alexander Meiklejohn's resignation as president bore heavily on Mr. Morrow's time and patience. He was a trustee of his alma mater. The outside world had the impression that what led up to the final act in that drama was a matter of a few months. Mr. Morrow and the other trustees tried earnestly to save for Amherst students the values of a personal leadership and stimulation which they correctly estimated. For five years the trustees, guided entirely by Mr. Morrow, had tried to work out a solution for a problem which yearly grew more impossible. If Mr. Morrow has not lost the quality of patience which he showed in that case, our diplomatic relations will be fortunate.

Mr. Morrow is not given to the use of ultimatums or force. His power is persuasion by force of fact and argument. The writer remembers long Saturday afternoons spent with Mr. Morrow in 1917, when he was chairman of the Prison Inquiry Commission of New Jersey, the first of his notable public services. Murder and torture had been committed in the prisons and mismanagement was universal. To a newspaper man it seemed necessary that individuals be punished after public trial in order to arouse public opinion in the State to demand a clearing up.

Mr. Morrow was not willing to let the chances of real reform rest, as he saw it, upon the outcome of trials in which proof would not be easy. He was intent upon framing new laws, a new organization, and he counted upon fact and reason to put over what he wanted. He summoned experts to help him. On Saturday afternoons a telephone message from the Knickerbocker County Club frequently would come to remind him of a foursome match he had forgotten while he was working away on prison reform. And generally the street lights were on before he called it a day and bundled up some papers to take home. If any one Morgan partner has had to put the firm cat out on leaving for the night more often than any other, that one probably is Mr. Morrow.

He is a shining example of the truth that a busy man has most time to give to outside demands upon him. The extra tasks which Mr. Morrow has shouldered have not been merely those treasurerships of good causes which can be managed by a secretary. Most stories concerning men like Mr. Morrow are apocryphal, but it is said that Mr. Morgan once remarked to him: "Dwight, I will personally give you $100,000 if you will resign as trustee of Amherst." He did not. He gave a great deal of time to the war-savings campaign, to the Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor, as a worker on the board and not a mere name to decorate the letterhead. He consolidated the charitable agencies in the town where he lives—Englewood. He never has associated himself with anything as a figurehead. In every movement to which he has lent his name he has been a hard worker, and he has left everything better for concentrating his constructive mind upon it.

President Coolidge named him chairman of the Aircraft Board in 1925 to study the Nation's aeronautical needs, particularly with reference to the Army and Navy. Mr. Morrow's conduct of that inquiry was quick and thorough. He took the froth and fury out of wild charges and proposals which had followed the resignation of General Mitchell, drew information from witnesses expeditiously, and prepared a thorough, well-planned report along sound lines.

It was President Coolidge's long personal friendship which enabled him to call on Mr. Morrow for the time-taking job of the Aircraft Board. They were classmates at Amherst, graduated in 1895. When the students came to vote for the man most likely to succeed in life almost every one voted for Morrow. Coolidge got one vote—Morrow's. The friendship which has existed between these two men since those days has not been an intimate one of frequent contacts; but they have met through the years, and their esteem for one another has strengthened. Mr. Morrow is amusing in describing his conviction that the rise of Mr. Coolidge from selectman to legislator, to governor, to Vice President, and then to President was inevitable, a progress which no earthly force could avert.

Mr. Morrow worked to pay his way through Amherst. His father had been president of Marshall College—no surplus funds in his small budget for college educations for his sons. After Amherst, Dwight Morrow studied law at Columbia, again paying his way by tutoring and other jobs. Upon graduation he obtained a place with Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett. Law firms in those days were far from being worried over what their clerks did with the rest of their $6 a week after meeting the expenses of living. But Morrow attracted attention by the quality and the amount of his work. He was summoned from Simpson, Thacher & Bartlett to 23 Wall Street in 1914.

Mr. Morrow is a scholar, a man of liberal and original mind. In presenting him for the degree of doctor of laws at Princeton, Dean West summed up his life: "It is the story of a quick, deep, and resolute mind, well trained to sound judgment and straight action." To understand the breadth and depth of his mind, one should read, for example, his speech at Chicago on foreign loans, delivered April 23, 1926, in which he declared that there was no warrant in American history for the use of armed forces to collect a debt; and his article in Foreign Affairs on the distribution of foreign government bonds among investors in the United States, together with his series of 10 newspaper articles published in 1919 under the title "The Society of Free Nations," reviewing the attempts to bring about leagues of peace and discussing the plan of the Peace Conference's League of Nations Committee, of which Woodrow Wilson was chairman.

Mexico can take pride in knowing that no man ever before gave up so much to accept any ambassadorship as Mr. Morrow is doing at the call of President Coolidge.

Some news reports at the time of the appointment stated that no other partner in J. P. Morgan & Co. had ever retired. Several have done so, and one went into the sphere of diplomacy. Robert Bacon, who resigned in 1903, later was Secretary of State and ambassador to France. But Mr. Morrow's action really sets a precedent. And the motive behind his action, well-informed friends believe, is his genuine desire to devote his life to public service.

TAX REDUCTION

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed at the end of the revenue bill (H. R. 1) as received from the House to-day two parallel reference tables showing where may be found the sections of the old law from which the sections of the bill have been taken and also where the sections of the old law appear in the new bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

WITHDRAWAL

Executive nomination withdrawn from the Senate December 17, 1927

POSTMASTER

George T. Taylor to be postmaster at Memphis, Tenn.

SENATE

MONDAY, December 19, 1927

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Out of the deep have I called unto Thee, O Lord; Lord, hear my voice.

Almighty God, who speakest in a thousand voices to the hearts and minds of men, grant to us that we may be taught of Thee, that with understanding hearts we may faithfully perform the duties of this day.

In all our work make us ever mindful of the welfare and the wants of others, knowing that we are in Thy stead.

Save, we beseech Thee, the valiant sons of this Nation imperiled in the great deep, for Thy paths are in the great waters, and even there shall Thy hand lead them. Enfold in Thine arms of love and mercy their loved ones, and by the sacrament of our sorrowing sympathy bring us all to a deeper knowledge and understanding of the mystery of Thine infinite love.

Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ENTOMOLOGY (S. DOC. NO. 29)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State inclosing a recommendation from the Secretary of Agriculture that the Congress be requested to adopt a resolution authorizing and requesting the President to invite foreign governments to be represented by delegates at the International Congress of Entomology, to be held in the United States in 1928.

It will be noticed that because of the close relationship between entomology and agriculture, the Department of Agriculture is especially interested in the international aspects of this science, which it considers of very great importance to this country. As it would seem, therefore, that the participation of foreign governments in the congress mentioned would be in the public interest, I recommend to Congress the passage of the joint resolution. No appropriation is requested.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 19, 1927.

CLAIM OF TWO NETHERLANDS SUBJECTS (S. DOC. NO. 30)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report regarding two claims presented by the Government of the Netherlands against the Government of the United States for compensation for personal injuries sustained by two Netherlands subjects, Arend Kamp and Francis Gort, while the U. S. S. Canibas was loading on May 1, 1919, at Rotterdam.

I recommend that, in order to effect a settlement of these claims in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of State, the Congress, as an act of grace and without reference to the question of the legal liability of the United States in the premises, authorize an appropriation in the sum of $1,000, $500 of which is to be paid to Mr. Arend Kamp and $500 to be paid to Mr. Francis Gort.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 19, 1927.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, on Thursday last I presented a petition from officials of the State of Nevada, and asked that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, which action was taken. I now request that the Committee on Claims may be discharged from the further consideration of the petition and that it may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Committee on Claims will be discharged from the further consideration of the petition, and it will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Resolved, etc., That the following amendment be proposed to the legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, when ratified by three-fourths of said legislatures, shall be valid as part of the Constitution, viz: At the end of paragraph 4 of Article II, add the words: "No person shall serve as President more than eight years."

AGRICULTURAL RELIEF

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a proposed bill for farmers' relief prepared by former Senator Poindexter, together with a prospectus, all of which I ask may be printed as a public document.

Mr. SMOOT. This is within the rule. If the cost is to be over $100, then, of course, there must be an estimate; but this cost will not be anywhere near that amount.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have a rather important resolution in my hand relating to a bill which has recently been before us. I send the resolution to the desk and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 3), as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Clerk of the House be, and is hereby, authorized and directed in the enrollment of H. R. 5800 (70th Cong., 1st sess.), known as the first deficiency bill, to insert on page 38, in line 9 of the engrossed bill, after the word "attorneys," the following words: "(their heirs or their assignees now of record, as their interest may appear)."

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, just a word of explanation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator state what the resolution is for? Why is it submitted?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I was about to state why the passage of this resolution is proposed. It seems that the Comptroller General has raised an objection to the proposed legislation; he does not object to carrying it into effect, but wants to have the provisions so drafted that he can do so.

The Secretary of the Interior has recommended the passage of this resolution. I had a personal interview with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who likewise recommends it. The item provides for the payment of money which is overdue, but in order that it may be paid a slight change is required in its phraseology, which is suggested by the Comptroller General. I present a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in reference to the matter, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, December 19, 1927.

Hon. FRANCIS E. WARREN,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Referring to your personal call of this date in which we discussed a concurrent resolution with reference to the enrollment of H. R. 5800, in which it is proposed to have inserted after the word "attorneys" in line 16 of page 37 of original print, as reported, the words "their heirs or their assignees, now of record, as their interest may appear," there would seem to be no reason why this amendment should not be incorporated, and there is no objection to the same so far as this office and the department are concerned.

Sincerely yours,

CHARLES H. BURKE, Commissioner.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Wyoming?

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

POLITICS AND MUSCLE SHOALS

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD an article appearing in the New South, in the issue of July, 1927, written by the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and entitled "Politics and Muscle Shoals."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POLITICS AND MUSCLE SHOALS—"OUR LOST OPPORTUNITY"

By Senator GEORGE W. NORRIS

Since Adam and Eve were driven from the Garden of Eden there has never been discovered an element in nature with so many possibilities of usefulness and pleasure as electricity. All that is needed to give humanity the full enjoyment of this modern giant is to cheapen its production. If stock manipulation can be eliminated and if financial legerdemain and unconscionable profits can be removed, it is the cheapest source of power and light known to man.

But it possesses the peculiar quality that it must be used the instant it is available. The source of supply must be constant so that it can be utilized at any instant. Another peculiarity is that those who use it do so spasmodically.

It follows that a very large amount of the electricity that is generated goes to waste. Our rivers are not constant in their flow and, therefore, for practical purposes, the only electricity that can be counted on is that amount which can be used at any hour of the day and any day in the year.

The power that can be thus utilized is called primary power. The power which the flowing river will produce for only a portion of the time is called secondary power. Secondary power is of but little value. When a water-power development is contemplated the engineers count only on the primary power.

And yet, in most of our streams, there is much more secondary than primary power. For instance, the great dam at Muscle Shoals constructed by the Government is capable of producing in round numbers about 100,000 primary horsepower. Yet there are seasons when for a portion of the year enough water goes over that great dam to make a million horsepower.

If some way can be devised by which this secondary power can be converted into primary power, we have, for all practical purposes, succeeded in making something out of nothing. If we can afford to construct a dam for the purpose of generating 100,000 horsepower, what must be the revolution in cheapening the current if it were possible to convert all the secondary power into primary power?

We would more than treble the output without materially increasing the cost of production, and electricity that had before cost 2 mills per kilowatt-hour to produce would be produced at a small fraction of that cost.

LINKING THE SYSTEMS

No means has been invented by which all of the secondary power can be converted into primary power. However, an approach to that end is not only possible, but is already being put to practical application.

One way of changing secondary to primary power is to build storage dams to hold back the flood waters and release them when the normal flow of the stream is low. This method, while very valuable, is expensive. It often costs as much to build storage dams as it does the generating dam. A more practical way by which this desirable result is brought about is to hook up different generating plants into one great superpower system.

Investigation shows that the high water on one stream does not correspond at times with the high water on another. There may be an oversupply of water on one watershed while the reverse is true on the other side. But if we can combine the secondary power at one dam with the secondary power in another locality where the period of high water comes at a different time, we have thus to a great extent brought about the conversion of secondary power into primary power. Such systems are in utilization in many parts of the world and to a great extent in many sections of the South.

This was demonstrated in 1922 in North Carolina. The flow of the streams had been very materially decreased and a power shortage threatened to stop the street cars, leave a portion of the streets in darkness, and many homes without light.

Directly adjoining this system was a hydroelectric power system in eastern Georgia. This system had enough electricity for its own use, but none to spare. In western Georgia was a similar system, with no surplus electricity. Still west of it came the Alabama Power Co., covering a large portion of the State of Alabama and certain localities in adjoining States, with a system of connected generating plants, both of water and of steam. This company had enough electricity for its own use, but no more.

Northwest of the Alabama Power system was Muscle Shoals. The Government dam had not then been completed, but the great steam plant there, capable of producing 80,000 horsepower, was in running order.

Under the present condition of scientific knowledge electricity can not be economically carried over a wire more than 300 miles. It was impossible, therefore, to generate electricity at this great steam plant and carry it into North Carolina, 800 miles away. But fires were kindled in the great furnaces at Muscle Shoals and power was fed into the west side of the Alabama Power Co.'s system. The Alabama Power Co. was able, from the eastern side of its system, to give to the western Georgia system an amount of power equal to that which it had received from Muscle Shoals. The western Georgia system relayed the current to the eastern part of the State and the plant there passed it along to North Carolina. The catastrophe was averted.

This practice of relaying electricity can be continued indefinitely. The greater the superpower system thus connected the greater the possibilities of human benefit.

It was shown before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate in connection with one of the hearings on Muscle Shoals that the power generated there, if connected with the power generated by the Alabama Power Co. on the Coosa River, would increase the combined output of primary power of the two streams by more than 100,000 horsepower in excess of what could be produced by the two systems if not connected.

MONOPOLY ESSENTIAL

Every city supplied with electricity from a hydroelectric plant uses the current in variant quantities at different hours in the same day. Each city has what is known as the peak load. But this peak load in one city will not correspond in time with the peak load in another city, and if the supplying plants are connected by the simple pushing of a button, thousands of horsepower can be transferred from one locality to another. At the time when Atlanta, Ga., would be short of power Chattanooga, Tenn., might have an oversupply going to waste. Similarly, by the turning of a switch, 100,000 horsepower could be changed from the East, where it was not wanted, to the Middle West, where it was needed.

It follows, therefore, that to get the maximum amount of electricity at the minimum cost it is necessary that all the generating systems should be hooked up together. In other words, to get the full benefits of electricity, it must be controlled and supplied by a monopoly.

Thus far I have said nothing that is in dispute. All that I have said is admitted by all students of the subject. The question then arises: Who shall own and control this monopoly?

A monopoly, privately owned and privately operated, is always obnoxious to a free people. The history of the world shows that human nature is such that men intrusted with the control of a monopoly for private gain naturally bear down with all their power and operate the monopoly for all the traffic will stand. I am not mentioning this in any fault-finding spirit. I am not complaining of the corporations that go into the business for the profit there is in it and who try to get out of it every drop of juice that the lemon contains.

But what about the public? What about those who must pay the bill and those who would like to enjoy the comforts of electricity in their homes? Unless it is cheap the ordinary person can not avail himself of it, and electricity is as necessary in the modern home as running water. I do not believe that a free people will permanently submit to a monopoly that controls a necessity of life. It is not because they have any ill will against those who own the monopoly, but it is because the spirit of independence and freedom that is in every human breast rebels against such control, especially of the natural resources of the country. If we are to permanently remain under the thraldom of a monopoly that controls our necessities, then to a great extent we are slaves.

WHO SHALL CONTROL?

What is the raw material of this monopoly? It is the rivers and the brooks that flow from the mountains to the sea. Is it not true that the people own these natural resources and that they, therefore, have title to the unseen power that exists wherever water flows downhill? Water is a necessary monopoly. The raw material already owned by the people ought to be supplied to the people, and we are confronted with the proposition that this property, thus owned, should all be turned over to private corporations for private gain.

In this particular case, who built the mighty dam on the river at Muscle Shoals? Whose money paid for the giant steam power plant located there? Who built the three towns located in that vicinity? Who macadamized the streets? Who owns all of it, and who toiled in order that that great improvement might be made possible? Certainly not those who would lease this property for a song or who would buy it under untruthful representations as to its value. The river has been harnessed. More than $125,000,000 of taxpayers' money has been expended in the operation. The electricity is being generated, and yet it seems the people who own it can not get the benefit of the improvement and the investment simply because somebody is afraid that the Government might go into business. Nobody objected when the Government spent its money to harness the property that already belongs to the people, but now, when the proposition is made that this labor-saving improvement should reach the factory and the home without profit to private parties, there goes up a great cry from men who are anxious that the people should not enjoy the comforts and the blessings of their own property unless they pay tribute to the millionaires in Wall Street and elsewhere. For the past several years that this question has been before Congress there has been a continuous fight between those who wanted to save the property of the people for the people and those who wanted to use the property of the people for private gain.

CONTROL OF RATES

In order to save to the people of the South the use of their own property, it was proposed in Congress that the Government should make a complete survey of the Tennessee River and all its tributaries, and that there should be built from time to time, during the next 10 or 15 years, a network of dams for tne improvement of navigation, the control of flood waters, and the development of electricity. It is only by dealing with a system of this kind as a whole that we can get the maximum amount of benefit from the minimum cost.

The Tennessee River flows through the very heart of the South. In its unimproved state it is not navigable. Properly improved, it would help in the control of the flood waters of the Mississippi River, It would give to the South a system of cheap navigation. It would develop a system of electrical distribution the benefits of which would ultimately reach every factory in the South, every home and every municipality between the Potomac and the Gulf, the Mississippi and the Atlantic. It would have been the key to the entire situation.

While there would have been in the neighborhood of 2,000,000 of horsepower developed it would still have been insufficient to supply the region mentioned, but because of its key situation it would have controlled the rates in every city and on every farm in the South.

The control of these generating dams on the Tennessee River by the people would have enabled the Government to prevent any other system in the entire South from charging exorbitant rates to the consumer. They could have interlocked with all the other systems privately owned, and could have said in every case, "Unless your rates are fair we will refuse to give you the benefit of this necessary connection."

NEEDS SOUTH'S SUPPORT

But what happened to this proposition? It lacked only a few votes on one occasion of passing the Senate and, if it had had the united support of the South it would be on the statute books to-day and the time would come when electricity through this great region at 2 cents per kilowatt hour would be a reality.

There is no other great community on the continent better adapted to the application of a great superpower system than the country south of the Potomac and east of the Mississippi. It would mean, in the end, that the coal mines would be added to the system. It would mean that practically every particle of secondary power would be converted into primary power. It would mean a distribution and sale of electrical current equaled nowhere else on the face of the globe, and the South would come into its own.

Not only was there opposition in Congress from many southern representatives, but the business men, the manufacturers, the men of wealth, the governors, the editors and publishers of great southern newspapers, crowded the corridors of committee rooms, raising a hue and cry against any such improvement. All the power of society, of wealth, and of politics and the influence of one of the greatest trusts and monopolies on earth, were used to prevent the people of the South from enjoying this blessing.

The man who was the author of the bill that would have brought about this improvement was denounced all through the South as an enemy to humanity—one who stood in the way of human progress. It was proclaimed on the floor of the Senate that he was a dreamer, an enemy to advancement, a socialist, a bolshevist, and everything else within the category of denunciation. The South itself refused the cup of happiness and contentment that was extended by a friendly hand.

When it was proposed that the Federal Power Commission should not make any additional leases on the Tennessee River and its tributaries until Muscle Shoals was disposed of there came from all over the South an army of her influential citizens, denouncing the bill and asking that this property of the people be turned over to private exploitation. Had the proposition been accepted, the Tennessee River and all its tributaries would, in the first place, have been made completely navigable. That item alone, future generations will realize, would have been of inestimable value.

On behalf of the Power Trust controlled from Wall Street came the representatives of the Southern Manufacturers' Association, the governors of some of the States, some of the Members of the House of Representatives, and some of the Senators, all from the South, all complaining in the same voice and in the same tone with the Power Trust, and through their combined influence the resolution was killed. Many Senators favorable to the proposition threw up their hands in disgust and said, "If the South doesn't want this blessing, why force it on her?"

DAM NO. 3

Thinking men of the South are beginning to wonder now why private parties do not bid for Dam No. 3. This was included in the contemplated Government improvement. Everybody knows that Dam No. 3, standing alone and by itself, would not be a good financial investment, but combined with the scientific development of the Tennessee System it is not only extremely valuable but essential, and for the navigation of the Tennessee River it is absolutely necessary. These power grabbers do not want it, and the South will wait long before private parties, whom many of their representatives love so well, will make a bid upon Dam No. 3, and without Dam No. 3 the proper navigation of the Tennessee River is an impossibility.

But all this, regrettable as it is, is past. Dam No. 2 and other governmental improvements at Muscle Shoals still remain. We can yet save that valuable improvement already owned by the Government with all the machinery already installed. It will not enable the Government to control electric rates over the South as a complete system of development on the Tennessee River would have done, but it is still capable of wielding a wonderful influence. It is still capable of bringing blessings into many southern homes and cheapening the manufacturing establishments. The opportunity that the South had to become the greatest manufacturing portion of our country will never be realized as completely and as fully as it would have been had this great system in the heart of the South been developed and controlled for service rather than for profit. But notwithstanding this, if we still retain Muscle Shoals we can very materially influence the prosperity of all that country.

THE TAXATION SHAM

In the main, there were two objections made against the governmental improvements above outlined. One was that the Government would pay no taxes, and if private capital made the improvement taxes would be levied. The other objection was that if the Government made the improvement and retained the property, it would get into politics. Let me take these objections up in their order.

1. The taxation claim is a myth. In the first place, private parties never will develop some of the power sites on the Tennessee River. I believe Dam No. 3 is an instance. They will pick out only the cream and, as far as they are able to control the Federal Power Commission, they will run each plant independent of any other. If the Government had owned it all and developed it all, it would have been done in a scientific, systematic way, and in the location of any dam reference would have been had to the entire system rather than to the power that might be developed at any particular point. Every scientific engineer knows that this is the only way to get the maximum amount of power for the minimum amount of expense, and it follows that if left to "private initiative," that much-beloved phrase of the Power Trust, there never will be the maximum development that ought to take place—hence the amount of the tax that will actually be paid by private parties is very much overestimated.

But in a broader sense, the owners of private utilities are not taxpayers. They are only tax collectors. They push the burden onto the consumer every time, and the man in the home, the man in the factory, pays every cent of the tax. Not only are they simply tax collectors but they charge an enormous rate for this service. They tax the consumer more for collection purposes than the tax itself amounts to. This statement is borne out by the facts in every public utility proposition from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

A STRIKING CONTRAST

During the year 1924 the city of Los Angeles was supplied with electricity and with water by the municipality. The city of San Francisco, during the same year, was supplied with electricity and with water by private corporations. These cities were practically the same in population. One was downtrodden with the awful "Government in business" proposition. The other was sitting supreme and happy under the management of private initiative. A comparison between the prices which the consumers in these cities paid is wonderfully illuminating. It was shown before the Committee on Agriculture of the Senate that during that year the people of San Francisco paid for water and electricity a sum that exceeded the amount paid for water and electricity by the people of Los Angeles by more than the entire tax for municipal purposes in Los Angeles. The people of Los Angeles, in that year alone, saved more than $12,000,000 through the instrumentality of their municipality-owned water and electric plant. While this showing is remarkable, it must be borne in mind that Los Angeles had a very expensive system of water supply. The city brought its water across the mountains for more than 250 miles, while in San Francisco the private companies had no such expense. They supplied the people there with water that was pumped in the immediate vicinity of the city. It must be remembered, also, that Los Angeles was not hooked up with a superpower system. The generation of her electricity is more than double the price that electricity would be throughout the South if a proper superpower system, operated without manipulation and without profit, were installed.

KEEPING OUT OF POLITICS

2. Would Government operation of such a system as I have above outlined get the entire matter into politics? Let me say first that the entire matter is already in politics. It has always been in politics. Every privately owned public utility in the world is actively engaged in politics. The Power Trust mixes into politics in the election of a board of aldermen in the smallest village in the country. It is in politics in the election of every governor. It is in politics in the election of every Member of the House of Representatives and every Senator. It contributes liberally in every presidential campaign. And it never expends a cent but what it expects to get back, and actually does get back with enormous profit on the investment.

In the recent fight over the Boulder Dam bill in the Senate, it is estimated that the Power Trust spent more than $200,000. Telegrams came to many Senators by the hundreds and from States that are 2,000 miles away from the site of Boulder Dam. They came from representatives of the Power Trust in little hamlets in Iowa, in Nebraska, in Kansas, and when these men talk about getting the matter into politics they are only afraid that it will get out of politics. From my study of the question, I believe the only way to take the public utility matter out of politics is to take it over by the Government, either of the Nation, the State, or the municipality.

THE PEOPLE'S MONEY

The bill that was pending in the Senate and which lacked only a few votes of passing had a provision in it which, it was agreed by practically all those who have studied it, would have completely and effectively taken the entire matter out of the domain of the political arena.

What we need, therefore, is to take these matters out of politics. It is a business matter entirely. To take them out of politics we must take them away from those who are themselves in politics clear up to their necks. The Power Trust never sleeps. It has its highly paid attorneys and experts, like an army, covering the entire country. Every municipal body of aldermen, every State legislature, and every Congress, are all importuned by these high-salaried men to pull their chestnuts out of the fire. If they paid their own bills—if they met their own expenses, I would not so bitterly complain. But every cent they spend, every time they deceive or bribe a public official, is all collected from the very men whose property they are wrongfully taking away and whom they are attempting to deceive.

In addition to this army, the Power Trust has employed numberless publicity experts. They are men of great ability and who command the highest of salaries. They write newspaper articles and editorials. They write magazine articles, and they write books based upon false theories and deceptive propaganda. Sometimes directly, but more often indirectly, they control the owners and publishers of magazines and newspapers. They spread their literature, based upon half truths, over the country, through the various news agencies, in order to create a public sentiment in favor of their ownership and operation of the people's property. But again they charge up the enormous expense of their deceptive practices and collect it out of the very people whom they have deceived.

A CANADIAN EXAMPLE

The greatest illustration in the world of a publicly owned and operated superpower system is in existence in the Province of Ontario, Canada. A publicly owned corporation generates and distributes electricity to the municipalities and to many of the farmers of that Province at actual cost. They have been in operation nearly 20 years, and they have shown results that startle the imagination. They have to fight against the same influences that have brought about the defeat of public ownership and distribution of electricity from the Tennessee River.

During the last year more than 80 per cent of the domestic consumers of Ontario paid less than 2 cents per kilowatt-hour for their electricity. More than 80 per cent of the commercial consumers of electricity paid less than 3 cents a kilowatt-hour, and more than 70 per cent of the power users paid less than $25 per horsepower per year. During the last year the domestic consumers of electricity in the United States paid an average of 7½ cents per kilowatt-hour, and during that same time the domestic consumers of electricity in Ontario, Canada, paid 1.85 cents per kilowatt-hour. If the people in our country had paid the same price during the last year for electricity that was charged by the publicly owned system in Ontario, they would have saved on their electric-light bills more than $600,000,000.

I hold in my hand as I write the bill of Mrs. J. Cullom, who lives at 250 Victoria Avenue, Toronto, Canada, for electricity for one month in the year 1922. Mrs. Cullom is the wife of a laboring man. Her home is a modest one of eight rooms, and yet for the month mentioned there was consumed in that home 334 kilowatt-hours of electricity. The amount so consumed is startling to every American citizen. The ordinary house of eight rooms in our country will consume, on an average, about 50, and very seldom more than 60, kilowatt-hours in a month. The amount consumed will, of course, depend upon the electrical appliances in the home, and this in turn, for all ordinary people at least, depends in the main upon the price of the electricity. But Mrs. Cullom had in her home nearly every electrical appliance known to science. She swept the floors by electricity. She cooked all of her meals the year round upon an electric stove. She washed by electricity, she ironed by electricity, she had twice as many electric lights in that eight-room cottage as is usually found in similar cottages in the United States. She heated the water for the kitchen and bath by electricity. In fact, she had in her home what ought to be in the home of every citizen throughout the South. She paid a price that is no more than ought to be paid by every home owner in the South, and no more than would be paid if the natural resources were properly developed and properly managed. Her bill for electricity for that month was $3.55.

This was not only a great convenience but it was a saving of money. If Mrs. Cullom had lived at that time in the city of Washington, the Capital of our Nation, her bill for the same amount of electricity would have been $23.18. If Mrs. Cullom had lived in Birmingham, Ala., she would have had to pay more than $32. If she had lived in Nashville, Tenn., she would have paid in excess of $40 for this same amount of electricity, and if she had lived in some of the towns of Florida she would have paid in the neighborhood of $60—but if she had lived in the States named she would have had the blessed satisfaction of knowing that some private corporation connected with the Electric Trust in Wall Street would have been the recipient of a large share of her contribution. This blessing was denied Mrs. Cullom. It is not denied to the great majority of women who live in the sunny South and who have the benefit of "private initiative."

And it must be remembered that in all the Canadian rates I have given there is an amortization fee. That is, there is included in the prices a fee which in 30 years will pay off the entire invested capital. So that the rates are not only paying interest on the money invested in the development, not only paying for the expense of operation and depreciation, but they are likewise paying a fee that in 30 years will leave them with nothing to pay except the expense of maintenance and operation.

In our country, who ever heard of a private utility company amortizing its capital? Instead of reducing the capital on which consumers are expected to pay interest, the clamor and the practice always is to increase it to the limit and to take advantage of every excuse and every opportunity, either fairly or unfairly, to increase capitalization and thus indirectly increase profits.

CHEAP POWER FOR FARMERS

And the Province of Ontario has not forgotten the farmer. To begin with, it must be admitted that it costs more to get electricity to the farmer than it does to the home in the city. This comes about because of the extra cost of distribution. There may be even less than a dozen farmers to a mile of transmission line, but in the city there are several dozen in every block.

The farmers of Ontario, when they saw what wonderful things were happening in the municipalities in the way of cheap electricity, demanded that they be supplied with this modern element of efficiency, and the Provincial legislature passed a law supplying the system to the farmers. They are getting their electricity at cost—the same as the people of the village and the city. The rural lines are built upon the same theory and the same principle applies to all alike.

The only difference is that the Legislature of Ontario, realizing the additional expense involved in supplying the farmer with electricity and also being anxious, as every legislature in our country is anxious, to relieve the burdens of agriculture, provided by law that for rural lines, owned by farmers, there should be paid out of the treasury one-half of the construction cost of the transmission lines carrying electricity to the farmer organizations. I mention this because some of the propagandists have seized upon this proposition to circulate through the United States the report that the production and distribution of electricity in Canada is subsidized from public funds. At a hearing before the Senate Committee on Agriculture one of the professors of the State University of Tennessee made this assertion. He made it undoubtedly with perfectly honest intentions, and yet he was entirely mistaken in his assertion.

There is no municipal consumer in Ontario that has ever been relieved by a single penny from public funds. The interest on the bonds and the entire cost of the operation have been paid by those who consume electricity. Not one cent has the taxpayer ever paid outside of the exception that I have mentioned, which goes entirely to the benefit of agriculture and which, in my judgment, is justified in order to relieve agriculture of its extra burdens. The only thing the Province does is to lend its credit in the sale of the bonds that are floated for the installation of the various hydroelectric generating plants and the building of transmission lines. And that brings to mind another advantage that a publicly owned system has over the privately owned system—it can borrow its money for nearly half what the private corporation must pay in the way of interest, and thus the actual expense is very materially lessened.

WHAT FARMS SHOULD BE

I have before me a photograph of the farm home of Mr. B. L. Siple, a Canadian citizen who lives in Ontario. He has 79 acres in his farm, and at the time I visited him he was milking 17 cows by electricity. He filled his silo by electricity. He ground his feed by electricity. He pumped the water by electricity. Every cow in her stall had a bucket of water within her reach. When she drank the water in the bucket it was automatically filled again. Mr. Siple's barn could be lighted up throughout by the pushing of a button. His house was a beautiful modern cottage, the equal of any in our cities in America. There was running water in the kitchen and in the bathroom. Mrs. Siple cooked the year around on an electric stove. She had an electric fan in the kitchen. She washed her dishes in water that she heated by electricity. The bathroom was supplied with water heated by electricity. She did her washing, ironing, sweeping, all by electricity. In fact, she had practically all of the modern electrical conveniences known to science to-day.

The installation on this farm of this system of electricity had practically saved Mr. Siple the expense of one hired man and it saved his wife the expense of a hired girl. He paid for the entire facilities for the year in which I visited him $115.49. Like the city man, he paid an amortization fee and also included in this bill an item which, in 30 years, will pay off the entire capital stock, including the construction of the transmission lines.

Who is there under our flag that would not like to see this condition applied to the American farmer? If the South were to avail itself of the opportunities that are within its reach the time would soon be here when every toiler in the fields throughout the South would have the same advantage possessed by this farmer brother in the North.

IMPRACTICAL FOR NITRATE

In connection with Muscle Shoals there remains for discussion the question of fertilizer. When the original act providing for the development of Muscle Shoals was passed, there were two provisions contained in it that were mandatory. It was provided that all the improvement made at Government expense at Muscle Shoals should forever be operated by the Government, and that the property should not be sold or leased for operation to private parties. It was likewise provided that in time of peace the power developed on the Tennessee River at the Government dam should be used in the extraction of nitrogen from the atmosphere for the purpose of manufacturing fertilizer for agriculture.

Those who are continually harping against Government operation are always calling attention to that part of the original act which says that in time of peace we shall use the power for the manufacture of fertilizer. They never say anything about that provision of the law which says that the property shall never be sold or leased for operation by private parties.

At the time this law was passed, it was believed by practically everybody that by the use of cheap power we would be able to extract nitrogen from the air at a price that would materially reduce the cost of fertilizer to the farmer.

Originally nitrogen was extracted from the atmosphere by what was known as the arc process. It required a great deal of cheap power. Later on, the cyanamid method was discovered, requiring much less power. That was about the condition of the knowledge possessed in America at the time of the breaking out of the World War. It was known that the Germans had invented an improvement over the cyanamid process, known as the Haber process, but the details were not understood by the American scientists at the time of the construction of the plant at Muscle Shoals. The cyanamid process was well understood. Its possibilities were definitely known, and so the Government provided for a large plant at Muscle Shoals, known as nitrate plant No. 2, capable of extracting 40,000 tons of nitrogen from the atmosphere in a year. Our experts thought that there was a fair possibility of their being able to construct a plant that would extract nitrogen from the air by the Haber process, but they were not certain of it, and so it was decided to construct a nitrate plant somewhat experimental in its nature, known as nitrate plant No. 1, which was designed to extract nitrogen from the atmosphere by means of the Haber process. But our scientific advisers were mistaken as to many of the elements included in the Haber process, and so that plant, as far as the machinery was concerned, was a total loss. The building can be used for other purposes. It is modern, well constructed, and supplied with a steam plant of about 5,000 horsepower which is modern in every way.

When the war ended, scientists soon learned what the Germans knew and which they had greatly improved during the war, and it was then possible to construct a plant along more modern lines. From that day to this, scientific men have improved the Haber process. In every improvement made less and less power was used until at the present time it is definitely known that in the construction of up-to-date plants to extract nitrogen from the air, water power will not be used. Instead of locating a nitrate plant in the vicinity of water power, anyone designing such a plant to-day would locate it with a view of getting cheap coal instead of cheap power. With this knowledge no efficient government or private corporation would think of using water power for the purpose of extracting nitrogen from the air. In every case coal is used, because it is more profitable to utilize the by-product of coal than it is to use water power for the comparatively small amount of power that is necessary. Private parties in our own country using nitrogen for commercial purposes have, since the war, constructed a number of comparatively large plants for the extraction of nitrogen from the atmosphere, and in no case are they using water power.

Why, therefore, is it that the country has been faced with this wonderful propaganda to deceive the farmers of America by asking them to insist that the Congress shall use Dam No. 2 to get nitrogen from the air? We can use Dam No. 2 and nitrate plant No. 2 and get 40,000 tons of nitrates from the atmosphere every year, but it will be at a cost that, if put into fertilizer, will make it impossible to sell the fertilizer as cheaply as it can be bought to-day upon the market.

There have been two classes that have been instrumental in bringing about this propaganda. One is the political demagogue who wants the farmer's vote and cries aloud that this should be done in the name of American agriculture. The other is a class of people who are either directly or indirectly representatives of the Power Trust. If they can not have the power themselves, they would like to have the Government use it for some unprofitable, unscientific business so as to keep the power out of competition and let them continue their stranglehold which they now have upon the people of the country.

WHAT IS THE ANSWER?

Under these circumstances, what is the sensible thing to do? All honest citizens who have studied the subject want to cheapen the price of fertilizer. It is important to every consumer of food, and the importance of it is increasing every day in the year. What we want is to develop a system that will cheapen the production of fertilizer, and when that system is developed throw it open to anybody who wants to go into the business. Therefore the cheapening process can very properly be done by the Government itself. It is a proper governmental function, not for the benefit of the farmer alone but for the benefit of all the consumers of our country. The Government has done wonderfully well in this field up to the present time. Since the war improvements made by our own Government officials in the fixed-nitrogen research laboratory have cut the cost of the production of nitrogen practically in half.

It is quite immaterial whether we take the profit from the sale of water power and use it to improve the manufacture of fertilizer or whether we appropriate the money directly from the Treasury for that purpose. In either case it is the use of governmental funds and is entirely justified. It is not at all inappropriate, since we have conceded this great improvement at Muscle Shoals to be dedicated to agriculture in time of peace, that we should use the money we receive for the building of experimental plants for the manufacture of fertilizer; and when the Government builds these plants it ought to do just the same as a private party would do; that is, build a plant that is the most modern and most efficient known. It would be foolish to go back and use a system that is already outlawed and known to be out of date and inefficient.

EXPENSIVE TO SHIP

One of the difficulties with fertilizer is that more than 80 per cent of the contents is simply dirt, used as a mixer, and therefore the freight is one of the big items in the cost. This means that you could not ship fertilizer produced at Muscle Shoals, even if you eliminated the cost entirely, into Missouri or Nebraska and sell it at a reasonable price. The freight alone would make it prohibitive. If by improving the manufacture of fertilizer we can do away with the mixture of worthless material and use the fertilizer in a concentrated form, much of this objection would disappear. There are many other lines besides the reduction of the cost of the nitrate content of fertilizer in which the Government could well experiment with a view of cheapening the process.

None of those who voted against turning Dam No. 2 over to the Power Trust has ever objected to the widest and most liberal program devised to improve and cheapen the cost of fertilizer. In fact, those of us who have thus contended have been the friends of the farmer and have tried, so far in vain, to divide this question into its elemental parts and clear it of the deception and the misunderstanding that many honest people have with reference to it. The delay in experimentation and the cheapening of fertilizer production can be charged directly to those who have foolishly and stubbornly stood in the way of a proper settlement of this Muscle Shoals question. The special interests have been engaged from the very beginning in an untruthful and unfair propaganda to deceive and to fool the American farmer, when, as a matter of fact, they themselves constitute the principal barrier between agriculture and cheap fertilizer.

I believe that the time is not far distant when the American farmer will realize where his interest lies, and when the American consumer will likewise realize that his interest and the interest of the farmer are identical. Let us hope, therefore, that the time will soon come when we can truthfully say to this deceived and misled but honest citizenship, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth will set you free."

ARTICLE ON "PAPER WEIGHTS AND MEMORIES," BY FORMER GOVERNOR HEYWARD, OF SOUTH CAROLINA, AND AN ARTICLE FROM THE WASHINGTON STAR

Mr. BLEASE. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by former Gov. Duncan Clinch Heyward, of South Carolina, and an article from yesterday's Washington Star, and at the same time to present to you a paper weight in the form of a railroad train which was sent to me at my request by President Harrison, of the Southern Railway, to be presented to you.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ARTICLE BY GOVERNOR HEYWARD

I am rich in paper weights which now lie on my desk as I write. That is to say, I have two paper weights which are rich in historic value. One of these weights is very plain and simple, of bottle green glass. For years it was used by Gen. Robert E. Lee, and if it could but speak it would be able to tell many interesting stories. General Lee used it in his tent during the Confederate War to keep the Virginia breezes, blowing over its now famous battle fields, from carrying away his army orders and other papers. After his death the weight was used by his eldest son, Gen. G. W. C. Lee, who, when he retired from the presidency of Washington and Lee University, gave it to me, and on a card wrote its history.

The other paper weight, of gun metal, was kindly sent me only a short time ago by another Virginian, Mr. Fairfax Harrison, president of the Southern Railway. It is a facsimile in miniature of the first engine and train which operated on what at that time—nearly 100 years ago—was the first long railroad line in the world. Though the engine was very small and very crude and the cars likewise, it was the genesis of the great railroad development of the United States. The construction of this railroad and the running of this train was an event in the history of our country second only in importance perhaps to the establishment of the Republic. It should make South Carolinians very proud to remember that every mile of that early railroad lay entirely within the confines of their State, and every dollar with which it was built was subscribed in South Carolina, principally by the city of Charleston.

The Charleston & Hamburg Railroad, as it was first called, began operating a train on Christmas day, 1830, and within three years the entire line of 136 miles from Charleston to Hamburg, on the Savannah River, opposite Augusta, Ga., was completed. It is true that the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad had commenced the construction of its road a short time before the South Carolina railroad began to build, but had built only 6 miles. It made such slow progress that when our road was completed to Hamburg only 70 miles of its line from Baltimore was constructed and in operation.

The little engine of my paper weight, named the "Best Friend," which pulled the first train of cars from Line Street in Charleston, had the distinction of being the first practical locomotive built in this country. It was designed by a Charleston man, E. L. Miller, and built at the West Point Foundry in New York City. Not until 18 months later did the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad have a regular locomotive in operation.

I have seen an old picture of the "Best Friend" pulling this first train on the Charleston & Hamburg Railroad and, with one exception, my paper weight is identical with this picture, and that exception is this: The tender of the "Best Friend" on the paper weight is heaped up with cordwood and carries also three barrels of water for the boiler, whereas in the picture a small cannon and three soldiers with high top hats, one waving a United States flag, ride on the tender. This difference first puzzled me, but I have since learned that January 15, 1831, an excursion trip was made from Charleston, carrying passengers. Of course this was a great occasion, and hence the soldiers, the cannon, and the waving flag.

On the return trip the train must have backed into Charleston, for the railroad had only one engine, and if so, it probably made equally as fast time as when it went forward, for that day it had the wind with it. The old picture shows black smoke pouring out of the smokestack, and the direction the smoke takes and also that of the outstretched flag shows that a strong northwesterly wind was blowing. No doubt the picture represents the little train just as it stood at Line Street on that gala day.

It is very interesting to contrast this little engine of nearly a century ago with one of the great locomotives used on our railroads to-day.

In the facsimile of the "Best Friend" the engineer stands on the front of the engine and controls the valve motion of his engine by hand. Both engineer and fireman are exposed to the weather, for the cab had not then come into use. The fireman is shown standing in front of the upright boiler. Besides feeding fuel into the furnace under the boiler, it was evidently his job to control the steam pressure by an old type safety valve which had a long lever, and by moving this back and forth its weight caused variation in steam to any amount at the time required. The engine transmitted its power to the front wheel by inside connecting rods, and these wheels transmitted the power to the rear wheels by connecting rods very similar to those in use on our present-day locomotives. The "Best Friend" was of such construction and steaming capacity that it was necessary to get a full head of steam on the boiler and run the engine until this was exhausted and then get up another head of steam and start out again. The steam capacity of the boiler had therefore to be carefully considered in making up the schedules of the early trains.

The "Best Friend" carried no cowcatcher. Perhaps one was not necessary, for the cattle in the low country those days were small, scrawny, and very agile, and no doubt could outrun the train. Neither did it carry a bell or whistle. The omission of the latter, I am quite sure, was a mistake, and also a great misfortune to the people of Charleston, for I well recall that when the first railroad was built to Walterboro, my old home, every morning a half hour before leaving time the engineer blew a five-minute blast on his whistle, which not only aroused the citizens but woke them with the happy consciousness that at last they had a railroad. Those of us who daily took the train used to consider this blast of the whistle a most considerate attention on the part of the railroad company, for it removed the necessity of our trying to stay awake for hours to keep the alarm clock from going off and waking up the children.

To the foresight, the energy, and the business ability of the leading men of Charleston is due the credit of undertaking the building of the Charleston & Hamburg Railroad. They were the pioneer railroad builders of the world. Even in those early times they had a great vision. They knew that the Almighty had given them the finest harbor between New York and New Orleans, and they realized that to build up their city and State they must have exports as well as imports; that a commerce which was one-sided could not expand. They saw, too, that Charleston was the natural port which the then increasing products of the West should seek, and through which they should be carried to the markets of the world. The building of this railroad heading toward the sunset was the first step they took to make their dream of Charleston, the chief seaport on the South Atlantic, a reality.

The little town of Hamburg was never their ultimate goal. Their conception was a great system of railroads which should connect the trade of the Ohio River with the great valley of the Tennessee, and thence through the Southern States, and its outlet to Europe through the port of Charleston. This vision of the men of Charleston was soon caught by the people of Georgia, and immediately upon the completion of the South Carolina railroad, the Georgia Railroad, from Augusta to Atlanta, was chartered and soon completed. Other connecting lines of railroad still leading westward toward the Ohio were shortly under construction, and the South was leading all other sections of the country in railroad building, until in 1857 the Memphis & Charleston Railroad was completed, and the dream of Charleston seemed to have come true.

From all accounts there must have been great rejoicing in the city of Charleston when they learned that the last spike in this railroad had been driven. I believe that if ever the staid, dignified citizens of that city might have been disposed to follow the shocking suggestion made several years ago by a newly acquired go-getting secretary of their chamber of commerce that "promptly on the stroke of 12 o'clock they should with one accord rush from their offices and homes, and with a "Hip! Hip! Hurrah!" give three cheers for Charleston, it would have been on that eventful day.

But all the cheering and rejoicing was not confined to Charleston; Memphis also cheered and rejoiced, and insisted that the council of Charleston, and as many of its prominent citizens as could come, should journey by rail to Memphis, and that there should be a great joint celebration. They went—the entire council, headed by the mayor, together with 112 of Charleston's most prominent citizens.

The Charlestonians took with them on this occasion 50 members of the old Phoenix fire company and their famous engine, the "Old Betsy." They carried also two hogshead of water from the Atlantic, which with "Old Betsy" figured prominently in the celebration. A most interesting article in the Sunday News of Charleston, written by William G. Mazyck, gives an account of the royal manner in which the people of Tennessee treated the Charlestonians on their arrival. The whole city turned out to extend a welcome. Thousands came from several States. There was cannon firing galore, and the enthusiasm was unbounded.

There was also a great parade in which the Phoenix fire company held the post of honor, and there was a splendid "dress ball." During the day a unique ceremony was held, in which "Old Betsy" played a conspicuous part. In the presence of thousands a command was given, the Charleston firemen got into action, and "Old Betsy" got busy with the hogsheads of water which they had brought. As an account written at the time says: "Soon the pellucid water of the Atlantic rose from our pipe, like a jet from a fountain, high into mid-air, and fell in sparkling drops, a shower of diamonds, into the bosom of the turbid and majestic Mississippi, amid the deafening shouts of the assembled multitude." Then it was that Mayor Douglas, of Memphis, placed a gold ring on the finger of Mayor Miles, of Charleston, and solemnly pronounced, "What this great people hath joined together let nothing put asunder."

The festivities wound up with a most magnificent banquet, which, judging from the menu, "printed on dainty lace-edged paper," must have taken the guests as long to dispose of as it had taken them to make the trip from Charleston. If such a dinner were given in New York these days, it would cost nearly as much as it cost the Memphis & Charleston Railroad to build its line. And the "Best Friend" started it all.

At that time the hopes of Charleston and the South ran high. They were leading in the industrial development of the Nation, but in four years came secession, and their hopes of industrial supremacy vanished amid the smoke of contending armies. The war ending, the South was prostrate. It was conquered territory and was long treated as such. The years of war had brought, among other things, a startling change in the value of its property. When the war commenced the South owned nearly 40 per cent of the entire value of property in the United States, and five years after the war ended they owned scarcely 15 per cent. It is hard for us to realize to-day that in 1860 the South in the value of its property exceeded New England and the Middle States combined.

But the dream of the bold railroad builders of the old South, their far-seeing plans for the expansion of commerce through their ports, was not destroyed but only retarded by the war and is now year by year being realized. Great railroad systems to-day traverse the South's entire territory, and the products of its fields and mines, together with the greatly increasing output of manufactories, find ready transportation to the markets. The railroad over which the "Best Friend" pulled its little train nearly 100 years ago is now a part of the Southern Railway, one of the greatest railroad systems of these times, and one whose every effort from its organization has been to upbuild that section of our common country whose name it has adopted as its own.

[From the Sunday Star, Washington, D. C., December 18, 1927]

CAPITAL SIDE LIGHTS

With the "triangle purchase bill" coming up for consideration in the House to-morrow, which includes authority to acquire the site of the Southern Railway Building, comes a reminder, through the gift of a paper weight to Vice President Dawes, that the pioneer line of the Southern Railway is approaching its centenary. This paper weight was presented by Fairfax Harrison, president of the Southern Railway, with Senator COLE BLEASE making the speech.

It is a gun-metal facsimile in miniature of the first engine and train that operated on what, at that time, nearly 100 years ago, was the first long railroad line in the world. Though the engine was very small and very crude and the cars likewise, it was the genesis of the great railroad development of the United States. ALLEGED MEXICAN PROPAGANDA—PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS

Mr. HOWELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an open letter by my colleague, the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], to William R. Hearst, which I send to the desk, be read by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

AN OPEN LETTER FROM SENATOR NORRIS TO WILLIAM R. HEARST

To William Randolph Hearst:

A fair analysis of the recent articles published in the Hearst papers showing an alleged attempt by Mexican officials to bribe United States Senators and editors of various publications, and an analysis of your testimony before the Senate committee, leads to the inevitable conclusion that you are not only unfair and dishonest but that you are entirely without honor.

These articles show, on their face, a constant attempt to draw conclusions not justified from the articles themselves, and to practice deception upon the American people.

It is not necessary to consider any other evidence in order to reach the fair conclusion that in them you are making an attempt not only to besmirch the character of some of our own officials and journalists but that you are trying to excite an animosity and a hatred on the part of our people against the Mexican Government, which, if your articles and alleged official documents were true, would inevitably lead to war between the two countries.

Your attempt to shield yourself from blame by not publishing the names of the four Senators and the editors alleged to be implicated, when properly analyzed, only shows the maliciousness of your attack and adds to the dishonor of your motive. You publish the alleged official documents with the names omitted and, at the same time, state that you stand ready and willing to deliver the original documents to any Senate committee that may be appointed to make an investigation.

You know that the publication of these charges, with the names omitted, must inevitably lead to the appointment of an investigating committee, and that, therefore, the names which you have concealed were bound to be published and that, in fact, the very withholding of the names added to the curiosity and to the interest of an investigation.

WHY THE NAMES WERE OMITTED

You knew, therefore, to begin with, that the action you had taken would bring about the publication of the names and you can not, in ordinary honesty, shield yourself or excuse yourself for the failure to give publicity to the names in the beginning.

Moreover, if these allegations are true, there is no reason why the identity of the individual Senators should be suppressed.

Your testimony shows the reason why you suppressed them. You testified, in part, as follows:

Q. Did you investigate whether money had been actually paid to United States Senators?

A. No, sir; we didn't.

Q. Did you go to the Senators mentioned and ask them?

A. No; we could not without revealing the contents.

Q. Have you any evidence that any Senator received any such money as mentioned here?

A. No. In fact, I do not believe they did receive any money.

Q. Have you ever heard of any evidence to sustain such a charge?

A. No; I do not believe the charge. * * *

Q. Did you consider the liabilities for the libel you might be subjected to?

A. Yes; I guess so.

Q. You had that liability in mind when you did not use the names?

A. Probably.

THE HERALD'S HEADLINE

If you wanted to be perfectly honest with these Senators, why did you not state when the articles were published that you had no evidence that any of these Senators were guilty, and that you did not believe any of the charges against them? You gave no such intimation to the country until you were faced with the question on the witness stand. In fact, on December 9, 1927, when the Hearst papers first published this alleged order giving the money to four United States Senators, there was spread clear across the front page of the Washington Herald this remarkable statement:

"$1,215,000 ORDERED PAID TO FOUR SENATORS BY MEXICO."

You have admitted before the committee that, in your judgment, the Senators were entirely innocent. Why, then, did you permit your papers to publish such misleading and damaging headlines and why were you silent during all the time from December 9 until you appeared on the witness stand on December 15?

PROVES LACK OF CONFIDENCE

The real reason why you pursued this course was to save yourself from a libel suit, and the fact that you took this course shows that you, yourself, did not have confidence in the genuineness of the documents you were publishing, because, if they were genuine, you ran no risk in their publication. Your admission that in taking this course you had in mind the saving of yourself from damages in a libel suit is an admission that you believed, yourself, that these alleged official documents were forgeries.

You must have known what was common knowledge among the newspaper men of the United States that many alleged official documents from Mexico were being offered for sale to all kinds of organizations and to all sorts of publications.

COMMON AS BOOTLEGGERS

There is not a newspaper man in the city of Washington but has not known for the past year that it was possible to buy forged documents relating to the Mexican Government.

Peddlers of this kind of merchandise were almost as common as bootleggers.

Dealers in this kind of junk were always trying to take advantage of some feeling that existed between different factions in our country and these document dope dealers had a remedy for every condition. They could supply the Ku-Klux Klan with documents showing that the Catholics had arms and munitions hidden in cellars ready to be brought out to exterminate the Protestants. They were likewise able to supply the Catholics with documents showing various activities of the Ku-Klux Klan in gathering together arms and munitions to be carried into Mexico and there used in a contemplated revolution.

HEARTLESS MALICE

To charge you with ignorance of this condition is to ascribe to you a stupidity that would be equaled only by your heartless malice in trying to wreck the good names of officials both in Mexico and in America in order to carry out some scheme of your own.

Your own newspapers about two years ago exposed the fact that our State Department had been offered and had accepted forged Mexican documents. You knew that if your alleged documents were genuine our Department of State would have made a thorough investigation, and that they would not have been rejected by the President of the United States when they were submitted to him, as you say in your testimony they were.

On the 14th day of November, 1927, the Hearst papers, among other things, contained the following reference to the alleged documents:

"The documents which will be published in the American were therefore brought to this country by these officials intimately connected with the Mexican Government and were delivered to the Hearst publications merely because these officials realized that in this manner they would secure the widest publication of the facts contained in these Government files. * * * There is no question of the authenticity of these documents as records of the Government of Mexico."

AN ABSOLUTE FALSEHOOD

You were attempting then to deceive the people of the United States.

This statement, as shown by your own testimony before the committee, is an absolute falsehood.

You knew when this statement was published that instead of these Mexican officials being moved by some patriotic motive of their own, with a desire to get publication for this alleged corruption in the Mexican Government, that they were, in fact, only influenced by cold cash which you were willing to contribute and which you say in your own testimony you did contribute. Instead of the documents being brought to this country by patriotic Mexican officials, they were sold for cash to your agents.

ADMITTED IT TO COMMITTEE

You knew it when this article was published.

You have admitted it on the witness stand. The only object these alleged officials of Mexico had was to make money out of the transaction, and you confess that you paid them between $15,000 and $16,000 for their treachery to their own country.

And when the Hearst papers published, in this same article, that there was no question about the authenticity of these documents, every man connected with your publication, including yourself, knew that the statement was false. You knew that there was a question as to their authenticity, and that if you had pursued the ordinary course that any honest man would take before he blackens the fair names of his fellow men, you would have reached the conclusion that they were absolutely false. And yet, on the 20th day of November, 1927, the Hearst papers published, among other things, the following:

"This documentary proof which the American will continue to publish in consecutive form for some days was obtained from the most secret files of the Mexican Government by officials of that Government. These men were firmly opposed to the Bolshevist policy of their Government and patriotically concerned lest this Russian brand of Bolshevism should eventually destroy their country and wreck the peace and happiness of their people. * * * The revelation of the amazing facts contained in the documents, the Mexican officials hope, might result in ultimate good to their country."

MOVED ONLY BY MONEY

You knew this statement was false when it was published, and its only object could have been to deceive the American people and to try to convince them of the genuineness of the proof which you were offering.

You knew these papers had been brought to this country, not through any patriotic motive, but that they were sold outright for cash to the Hearst papers, and you had at that time contributed the money to make the payment. You knew that these alleged Mexican officials were moved only by the money which you were so willing to contribute.

COULD HAVE QUESTIONED ACCUSED

How easy it would have been for you or one of your numerous hirelings to have ascertained the truth in regard to these documents. In one of them it was alleged, for instance, that Dudley Field Malone, a man known internationally, was the go-between—the cashier, as it were—who received the money from the so-called Mexican traders and delivered it to the four Senators named. How easy it would have been for you or the editor of your New York American to have called Mr. Malone on the telephone. All of your editors knew the high character and standing of Mr. Malone. You could have found out in a few minutes whether this alleged statement regarding him was true, and if he had told you, as he has since testified, that he knew nothing about it, that he had nothing to do with it, you would at once have had positive proof that there was something wrong with these documents, and that no honest man could afford to give it publicity without at least making further investigation.

EXCUSE OBVIOUSLY FALSE

Before you published allegations that would blacken the names of United States Senators your representative in Washington could have called upon these Senators and gotten their version of the affair. If they denied, as they have already testified, that they had any connection whatever with this disgraceful business and knew nothing of it, you would again have had notice that any honest man would welcome that there was something wrong with this document which you purchased. And your excuse, given on the witness stand, that it would have given premature publicity to the transaction, is obviously false. You intended to give it publicity. You admitted on the stand that that was the object you had in view. You say in these articles that that was the object which the Mexican officials had in view when these documents were turned over to you.

ALL FOES OF INTERFERENCE

The ordinary observer will not cease to take notice that the four Senators mentioned were all prominent in the Senate in their opposition to interference by our Government in the affairs of Mexico. It is rather remarkable that it is only this class of Senators whose reputations are attacked. These men were standing as forcefully as they knew how against a policy in Mexico which you were in favor of.

It is likewise peculiar that Calles, the President of Mexico, would spend his hard cash to bribe Senators who were already advocating noninterference—a policy that he himself was anxious to carry out.

MR. CALLES NO IDIOT

We may disagree as to the kind of man Mr. Calles is, but even his enemies have never charged him with being an ignoramus or an idiot. If he were so corrupt and evil-minded as to use Mexican public funds to bribe United States Senators, would it not be reasonable to suppose that his attempt would be made on those Senators who were not already advocating the policy which he, himself, desired to see carried out?

Moreover, what would have been the necessity for his spreading the names of these Senators on the Mexican records? There was no reason why their names should appear there. The order for the payment of the money could just as well have been made without mentioning any names; and yet, if these documents are true, Calles, in his orders, not only mentioned the names and the amounts but the man who should be the go-between for the Senators and the Mexican officials, and he had this all spread upon the official documents of the Mexican Government where every clerk and employee having access to the governmental files would be able to trace the money to its destination—the very thing that he, if you are correct in your charges, was trying to obviate.

THE TELEGRAMS

If you had been moved by an honest motive, you would also have called upon Mr. Elias and given him an opportunity to explain. You would have made an attempt to have gotten from him permission to examine the telegrams, of which some of these documents purport to be copies. There is no doubt but that if you had taken this course he would have done what he did before the committee—given permission for the examination of all telegrams that had passed between him and the President of Mexico.

This would have disclosed what has already, in part, been disclosed before the committee—that no such telegrams passed between the parties, and now, since the representative of the telegraph company has testified, at least as to some of these official telegrams, it has been shown that they did not, in fact, exist and that such telegrams as published in the Hearst papers have, as a matter of fact, never been sent or received.

DECEIT CONTINUES

Even now, ofter this disclosure, the Hearst papers are undertaking to deceive the people of the United States as to what really was done before the committee. I have before me as I dictate, to-day's copy of a Hearst paper, the Washington Herald for Sunday, December 18, 1927. On the second page of that paper, referring to testimony taken before the Reed committee, there appears a headline, in large type, as follows: "Where are the Elias telegrams? We destroyed them."

It is true, if you read the fine print below the headline, you will be able to discover that it is a custom of the telegraph company to destroy telegrams after keeping them for one year, and the representative of the telegraph company has given that as a reason for not producing all of the telegrams called for by the committee. The facts are that all the alleged telegrams published within the year, the agent of the company has shown, were never sent. This is manifestly an attempt on the part of the Hearst papers to deceive the people as to what the real facts were.

The person reading the heading and nothing else will get the idea that Elias, the Mexican representative, was the fellow who destroyed the telegrams, and that they can not be produced because the Mexican officials have destroyed them.

JUST AN INSTANCE

This is only a demonstration of the unfairness—yes; the venom—that has run through all these articles and that is being continued after the truth is beginning to creep out. It shows a malice that can not exist in a heart that is pure or moved by lofty motives.

What is your motive, Mr. Hearst? You have testified before the committee that you have very valuable properties in Mexico. It is almost common knowledge that you were in favor of the overthrow of the present government. You evidently believed that if a revolution could be started it would mean financial benefit for your investments in Mexico. For the sake of making a few paltry dollars you are willing to blacken the character of honest journalists in your own profession. You were willing to cast suspicion upon the loyalty and the integrity of Members of the United States Senate. You were willing to charge that the President of a friendly Republic is a traitor to his country.

You were willing and apparently anxious to do something that would cause our Government to intervene in Mexico.

WILLING TO START A WAR

In other words, for the sake of your financial investments, you were not only willing to ruin the reputation of honest and innocent men but you were willing to plunge our country into war with a friendly neighbor, and thus increase the army of widows and orphans and wounded and crippled soldiers.

Because Members of the United States Senate have not followed the course that you believe they ought to pursue, you were willing to go so far as to ruin their reputations and by falsehoods drive them from public life in disgrace and dishonor. You wanted to show the power of the Hearst papers. You wanted to let it be known that any public official who did not follow your command or your wish would, by such dishonest and disreputable means, be driven from public life. You wanted to put fear into the hearts of men who were seeking public office or who were seeking reelection. You wanted them to know that the Heart papers would relentlessly pursue to the bitter end those public servants who refused to bend the knee to your unreasonable and disreputable demands. You wanted it known that you could put men out of office at your own sweet will, and that to retain office it was necessary to follow you even to the extent of plunging our country into war.

SAME VENOM ALL THE WAY

But what is the use of tracing these articles further? I have given only a few samples. The same venom and the same spirit runs through them from end to end, and if I called attention to all of the inconsistencies and to all of the falsehoods, it would require an article practically as long as your continued story that has been running for many days in your papers.

The record which you have made in this matter is sufficient to place your publications in disrepute in the minds of all honest men, and it demonstrates that the Hearst system of newspapers, spreading like a venomous web to all parts of our country, constitutes the sewer system of American journalism.

GEORGE W. NORRIS.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, as a member of the special committee of the Senate charged with the duty of investigating the statements referred to in the article just read and the documents upon which those statements were based, I feel it my duty to the Senate, to the Senators whose names are embraced in some of those documents, and to the public at large to make a brief statement now.

The special committee has not completed its investigation. Immediately after its appointment it began its work, and it has continued its labors diligently up to the present time. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED], is absent from the city; and it is not expected that the hearings will be resumed until the 27th instant.

I have no authority to speak for the committee, and I do not assume to express the opinion of any other member of the committee; but I do believe that the opinion of the committee is unanimous as to certain phases of the investigation, and it is with respect to those phases that I claim the attention of the Senate now.

To wait until after the holiday season has passed, and to leave under a cloud the name and fame of Senators who apparently are just as honorable as any Member of this body, would be an act of injustice to which I do not propose to be a party.

One who serves in public office, especially in a high public position, must anticipate that his acts, both private and public, will be under constant scrutiny; and he should prepare himself to receive with resignation condemnation for dishonorable deeds or for corrupt motives. But one who so conducts himself that he has no fear that a careful inspection of his public life will reveal aught deserving of censure is entitled to have his good name safeguarded, his honor respected; and he who is unwilling to do that, whether a Senator or a private citizen, is a coward unworthy of the name of an American.

The evidence in this case discloses conclusively that neither the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], nor the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], nor the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], nor the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] has received one dollar or has been tendered one cent in connection with the purposes referred to in the documents at issue.

All who are concerned in finding the truth concede that these Senators stand uncorrupted and incorruptible. Not only does the testimony show conclusively the fact that I have just stated, but it also discloses that not one of them has ever been approached in any matter in connection with improper considerations respecting Mexican affairs. And as your deputy, your agent, charged with a mission from you, I am proud in this presence to reach out my hand to every one of these four men, to put my arm around each of them, and to say, "I am happy to call you friend."

Hearst's sin is not so much that he inconsiderately published documents involving the names and honor of Senators who were guiltless, but that he fails now through his agencies of publicity to undo in part the wrong that he has done. It takes years to build a reputation that will stand the constant beat of the white light of publicity. One who accomplishes that aim has achieved something worth while, something that is valuable beyond price.

There are sufficient incidents founded in fact to threaten the public confidence in some of the former officers of this Government. Whenever the public believes that the men who serve them are corrupt, that opinion will reflect itself in revolution, in processes of destruction. It is right and proper that they who violate their honor and receive considerations for service, considerations of even a questionable nature, should be exposed and scourged from public life. It is a pity—great God! it is a crying pity—that the great power of the Hearst newspapers has not been employed to the purification of public office where corruption is known to exist. It is a wrong which can not be characterized here that the mighty genius which has amassed millions and acquired control of publicity agencies that reach from limit to limit of this continent should seek to establish its renown by bringing or attempting to bring dishonor upon men who are known to be pure and incorruptible.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I am a very humble member of the committee of investigation that is now proceeding in the matter that has just been adverted to. When the resolution was presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] no investigation, so far as I was concerned, was either necessary or appropriate in connection with the gentlemen whose names have been mentioned, who are colleagues of ours. I never have believed, and I never would believe, that there was the slightest justification for any suggestion such as had been made respecting any one of those men, and from the instant that investigation commenced I asserted publicly in the investigation what I say now after the conclusion of the testimony respecting them, that there never was a scintilla of evidence to connect any man of the Senators who were named, or whose names were deleted in the articles, in any way, shape, form, or manner with any of the matters that were published in the various Hearst newspapers.

Not only that, sir, but these gentlemen were sufficiently known to me that I would have staked myself upon every one of them without any investigation at all. We were asked in the first place by the resolution that was presented by the Senator from Pennsylvania to investigate a single phase of the publications that had appeared. That phase was the one relating to the Senators. So well has that been spoken of by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] that I will not dilate upon it, but by every witness, from every standpoint, it has been demonstrated beyond the peradventure of doubt that there never was the slightest justification, either directly or indirectly, expressedly or impliedly, for suggesting the name of any one of the Senators who ultimately was named in the various documents produced. There never was, in my opinion, the slighest justification for printing any document which, with names deleted or otherwise, might have reflected upon any Senator of the United States.

So much for that. The committee is unanimous in its finding in that regard; but the committee is now going upon another journey. We have finished so far as these Senators are concerned, and we have reached the conclusion that has been depicted so very well, and much better than I could, by the Senator from Arkansas.

We are now proceeding as if we had the full power—for none has challenged it—to determine what these documents are; and speaking for just one member of that committee, Mr. President, I can say that we will go to the end of that investigation; and we will determine, so far as it exists in human power, just what those documents are, whether or not there is any genuineness to them, or whether or not they are forged and spurious; and, as the evidence shall determine ultimately in that regard, there is not a member of the committee but will unhesitatingly state emphatically the conclusion he shall reach.

Mr. BRUCE. Mr. President, as I, too, am a member of the committee of investigation, if I were to remain silent some invidious inference might well be drawn from the fact that I did remain silent.

I have no disposition to reflect upon Mr. Hearst or upon the Hearst press, if for no other reason because this investigation has not been completed. It is important to bear that fact in mind. How far Mr. Hearst was or was not justified in taking these steps that he did to obtain possession of those documents is a matter, it seems to me, that might much more properly and justly be determined at the conclusion of the pending investigation than now.

I will say, however, that, so far as I am concerned, I have always found it extremely difficult to set any limits to the duty of the press to make public anything and everything that affects the reputation of a public man or the standing of his Government. Suffice to say for the present that if I had any reason to believe that in the secret archives of Mexico or any other country in the world there were documents purporting to fix upon me a charge of corruption, I should not simply be content, but I should be delighted were those documents brought to the light of day while I was still living and was still in a position to face a false accusation instead of after I was dead and my lips were mute and I was no longer able to vindicate my good name.

In my judgment, as you will see from what I shall say in a moment, the publication to the world of the facts which have been elicited from witnesses in the pending investigation will have no effect but that of strengthening the high, irreproachable, unassailable reputations for personal integrity and honor enjoyed by the four Members of this body whose names have been used in connection with the case.

It is never agreeable, I hardly need say, for any public man to have his motives or his character impugned in the press or in any other way, but it is always well for us to remember what the late Emperor Joseph of Austria once observed when some friend of his said to him, "I should not care to be an emperor or a king, because I would be in perpetual danger of being assassinated." "My friend," the Emperor replied, "you forget that assassination is a part of the trade of a king." And so assassination of character can be said to be a part of the trade of a United States Senator or a Member of the House of Representatives, or of any other high Federal official.

Saying that much, I wish to add just a word expressive of my general conclusions with respect to the pending investigation, though I had no idea that there would be any occasion for me to do so this morning.

When Edmund Randolph was accused of corrupt conduct in the early history of our country as the result of what, in my judgment, was one of the basest conspiracies ever formed against an American statesman, and was acquitted by the facts, which were soon brought out, Thomas Jefferson, who was by no means partial to him, said, "I am glad that Randolph has been acquitted. All who knew him had already acquitted him."

That we can all say in the present case, for the testimony that has been taken in the pending investigation in relation to the four Senators simply confirms the confidence in which they have always been held by their brother Senators as respects their standing for personal and public integrity. Personally I differ profoundly with each one of them with regard to many public questions of the highest degree of importance. Indeed, in some respects I think that I differ from them almost more widely than I do from any other Member of the Senate. But I fully concur with all my brother Senators in thinking that they are among the most honorable, upright, and irreproachable Members of this body in point of probity and moral rectitude. They are all honorable men, all unassailably honorable men. They all belong to the category of the honest man, who is said, and truly said, to be the noblest work of God.

Though we have not completed our investigation, we have, I believe, prosecuted it far enough to be justified in declaring that there is not the least likelihood that anything whatever will hereafter be developed in it to tarnish to the slightest extent the stainless reputation for integrity which the four Senators have enjoyed. It is entirely too common a thing for the standing of Members of this body to be attacked in one way or another outside of the Senate. One happy result of the pending investigation will, I am sure, be to furnish another proof that the personal and public uprightness of the Members of this body will compare favorably with that of the Members of any other great legislative body.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, if I should say nothing my silence might be misconstrued. I did not know what Senators were involved in this investigation until it began. I have been ready for several days to report, and I felt that the committee should report before the holidays its conclusions and findings with reference to the Senators involved.

I am glad that the other members of the committee have made these statements to-day. I heartily concur in what they have said. There has not been produced a single word of evidence tending in the remotest degree to sustain the inferences or charges in the articles which have been printed. I have been satisfied all the time that there was no truth in them. The evidence shows conclusively that there is no truth in them. I felt that these Senators were entitled, not that it might be necessary, but that they were entitled to the judgment of the committee before the holidays, upon the evidence presented, that there is nothing to show them culpable in the slightest degree.

I am glad to join heartily in the encomiums bestowed upon these four Senators to-day, and to say to the Senate and to the country that there is not a single word in all the evidence taken to cast the slightest suspicion upon them or upon any Senator in this body; but, upon the contrary, the proof is clear and positive that none of these Senators has even been approached directly or indirectly in any way, shape, or form for an improper purpose or object.

THE TARIFF

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution (S. Res. 52) coming over from a previous day.

Mr. MOSES. May we have the resolution read?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 52) submitted by Mr. MCMASTER on the 15th inst., as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Senate favors an immediate lowering of tariff schedules, and tariff legislation, embodying lowered schedules, should be considered and enacted during the present session of Congress; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the House of Representatives.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MCMASTER] is not now in the Chamber, but previously this morning he indicated in conversation with me that he intended to ask to have the resolution go over without prejudice. I therefore assume to make that request in his behalf in view of his absence.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will go over.

INVESTIGATION OF PUBLIC-UTILITY CORPORATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution (S. Res. 83), submitted by Mr. WALSH of Montana, on the 17th instant, coming over from a previous day:

Resolved, That a committee of five Members of the Senate be appointed by the President thereof, and be hereby empowered and directed to inquire into and report upon: (1) The growth of the capital assets and capital liabilities of public-utility corporations supplying either electrical energy in the form of power or light, or both, however produced, or gas, natural or artificial, of corporations holding the stocks of such public-utility corporations, and of non-public-utility corporations owned or controlled by or affiliated with such holding companies; (2) the method of issuing, the price realized, or value received, the commissions or bonuses paid or received, and other pertinent facts with respect to the various security issues of all classes of corporations herein named, including the bonds and other evidences of indebtedness thereof, as well as the stocks of the same; (3) the extent to which holding companies or their stockholders control or are financially interested in financial, engineering, construction, and/or management corporations, and the relation, one to the other, of the classes of corporations last named, the holding companies and the public-utility corporations; (4) the services furnished to public-utility corporations by holding companies and/or their associated, affiliated, and/or subsidiary companies, the fees, commissions, bonuses, or other charges made therefor, and the earnings and expenses of such holding companies and their associated, affiliated, and/or subsidiary companies; and (5) the value or detriment to the public of holding companies owning the stock or otherwise controlling such public-utility corporations immediately or remotely, with the extent of such ownership or control, and particularly what legislation, if any, should be enacted by Congress to correct any abuses that may exist in the organization or operation of such holding companies.

The committee is further empowered and directed to inquire and report whether, and to what extent, such corporations or any of the officers thereof or anyone in their behalf or in behalf of any organization of which any such corporation may be a member, through the expenditure of money or through the control of the avenues of publicity have made any, and what effort to influence or control public opinion on account of municipal or public ownership of the means by which power is developed and electrical energy is generated and distributed, or to influence or control elections.

That the said committee is hereby authorized to sit and perform its duties at such times and places as it deems necessary or proper, and to require the attendance of witnesses by subpœnas or otherwise; to require the production of books, papers, and documents; and to employ counsel, experts, and other assistants and stenographers, at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page. The chairman of the committee, or any member thereof, may administer oaths to witnesses and sign subpœnas for witnesses; and every person duly summoned before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, who refuses or fails to obey the process of said committee, or appears and refuses to answer questions pertinent to said investigation, shall be punished as prescribed by law. The expenses of said investigation shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers of the committee or subcommittee signed by the chairman and approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit during the sessions or the recesses of the Senate, and until otherwise ordered by the Senate.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, as I indicated on Saturday, I shall object to that procedure. In the first place, it is entirely unusual. I dare say there is some precedent for sending a resolution of this character to two committees, but I can not now recall any. Perhaps some other Member of the Senate can.

In the second place, as I further indicated on Saturday, I see no occasion whatever for proceeding in that manner.

I took occasion, in submitting a resolution in substantially the same form at the last session, to indicate to the Senate at some length my views concerning the necessity for the inquiry. There may be other reasons not adverted to by me. But the Senate has had some six or seven months to acquaint itself with my own belief as therein expressed. If there is any opposition to the investigation which is suggested by the resolution, Senators may express themselves concerning it. I think the investigation ought to be ordered and I think the resolution should be sent without further delay to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. President, it might perhaps be appropriate at this time to remind the Senate of some of the more important and salient facts to which I invited the attention of the Senate in my address on this subject made last spring. There is now capital going into this industry to the amount of nearly one-half billion dollars a year. There are securities being issued by these corporations aggregating nearly three times that sum, or $1,500,000,000. The mergers which are taking place have given rise to widespread concern. As an appendix to my remarks made last spring there was included a table, furnished by the Electrical World, showing the appalling number of mergers and purchases made by the great group of holders of public utilities securities in operating companies. The list for the two years embraces printed pages to the number of something like 30 or 35. Rapidly the operating companies throughout the country are passing into the control of half a dozen great groups through holding companies and other devices. The attention of the country was directed to some of the perils involved in this great movement in a series of articles by Professor Ripley, of Yale, appearing something like a year ago and since published, with additions thereto, in a book by him entitled "Main Street and Wall Street."

Everybody concedes, Mr. President, that there are advantages accruing by this consolidation. Everybody realizes that the needs of the country for further development are growing and constantly increasing, that in a certain way this is a natural growth; but that it is attended by many abuses is conceded upon all hands; and the question arises as to what ought to be done, if anything ought to be done, about the matter. I shall content myself, Mr. President, at this time with simply calling attention to the demand which has come up from the country for the proposed investigation. That it is desirable, if not entirely necessary, is conceded by the industry itself, for which, I think, the Electrical World may be regarded as speaking. It does not object to an investigation; it merely wants an investigation that is not prompted by political motives, conducted by some one who has "a lightning rod" out. Its views concerning the matter are expressed in an editorial, a portion of which I should like to have read by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Although Congress will not assemble for three months, the air is already rife with rumors of contemplated legislation of interest to the electrical industry. Muscle Shoals and the Colorado River, it may be taken for granted, will come up for discussion, but whether definite action will follow only a rash prophet will predict. What is most to be feared from Washington this session, however, is the threatened investigation of electric light and power companies, and particularly holding companies, by a senatorial committee headed by Senator WALSH of Montana. Not necessarily because of any shortcomings of the electric light and power industry as a whole, for it has an admirable record, but because of the detrimental effect of the publicity on the security market.

Next year is presidential year, and there are many aspirants with lightning rods down their backs seeking to be struck. To such men publicity is like a spring of water to the parched earth. It is unfortunate that investigations of this kind may be started on whims and that the motives back of them are not always above suspicion; but if an investigation is to come, it might as well come now, when the electric light and power industry can best stand it. The findings may be an agreeable surprise or a heavy shock; yet the industry may make up its mind that the inquiry will not seek to advertise the accomplishments of electric public utilities, but, on the contrary, to distort and magnify blameworthy actions of a few to the detriment of many. Any exposures of wrongdoing will be welcome, for the industry can not purge itself too quickly of those who have not its interests, as well as those of its patrons uppermost. How to do this without hurting others, however, is the great problem. Unfortunately this is not likely to give any congressional committee much concern.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes.

Mr. FESS. A resolution on this subject was introduced at the last session and came to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, of which I was a member. Because that committee did not have any latitude to go into the matter at all, we thought it would be much better if the resolution could be referred to a committee which does have some right to go into the merits of the proposition. I am rather inclined to look upon the resolution of the Senator from Montana with some favor, recognizing, however, that there is a good deal of contingency involved in it. Such a resolution might do some good, but there might be some danger coming out of that sort of an investigation. I did hesitate, however, to report out the resolution to which I have referred without having an opportunity to give any consideration to it at all. That was the reason I had hoped that the Senator from Montana might ask to have the resolution referred to some other committee than the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am endeavoring in a feeble way to supplement what I said last spring by now giving the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate some reasons why that course ought to be taken.

Mr. President, the fear expressed by the Electrical World in the article which I have mentioned is commented upon in an editorial appearing in the Times, of Hartford, Conn., which seems to think that the investigation is very desirable. I ask that the editorial may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the Times, Hartford, Conn., November 17, 1927]

THE POWER INQUIRY

The interview which Senator THOMAS F. WALSH of Montana gave Correspondent David Lawrence regarding the proposed electric power investigation is illuminating for the light it sheds on the uncertainty which exists as to just what is going on in the power industry. That uncertainty is shared by pretty nearly all who endeavor to arrive at a sound conclusion in their own minds about the desirability or undesirability of the great number of mergers, consolidations, and holding companies.

Mr. WALSH does not charge that millions have been made illegitimately in the flotation of securities. He would like to know. So would a good many observers. He is not certain whether overcapitalization will keep rates up or dividends down, but he believes inquiry is pertinent. He does not play a lone hand in that particular either.

The Senator discussed the proposal that the electric industry does not object to investigation, but does not want to be subject to a "political inquisition." It has been said before that the industry would like to be investigated by experts. Such experts would doubtless have to be found within the industry itself. They would be far more likely to sympathize with the ambitions and undertakings of the industry than to find fault with its ambitious programs. Experts of any other point of view would not be regarded by the industry as sufficiently qualified. The country might as well have an investigation by Senator WALSH, even if the power people were inclined to brand it political, as to go through a farce destined from the outset to be a whitewash.

Those who think about the power matter at all are thinking in the very terms used by Senator WALSH. Connecticut has been experiencing exactly the sort of manipulation which is under discussion. The public utilities commission at this moment is withholding permission for a merger which if granted will enormously increase the capital structure by which the operations of two local companies are financed. It is expected that dividends will be paid on this additional capital, and there is no place to secure the funds for that purpose except out of the pockets of those who are obliged to buy gas and electricity from the companies in question. This is but a single instance. It has been multiplied many times in Connecticut. The concern which has become the power octopus of this State operates in a score or more of Commonwealths. No one who is not on the inside can tell what are the ramifications of its interlocking and relationship with similar corporations equally large or even larger. No one, comparatively speaking, knows whether this is good or bad, or the extent to which it is bad, if bad at all. Sooner or later the public interest will require that it be determined and that the electric power which is being so manipulated shall be used to let a little light in upon the complicated manipulations which are going on.

The kind of an investigation to which the electrical industry—the Insulls, the Mellons, the U. G. I.'s, and the rest—would submit willingly would not be worth the powder to give it motive force. There is an extreme probability that such an inquiry as Senator WALSH would conduct, if empowered to conduct one, would do far more good in making understandable that which now seems so needlessly and even deliberately bewildering than it possibly could do harm. A Senate inquiry is far less to be frightened at than are the manipulations taking place in the power industry.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I send to the desk an editorial printed in a newspaper published in another section of the country, the Kansas City Star, and ask that it may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[From the Kansas City Star, Tuesday, July 26, 1927]

TO DIG INTO PUBLIC-UTILITY FINANCING

Near the end of the last session of Congress Senator WALSH of Montana introduced a resolution providing for the investigation of power, light, and gas companies, with especial reference to the financing, merging, refinancing, and remerging of these public-utility concerns. A few days ago Mr. WALSH announced he would press for this investigation early in the coming session.

Senator WALSH has not indicated a line of investigation beyond the distribution of electricity and gas and the manner of financing the producing and distributing companies. We know something of the extent to which mergers have gone in these fields, how smaller companies have been absorbed and larger ones made, how the larger companies have been merged into supercompanies, and how holding companies have cornered the supercompanies until the flotations of securities has become a maze too great for the average mind to comprehend. Senator WALSH describes these holding company stocks as "staggering in amount."

To read some of these merger stories one gets the impression that the transactions are quite apart from the business of the service companies, being merely the operations of stock brokers, bankers, and promoters for their own aggrandizement. If this is true, and unquestionably it is true to some extent, then the extraneous profits made from these manipulations come from one of two sources—from the consumers, in excessive rates, or from the public for shares that may be of doubtful value unless the pyramiding process goes on, and it can not go on indefinitely.

When the Government authorizes the consolidation of railroads it does not authorize merger on merger, holding company on holding company; it centralizes the operation of the absorbed system and undertakes to make the operation of the lines more serviceable and less costly. The sole purposes are to gain efficiency and economy and in the end cheaper service. Why should power and light and gas companies have without challenge the license to make the public service primarily a stock-jobbing instrument?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask, now, that there may be read a communication which I received from the Illinois Municipal League, together with a resolution adopted by that organization.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

ILLINOIS MUNICIPAL LEAGUE,
HEADQUARTERS OFFICE,
Urbana, Ill., November 22, 1927.

Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The Illinois Municipal League has just finished its fourteenth annual convention, and among the resolutions passed was resolution No. 7, declaring in favor of your resolution proposing a Federal investigation of public-utility financing (see copy of resolution inclosed).

Inclosed is a copy of our convention program. From it you will note that the league has a total membership of 370 municipalities, with a combined population of over 5,000,000 people, or approximately 70 per cent of the population of the State of Illinois.

I would appreciate receiving at least a few extra copies of your resolution and speech on the investigation of public-utility companies. I note from the newspapers you are planning on introducing such a resolution on December 6. Perhaps it will be better to wait until this resolution and speech are printed, rather than to send us the speech and resolution of last February. There was, however, a lot of useful information in your speech of last February, and we should at least have a few extra copies of these if they are available.

With best wishes for your success in this investigation, I remain,

Cordially yours,

A. D. MCLARTY, Secretary.

Resolution of the Illinois Municipal League favoring a Federal investigation of the financial structure of public-utility companies

Be it resolved by the Illinois Municipal League in annual convention assembled at Peoria, Ill., on November 18, 1927, That the Illinois Municipal League favors the resolution of Senator THOMAS J. WALSH of Montana proposing a Federal investigation of the financial structure of public-utility companies, with a view to ascertaining the effect of such structure upon the rates of such utilities. We favor such investigation because we believe many Illinois cities are being faced with ever-increasing rates in spite of the efforts of the Illinois Commerce Commission. We believe that due to Federal constitutional protection, our local and State authorities are helpless to protect our inhabitants against unjust and extortionate rates for these great public necessities, and the League of Cities of Illinois welcomes an investigation of this subject by the Federal Government.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I also ask that there be incorporated in the RECORD a letter addressed to me by Mr. E. B. Stahlman, the editor of the Nashville Banner; and I ask that there be read from it only the initial paragraph.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

NASHVILLE BANNER,
Nashville, Tenn., November 7, 1927.

Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am sending under separate cover several matters bearing upon the power situation in this State and section which I thought might be of interest and use to you. I am very heartily in favor of the investigation into the electrical industry proposed in your resolution, and my paper will earnestly support you in that timely and patriotic service which you will render to the country.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the remainder of the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The remainder of the letter is as follows:

You have rendered the Nation your debtor in the naval reserves oil inquiry; but, important as was that service, it is scarcely comparable to that which your investigation into the power industry opens up. This question is already rapidly coming to the front, and the fight which you will make in behalf of the whole business fabric of the Nation and its political well-being which are directly concerned with the methods of the power magnates will necessarily deepen the public interest in it and the realization of the immense public stake. Let me call your attention in this connection to the editorial headed "The great new issue," which appeared in the Banner of yesterday. You will note in it my earnest indorsement of your course and purposes.

The file of articles bearing upon the recent Appalachian Power Conference held in this State is commended to your careful investigation. That conference, as you will note, was held at Chattanooga. For a long while it was camouflaged as being a spontaneous expression of the people of the South in regard to the development of their water power resources. As a matter of fact, the conference was dominated by the banded power interests of the South. The manifest purpose was to influence Congress and the Federal Power Commission upon the Muscle Shoals question and in behalf of the East Tennessee Development Co.—which is owned upon a 50–50 basis by prominent eastern power capitalists—the development company, as you may recall, being an applicant for permits covering the cream of the power resources of the Tennessee River and its tributaries.

The real selfish nature of this conference was exposed by the Banner in the editorial sent you under the caption, "That Chattanooga power rally." The articles sent to the Banner from its two staff correspondents, which we had on the ground, will show you how the power interests are working in this section. They brought employees and business and political allies from every direction. Owing to the thorough exposure by the Banner of the inner purposes of the so-called conference the resolutions which were adopted just before adjournment did not carry out the initial purpose.

I am sending copy of an address by a member of the Banner editorial staff, who was the only speaker before the Chattanooga conference attacking the program of the power magnates and the validity of the Federal water power act of 1920.

As you will see from other inclosures the Tennessee State Board of Public Utilities has taken action in regard to the conservation of the power resources of the State. I am sending you the orders which the commission has issued in that connection, not because they have an immediate and present bearing upon your inquiry but in order that you may be advised as to the movements in this State touching upon the power question.

I shall endeavor to keep you advised as to developments in this section of possible interest to you.

With assurances of high regard, I am,

Yours very truly,

E. B. STAHLMAN.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask that there be likewise incorporated in the RECORD an editorial from this paper, the Nashville Banner; and I ask that there be read only the concluding paragraph indicated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The third issue, which is of far-reaching importance, is: Shall the practice of holding companies, constituting the power companies, in pyramiding unjustified exactions from operating companies, be investigated thoroughly under the resolution which Senator WALSH of Montana will introduce in the coming Congress; and shall necessary legislation be enacted to prevent these evil practices or shall the power combine continue to exact from operating companies unjustified contributions which at last become a part of the cost of electric energy sold to consumers?

The Banner favors the Walsh resolution, to the end that all evil practices may be brought to light and all impositions on the public exposed, and that necessary legislation be enacted to put an end to such evils.

The Tennessean has been significantly silent on this issue up to this hour.

There are, of course, other collateral and subordinate questions which should, and the Banner believes will, be handled by the Tennessee commission efficiently and decided in a manner that will best serve the needs of the people of Tennessee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the entire editorial will be printed in the RECORD.

The entire editorial is as follows:

[From the Nashville Banner of November 20, 1927]

THE THREE ISSUES

There are three distinct issues involved in the development and use of the water-power resources of Tennessee.

The first question is this: Is the Federal Government clothed with constitutional authority to make disposition and to control and regulate the utilization of the water-power resources within the boundaries of Tennessee, or is that authority vested in the State government, subject only to the limited jurisdiction of the Federal Government over navigation under the interstate commerce clause of the Federal Constitution?

This issue became acute when a power conference was held at Chattanooga in December, 1925, at which time the power combine filed application with the Federal Water Power Commission for 11 dam sites on the Tennessee River and its tributaries, including Cove Creek Basin, a water-power site of extraordinary value. A demand was made by those in charge of the affairs of the State and by the Nashville Tennessean, backing the power combine, that the Federal Water Power Commission issue permits to the power company which had applied, awarding these 11 water-power sites, utterly disregarding the rights of the State of Tennessee.

A determined drive was made in an effort to compel immediate action by the Federal Government. Official telegrams were sent to the power commission at Washington. Numerous editorials were published demanding immediate action. Propaganda was industriously circulated, and the whole campaign was conducted on an assumption that the legal right to dispose of the water-power resources of this State was vested in the Federal Government, and that the State, through its sovereignty, had no voice in the matter.

The Banner challenged the authority of the Federal Government to thus dispose of the water-power resources within the boundaries of Tennessee. This paper declared that these rights are vested in the State and not in the Federal Government, and that the State alone had authority to permit their development and use to prescribe the conditions therefor.

The Banner has at all times, before and since that conference, maintained the position that the Federal Government was without constitutional authority to dispose of resources belonging to the States.

The Tennessean, with equal directness and diligence, has constantly insisted that the Federal Government should exercise the authority of disposition of these natural resources belonging to the State.

On October 10 and on November 1 the Tennessee Railroad and Public Utilities Commission, through orders which were thoroughly approved by the attorney general of the State, asserted that the right to control and supervise the development and utilization of the power resources within the boundary of Tennessee belongs to the State and not to the Federal Government.

Since the issuance of those orders, which have attracted nation-wide attention, the Tennessean has been silent on the direct issue involved, although it has published editorials still advocating the cause of the power combine.

The Banner continues to maintain the position which it has constantly defended, and is supporting the railroad and public utilities commission in its assertion of the rights of the State and its declaration of an intention to defend, protect, and enforce those rights.

The next issue is: Shall these valuable power resources be awarded to private interests of any kind—power companies, manufacturing companies, or companies of any kind—without monetary consideration, or shall the State of Tennessee be paid for the use of these natural resources belonging to all the people?

This issue has existed and has been pointed for the past few years. The Banner has never equivocated. It has always maintained and still maintains that private investors should not be permitted to take over these resources belonging to the State and use them without compensating the State therefor. The Tennessean, supporting the position of the power combine, has with equal diligence urged that these resources be awarded the power combine without any money consideration whatever.

The Tennessee commission, in its orders of October 10 and November 1, and the attorney general of the State, have taken the position that the State should be rewarded for these resources by those who are permitted to develop and use them.

The Banner has not changed its position and will not change it. This paper insists that whoever is permitted to develop and use the water-power resources within the boundaries of Tennessee must pay to the State annually the reasonable value thereof.

The Tennessean has at all times insisted that these water-power resources should be turned over to the power combine without any monetary consideration.

The third issue, which is of far-reaching importance, is: Shall the practices of holding companies, constituting the power combine, in pyramiding unjustified exactions from operating companies, be investigated thoroughly under the resolution which Senator WALSH of Montana will introduce in the coming Congress, and shall necessary legislation be enacted to prevent these evil practices, or shall the power combine continue to exact from operating companies unjustified contributions which at last become a part of the cost of electric energy sold to consumers?

The Banner favors the Walsh resolution, to the end that all evil practices may be brought to light and all impositions on the public exposed, and that necessary legislation be enacted to put an end to such evils.

The Tennessean has been significantly silent on this issue up to this hour.

There are, of course, other collateral and subordinate questions which should, and the Banner believes will, be handled by the Tennessee commission efficiently, and decided in a manner that will best serve the needs of the people of Tennessee.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, reference was made in the editorial from the Electrical World to the peril to securities issued by these public-utility corporations. In view of that I offer a letter received by me from the president of the National Association of Owners of Railroad Securities. This association is also interested in public-utility securities; and for that reason I offer the letter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF OWNERS OF RAILROAD SECURITIES,
New York, N. Y., July 28, 1927.

Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH,
Helena, Mont.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: The Security Owners' Association, which I represent as president, has as its members large mutual insurance companies, mutual savings banks, trust funds, colleges and universities, and many individuals who are not owners of securities.

These security owners are very largely interested in public-utility securities, and, of course, it is essential to take the same point of view as you do with respect to the holding-company situation.

I will be out in the West during the week of the 15th of August, and wonder if it is convenient for me to see you at your home or at some other convenient place during the early part of that week.

I was very much interested in the public attitude which you showed in the last Congress concerning the public utility holding company situation, and should very much, indeed, appreciate an interview with you.

With cordial regards, I am
Sincerely yours.

MILTON W. HARRISON, President.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I now offer for the RECORD an editorial appearing in the Topeka Daily Capital, a paper published by one of our associates, the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], entitled "The unregulated power mergers."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator ask that it be read?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial will be incorporated in the RECORD.

The editorial is as follows:

THE UNREGULATED POWER MERGERS

Ex-Governor Pinchot of Pennsylvania is issuing circulars to the public pointing out the probabilities of control of superpower by a few giant corporations through mergers of plants purchased at prices in excess of their cost or value, in the furious competition to obtain vantage points. But Governor Pinchot sounds like a "voice crying in the wilderness." A generation has risen up that "knows not Joseph," and not much concern is aroused by the man from whom Theodore Roosevelt obtained his policy, once highly thought of, of conservation of natural resources.

Yet it is true that these utilities extending across State lines are not utilities under regulation. The States lose control as they expand, and Congress has enacted no law for their regulation. Governor Pinchot wants a law.

Senator WALSH of Montana is cooperating with Pinchot, but not yet for any bill for regulation of power companies. At this time he proposes merely a resolution for a survey by Congress to determine the facts. This is being opposed by what is described as one of the most powerful lobbies in recent years at Washington.

As manufacturing industries in the United States are now electrified in excess of any others in the world and in some instances up to 100 per cent, mechanical power provided by several enormous power companies will evidently in the next generation become a greater interest than transportation. Homes also are rapidly becoming electrified, and farms soon will be. This is the greatest present development in the Nation.

In his speech on this subject Senator WALSH this year listed all power mergers for 1925 and 1926, the latter far outnumbering the former. More than a thousand power plants, large and small, were merged into a few immense concerns in 1926.

Senator WALSH raises no objection to this and recognizes consolidation as desirable. What he calls attention to is that the consolidations are going on without regulation. He cites the statements of financial and power magazines that report for last year's mergers alone that while great outlays were made in improvements and development, yet the increased capitalization of the large power units during the year exceeded these outlays and former capitalization of the plants merged by $2,000,000,000.

Earning power, in short, appears to be in the process of being capitalized at will. Once established, such capitalized structures may fix rates also at will, or corresponding with the apparent investment.

State commissions have not got very far in their attempts at regulation of power companies having interstate lines of service. The president of the Hartford Electric Light Co. last year in hearings before the Connecticut Public Utilities Commission after referring to the undoubted economies to be obtained by mergers nevertheless asked:

"But what is the value of economies to the communities, if in order to effect them it has been necessary to capitalize the savings for years to come and in their capitalized form to donate them either to the former stockholders or to the speculative banker who brought the parties together?"

The Walsh resolution rests, in the author's words, on the irresponsible command of the capitalizing process by the power companies. "Not being public utilities," says Senator WALSH, "the securities issued by them are in most States not subject to control by the local regulatory authorities. But being nation-wide, it may be said, in their activities, Congress may very properly inquire into their organization and their operations with a view to determining whether it may, as well as whether it should, attempt any regulation of the business they conduct, having in mind the interest of the consumer on the one hand and of the investor on the other. That some such study ought to be prosecuted with a view to ridding the industry of abuses quite generally acknowledged to exist, is recognized in business circles."

Governor Pinchot reports from an expert investigation paid for by himself that 41 corporations now control 80 per cent of all electrical energy produced in the United States and have a capitalization of $10,200,000,000, or about half the valuation of all the railroads in the United States. Of these 41 great power mergers he finds that 29 are controlled by five men and their associates. Such concentration makes for efficiency in service, but what it does to capitalization and rates is another story.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. This editorial refers to a letter addressed to me by ex-Governor Pinchot, of the State of Pennsylvania, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

1615 RHODE ISLAND AVENUE,
Washington, D. C., December 2, 1927.

Hon. THOMAS J. WALSH,
United States Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: You have announced your intention to reintroduce your resolution for an investigation of concentration in the control of electric power. In the event of its passage, and if you so desire, I am prepared to submit facts which, I believe, furnish definite proof of the existence, ownership, and extent of this concentration, together with material on methods of financing stock inflation, and the exploitation of the electric monopoly.

For more than 20 years far-sighted men have called the attention of the American people to the danger to self-government and economic freedom which lies in the growing concentration of electric power in a few hands without adequate public regulation.

In the message in which as governor I laid the giant power plan for the development and regulation of electric power before the Pennsylvania Legislature three years ago I said on this subject:

"There is already advancing with immense rapidity a consolidation of companies engaged in supplying this universal source of power, which has already far transcended State lines and has, in many respects, reached national proportions. The situation which this consolidation clearly foretells is like one in which every source of steam power in America should be under the control of a single monster corporation. In the face of such a concentration of capital and power the States and the Nation can maintain their industrial freedom and ability to govern themselves only through the medium of effective public regulation.

"Nothing like this gigantic monopoly has ever appeared in the history of the world. Nothing has ever been imagined before that even remotely approaches it in the thoroughgoing, intimate, unceasing control it may exercise over the daily life of every human being within the web of its wires. It is immeasurably the greatest industrial fact of our time. If uncontrolled it will be a plague without previous example. If effectively controlled in the public interest it can be made incomparably the greatest material blessing in human history."

At once the electric interests disputed these statements and have continued to dispute them ever since.

During the past year a study of this question has been carried on under my direction by an expert in whose ability and integrity I have full confidence. His report definitely establishes the truth of what I said. It shows that the coming nation-wide electric monopoly is very much further advanced than the propaganda of the electric interests has permitted the public to surmise. The study is not fully completed, but it has gone far enough to establish these facts:

Forty-one corporations control four-fifths of all the electric energy produced in the United States. Out of the 68,732,000,000 kilowatt hours of electricity produced in 1926, these 41 corporations produced 54,713,000,000.

These 41 corporations have a total capitalization of $10,200,000,000. They monopolize all the sources of electric power for four-fifths of our people. Eighty-five million seven hundred thousand Americans must get electricity from these 41 corporations or go without.

Of these 41 corporations 29, or about three-quarters, are already known to be dominated, owned, or controlled by five men or corporations and their associates. These five dominant electrical interests are the General Electric Co. of New York, Doherty of New York, Morgan of New York, Ryan of New York, and Insull of Chicago. It is altogether probable that most, if not all, of the remaining 12 also will be found to be dominated, owned, or controlled in the same way. But if the five major interests do in fact control only the 29 corporations, still their assets are capitalized at six thousand million dollars ($5,990,000,000) and they produced in 1926 more than half of all the electricity used in the United States.

The five controlling interests are allied, but not, so far as we know, actually under any single head. But they are tied together, first, by their common interest in maintaining their present power to collect extortionate rates from their customers. The combined electric lobby now in Washington, which represents them all, is proof enough of that.

Secondly, they are tied together by common ownership in certain companies, by common investment interests, by common directors, and doubtless in many other ways not yet disclosed.

These facts are evidence of the prodigiously rapid growth of a nation-wide electric monopoly, and they justify abundantly such warnings as are quoted above. Their significance to our people, not only economically and industrially but politically also, is almost beyond exaggeration. They have a direct and most important bearing on the overshadowing issue in America, which is the control of government by monopolists for the purposes of monopoly. In this attack on self-government and economic freedom the electric interests form the head of the spear. It is of the most urgent importance that this fact should be understood.

Sincerely yours,

GIFFORD PINCHOT.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, it will be recalled that some phases of this subject were investigated by the Federal Trade Commission. Their report has been submitted. It is a monumental work, and it will furnish an important basis for the work of this committee. But the investigation contemplated by the resolution is not intended at all to cover the ground traversed by the Federal Trade Commission in its investigation. As will be noted from a reading of the resolution, the inquiry relates particularly to the financing of these transactions, a subject upon which the report of the Federal Trade Commission does not touch.

I merely desire to say in conclusion, Mr. President, that if this investigation shall be ordered by the Senate, and I shall be in any way concerned with it, I shall endeavor to make it constructive rather than critical; I shall endeavor to find out what the facts are, so that the public may know; I shall endeavor to call to the aid of the committee men eminent in economics, who have studied this particular question, as well as the business men who are connected with the industry, and who can speak for it, who can tell of the advantages accruing to the public through this extraordinary movement, and who will be questioned concerning whatever disadvantages there may be attendant upon it; so that if the evils that attend it—and unquestionably there are some—can be averted by legislation, the appropriate legislation may be enacted if it is within the power of the Congress to do so.

I trust this resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and that the pending motion will be defeated.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I have no desire to delay the vote on this question. I wish only to comment on the widespread interest in this subject, as evidenced by the small attendance in the Chamber during the discussion.

I wish further to state that, inasmuch as I have spent a good deal of my life in writing editorials, I am not affected by either their dogmatic or their didactic character; and as for resolutions passed by various voluntary associations, my wastebasket is daily filled with them, and they leave me cold.

I wish to have this resolution considered by some committee which, in the quiet of the committee room, undisturbed by the dynamic character of the Senator from Montana, may study the merits of the question. The only regret that I have in connection with the present discussion is the implied renunciation by the Senator from Montana of any presidential aspirations on his part, because I am certain his party could go much farther and fare much worse.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I hope that the motion made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] will not prevail. If there is any subject which commands the attention of Congress and the country, it is the alarming acceleration which has taken place in the development of a structure for the purchase and control of the public utility and power enterprises of this country.

Mr. President, the Senator from Montana well stated in a very able address delivered during the last session of Congress the urgent reason for the prosecution of a thoroughgoing investigation. Since that time developments have taken place in the power industry which add weight to the arguments made by him at that time.

There should not be a serious question as to the investigation contemplated by the resolution. If there is to be a question raised, the place for the discussion and the argument is the open floor of the United States Senate and not the quiet of the committee room, so subtly recommended by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. President, we are all aware of the fact that these enormously powerful organizations represented in the public-utility and power business of this country have established here at Washington a lobby through which they propose to prevent the passage of this resolution and other legislation which may come up during this session of Congress affecting the power industry. I for one want to see this discussion and this argument conducted on the floor of the United States Senate and not behind the closed doors of a committee. It is well enough for Senators to suggest that we may move to discharge the committee should its deliberations in the quiet of the committee room take overlong, but that does not bring the direct issue before the Senate. Upon this important issue I believe it is the duty of every Senator to register his vote on the direct question of authorizing this investigation and thus discharge our obligation to the people of this country with regard to this vital problem.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the motion made by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] will not prevail. I am a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, but I wish to say that I feel quite sure that if this resolution shall be sent to that committee we would never have an investigation of this problem during this session of Congress. I want it distinctly understood that every man who is voting on this resolution, and who votes to send it to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, is voting against any investigation, as it will undoubtedly be too late to proceed with such an investigation by the time the Interstate Commerce Committee is able to report the resolution. That the subject does need an investigation, and that there is a demand for it, notwithstanding what the Senator from New Hampshire has said, seems to me to be quite evident.

Some years ago in my home State I was called upon to look into a situation which prevailed there, and I found this condition of affairs: One concern had gone out and purchased all of the small power companies in that State, and they had paid something like $33,000,000 for them. They immediately incorporated into a company, and sold bonds to the extent of $33,000,000. Then they sold common stock to the extent of $47,000,000 and preferred stock to the extent of $10,000,000. In other words, they injected into that company something like $57,000,000 of what you might call watered stock. When they came to tax the property, it was found that it was taxed for $33,000,000, but when we went across the aisle to find upon what basis they were charging the people for power, we found the valuation then to be something around $90,000,000.

This is a subject which affects every housewife in this country and every manufacturer in this country who uses electrical power, and I think it is high time that it should be investigated. I think this resolution should not be sent to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, but should be sent to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. As I said at the beginning, to send it to the Committee on Interstate Commerce will mean delay, and probably such delay as will make it impossible for the investigation to be carried on.

Why should the matter be taken up and discussed before the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to decide whether or not there should be an investigation? Every man here on this floor either knows that it should be investigated, or he knows that it should not be investigated, and he knows that if it is sent to the Interstate Commerce Committee we will not get a particle more information than each and everyone of us has right here in this body at this time.

I sincerely trust that the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire will not prevail.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I did not expect to take any part whatever in this debate. As the chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, I certainly have no personal desire that this proposition should be sent to that committee for investigation, but I am somewhat surprised that my good friend from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], who himself is a member of the committee, should reflect either upon the honor of the committee or its ability to do its work. I feel quite sure that if the resolution shall be sent to that committee it will be given as prompt attention as the other business of the committee will warrant.

I mean by that that the one thing which is uppermost in the minds of the members of that committee at this time is railroad consolidation. We have had that up for several years; it has been the subject of debate and discussion not only before that committee but throughout the country, and the President is asking that legislation shall be passed. Hearings have been had before our committee time and again, as we all know, and it is a question upon which we can very speedily act and doubtless will do so. Therefore there is nothing in the way of speedy consideration of this resolution.

I think the resolution should go to some committee in order that the limits of authority of the Senate itself to investigate a question of this character should be defined. I am told that there are over 5,000 public-utility corporations in the United States, and that some 4,500 to 4,600 of them do business wholly intrastate, within a town or within a city, with no communication whatever over State lines.

I am wondering whether or not my friend the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who is a very able lawyer, believes that we can investigate into everything concerning any one or all of those public utilities operating wholly within a State, and if not, should not the language of this resolution be limited to those doing an interstate business? I do not think we have any authority to investigate at all except under the commerce clause of the Constitution.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. WATSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. That is the important feature which is disturbing me. If it comes to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, of which I am a member, we have not any authority to make any sort of suggestion in the way of amending the resolution.

Mr. WATSON. I have no desire to have the resolution go to the calendar, which course it would take at 2 o'clock, and I suggest that we vote upon the pending motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of opinion, since the Senator from Indiana has mentioned the point, that the resolution would not go to the calendar, because there is no unfinished business.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. That is a very happy state of affairs.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I understood that the Senator from Indiana had in a way addressed a question to me.

Mr. WATSON. Yes; I did.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I beg to say that this question has a double interstate aspect. In the first place, it is not at all true that these companies operate entirely within a single State, even the operating companies. The amount of electrical energy now transmitted from one State to another in the aggregate is very great. It constitutes, however, only about 5 per cent of the total amount generated. As a rule the energy is consumed within the State in which it is generated. But in the case not only of electrical energy, but of gas, the commodity is very often transferred from one State to another, and the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that in that event neither the State of its origin nor the State of its consumption has any power whatever of regulation.

Mr. WATSON. That is quite true. I am familiar with that decision. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. Suppose that in the town in which I live, Rushville, Ind., there be an electric-light company unconnected with any other company which transmits energy over State lines; would the Senator claim that we have the authority to investigate the entire financing of that particular company?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not concede it at all; in fact, I assert the contrary. I do not concede at all that the power of the Senate to investigate a subject is controlled by the question of its power to legislate upon that particular subject. The Senate may very properly institute an inquiry not only to determine whether it is wise to legislate upon a particular subject but also as to whether it has the power to legislate upon that particular subject. Before it can determine that matter it becomes necessary to know just exactly what the facts are.

The fact about the matter, Mr. President, is that these operating companies, single, independent operating companies, are controlled from centers often far beyond the borders of the States in which those operating companies are located, so that really it becomes an interstate problem; and whether it falls within the domain of interstate commerce or not is a question upon which I do not care at the present time to express any opinion. Indeed, I have none formed. I desire to institute an inquiry to find out whether it is possible for the Congress of the United States to legislate so that these abuses may be corrected or whether we are helpless in the matter.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I yield.

Mr. MOSES. A fair corollary to what the Senator from Montana has said with reference to his view of the power of the Senate in matters of investigation is that the Senate could proceed with an investigation for the purpose of satisfying the curiosity of any Senator who could persuade a majority of the Senate to his point of view.

With reference to the Senator's last statement, as to the core of the purpose for which he is pressing here, he can bring that immediately and concretely before the Senate any time that he introduces a bill to carry out and effect the purpose which he states he has in mind.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I want to correct an impression which the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee seems to have, namely, that I wanted to reflect upon the Interstate Commerce Committee. He is entirely in error. My thought about the matter was simply that the Interstate Commerce Committee has before it, or will have before it, radio legislation and possibly investigations into the radio situation. It also has legislation pertaining to the railroads of the country, and I am quite sure that that legislation is going to take a great deal of the time, if not all of the time, of the Committee on Interstate Commerce. It seemed to me just a ridiculous waste of time on the part of the Senate to send this matter to the Interstate Commerce Committee and ask them to decide as to whether or not some other committee should investigate it. I would not reflect upon the Interstate Commerce Committee, nor would I reflect upon the chairman of that committee. I think he would do the best he could to get the hearings just as quickly as possible. But under the circumstances it would be, it seems to me, almost an impossibility.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in partial reply to one of the observations made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], may I invite his attention to the fact that in many of the so-called intrastate utility companies or organizations or corporations the stocks or bonds are held by corporations engaged in interstate commerce, and more and more the corporations which heretofore operated solely within a State are being absorbed by corporations engaged in interstate commerce or their stocks and bonds are being acquired, if not in toto, at least partially, so that the conduct of their affairs is determined not by local persons, unless they are named as directors by corporations engaged in interstate commerce, but by the larger unit or organization which has its habitat perhaps in one of the great cities of the Union.

It does seem to me that we ought to pass the resolution because of the well-known situation in regard to public utilities, and particularly power corporations, in the United States. If it does go to a committee, it seems to me that it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

If legislation is required, I believe it will be legislation supplemental to the Clayton Act or the Sherman antitrust law, and obviously any legislation dealing with the important question of trusts or combinations in restraint of trade would emanate from the Committee on the Judiciary. If there is any disposition—though I hope there will not be—to refer the resolution to a committee, I shall ask for a vote upon its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary rather than to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, the suggestion of the Senator from Utah is along the line of the interest that I have in the resolution. A similar resolution was presented at the last session and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] made a very elaborate address, graphically illustrated by charts on the wall of the Chamber. It was of interest to all of us, and I think he made a strong case. The resolution came to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, which is purely a formal committee and has no right whatever in the way of going into the merits of a proposal, but simply to put into operation the machinery after the policy has been established either by the Senate or by another committee.

I would hesitate to vote upon a measure where we could not go into the merits of it, but which involved so much. I am not particular whether it goes to the Judiciary Committee or to the Interstate Commerce Committee or any other committee which has power to go into the merits of it. It does not matter at all. I would vote for it to go to either committee. I happen to be a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, but I am also a member of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I hope that it will not go to the latter committee for the reason that it involves so much, and we have absolutely no authority in that committee to inquire into anything except to vote "yes" or "no." In order to cure that weakness in that committee——

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The requirement that the resolution shall go to the Committee to Audit and Control is statutory. Congress has enacted a law to the effect that it must go to that committee. Will the Senator from Ohio give us his view as to what that statute means?

Mr. FESS. Where there is any money to be drawn out of the contingent fund of the Senate the resolution comes to our committee, but the proper procedure would be that the policy of the subject should not be considered in our committee. The last two paragraphs of the Senator's resolution would be appropriate to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. That is the usual procedure. But there is the major portion of the resolution which is the establishment of a policy involving millions upon millions of dollars, upon which we can not express even an opinion.

It has been suggested by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] that when any resolution involving a policy of this sort is offered, it ought to go to the committee which has jurisdiction of the policy.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the Senator has not answered my question. I want to know what his view is concerning what duty devolves upon the Committee to Audit and Control when such a resolution goes to it.

Mr. FESS. The duty is to vote "yes" or "no."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Exactly; but upon what consideration?

Mr. FESS. No consideration at all. We can not go into that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is to say, the law says that it must go to that committee, and that committee does not inquire into the thing at all, but simply votes "yes" or "no."

Mr. FESS. That is upon a matter where expenditures are required and which can not be voted in any other way except by this committee. The question of expenditure does not enter into my idea at all here. I am ready to vote on that at any time. The question here is the policy in reference to concentration and control, and it seems to me that ought not to go to a committee which has absolutely no authority to go into any question of merit. If it would come from the Committee on the Judiciary or the Interstate Commerce Committee recommending such a policy, then the expenditure feature of the resolution would come to our Committee to Audit and Control, and we are ready to vote on that at any time.

I recognize that there is a desire to expedite the matter, and knowing that our committee could not spend any time on it, but it would have to vote either "yes" or "no," there would be less time wasted if it came to our committee; but what can a member of a committee of this body do when he sits upon a question of this kind, voting blindly, without any authority to investigate? Would he be justified in voting to report it out? On the other hand, it is easy for the committee to vote such a resolution down, but that would not be quite fair. Then the Senate would move to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the resolution and bring it at once to the floor of the Senate. The regular way would be to refer this resolution to some committee that has the power to go into its merits. Then if an expenditure is required, it should be sent to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. By following such a course there could be no jeopardy anywhere, so far as I can see.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio permit a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. FESS. I yield.

Mr. KING. As I understand the position of the Senator, it is if the resolution shall be referred to one of the standing committees, and that committee reports favorably upon it, and the resolution is then referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, the latter committee have no alternative but must report the resolution back favorably?

Mr. FESS. No; it may report back favorably or unfavorably.

Mr. KING. The Senator thinks, then, that the Committee to Audit and Control would have the opportunity to reverse the action of the other committee which reported to the Senate favorably?

Mr. FESS. It is quite evident if a committee which has the power to go into the merits, as would the Judiciary Committee, should report back favorably that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate would not hesitate at all in giving authority for the expenditure of the money.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator this question: Suppose the Committee on the Judiciary—I mention that committee because the Senator from Ohio named it—upon full investigation should report out this resolution favorably and it should then be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; does the Senator believe that his committee would have the right to negative the action of the Committee on the Judiciary which had investigated the resolution fully and had reported it favorably?

Mr. FESS. I presume the committee has the right to do whatever it sees fit to do, and then the Senate may correct any error it may make; but it seems to me I would be perfectly justified in saying that if another committee had made such a report the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate would indorse it by voting out the resolution at once.

Mr. KING. My opinion, if it is worth anything to the Senator—and it may not be—is that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate would have a mere perfunctory duty to perform, and it would be its duty immediately to report the resolution back to the Senate.

Mr. FESS. If the Senator will permit me, that is the difficulty with our committee all the time; it has a mere perfunctory duty to perform.

Mr. KING. I think there is a good deal of truth in what the Senator states; and I should like to ask him another question.

If this resolution or any other resolution should be referred to one of the standing committees and upon investigation such committee should report it back favorably and the resolution should then go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and the duty of the latter committee would then be merely to report back favorably—if that premise be correct—then if the Senate decides to refer the resolution to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate against the motion to refer it to a standing committee, is not the result just the same as if it had gone to the standing committee, for the reason that the Senate has expressed itself in favor of the resolution and in favor of the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate reporting it back favorably?

Mr. FESS. That is what I am trying to express, and I hope that the practice of the Senate will be that whenever a matter comes up involving a controversial question it will not be submitted to our committee, which has no latitude at all, but will go to a standing committee; then let that committee determine what shall be done, and the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate will then perform its perfunctory duty.

Mr. KING. I have had occasion heretofore to refer to what I deem to be a rather paradoxical or incongruous situation with respect to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. I think that the Senate either ought to approve of a resolution before it goes to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate or that a standing committee of the Senate ought to approve it.

Mr. FESS. That is my idea.

Mr. KING. So that the work of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate would be one of bookkeeping rather than of investigation.

Mr. FESS. That is my idea very well stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES].

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] to refer the resolution submitted by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. MOSES and Mr. LA FOLLETTE asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT], who is absent on account of illness. Being unable to obtain a transfer of that pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). For to-day and to-morrow I have a pair with the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. WATERMAN]. As he is not present, I am not at liberty to vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I have a telegram from him, in which he says that he desires to be paired in favor of referring the Walsh resolution to the Interstate Commerce Committee. As that is the way I intend to vote, I feel free to vote, and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HOWELL. The senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is detained at home by illness.

Mr. BAYARD. I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED]. He is not present, but I am informed that if present he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote on this question, and vote "yea."

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 11) authorizing a correction in the enrollment of House bill 5800, the first deficiency appropriation bill, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The concurrent resolution which has just come from the House is the same as one which the Senate passed a short time ago. I also understand that it is quite important that it should be passed to-day, so that the clerks may begin the enrollment of the bill. As the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is not here at this moment, and I am sure would like to have it passed at once, I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The concurrent resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed in the enrollment of H. R. 5800 (70th Cong., 1st sess.), known as the first deficiency bill, to insert, on page 38, in line 9 of the engrossed bill, after the word "attorneys," the following words: "(their heirs or their assignees now of record, as their interest may appear)."

G. TOM TAYLOR

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 80.

Mr. MOSES. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read Senate Resolution 80, submitted by Mr. McKELLAR on the 17th instant, as follows:

Whereas in 1921 an examination was held by the Civil Service Commission at Memphis, Tenn., for postmaster at that place; and

Whereas G. Tom Taylor, then claiming to be a resident of Memphis, made application and took the examination, but the Civil Service Commission declined to certify him as one of the eligibles; and

Whereas in 1925 another civil-service examination was held in Memphis for postmaster in that place, and the said G. Tom Taylor again became an applicant and again was refused a place on the list of three eligibles; and

Whereas no appointment was made for about a year after said 1925 examination, because apparently it was not desired by the political powers that any one of the three eligibles should be appointed postmaster; and

Whereas the political powers finally induced Mr. Bugg, the third man on the list of eligibles, to withdraw his name; and

Whereas the Civil Service Commission again refused to certify the said G. Tom Taylor, but did have a reexamination made into his application and qualifications; and

Whereas the report of the examiners in 1921, in 1925, and in 1926 all showed that the character and reputation of said G. Tom Taylor unfitted him for postmaster at Memphis, and held he was not qualified for postmaster by reason of not possessing the proper character and fitness; and

Whereas, notwithstanding these facts and findings of its own examiners, the Civil Service Commission on or about the 1st of June, 1927, placed the said G. Tom Taylor on the list of eligibles by a majority vote; and

Whereas the said G. Tom Taylor was at once appointed acting postmaster and took charge of the office; and

Whereas his name was sent in to the Senate for confirmation early in December, 1927; and

Whereas opposition appearing to the confirmation of G. Tom Taylor his nomination has been withdrawn; and

Whereas the said G. Tom Taylor has been continued an acting postmaster at Memphis, notwithstanding his lack of qualifications and fitness as required by the civil service laws: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Civil Service be, and it is hereby, authorized, ordered, and directed to send for persons and papers and report at the earliest possible day its findings on the following questions:

First. What were the facts as ascertained by the Civil Service Commission as to the character and qualifications and fitness of the said G. Tom Taylor to be postmaster in Memphis?

Second. What reasons actuated the Civil Service Commission in disregarding the findings of its own examiners and in certifying the said G. Tom Taylor as eligible for postmaster at Memphis, notwithstanding his lack of qualifications and fitness as found by the examiners?

Third. That the said committee is authorized to report any other pertinent facts concerning the eligibility of the said G. Tom Taylor for postmaster or as to the action of the Civil Service Commission, or any member thereof, in certifying the said G. Tom Taylor as eligible for postmaster at Memphis.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, there are some recitals in the whereases about which I am not at all certain and upon which I would not want the Senate to go on record immediately. Therefore I will ask the Senator to let the resolution go over until I have had time to make some inquiries and confer with him.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very glad to have that done. I will say to the Senator that we can take it up to-morrow.

Mr. MOSES. I will make every effort to get the information between now and to-morrow.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well; we will let it go over, then. Will there be any other session of the Senate before the holidays?

Mr. MOSES. Oh, yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then we will take it up on Wednesday.

Mr. MOSES. Very well.

REPORTS OF PUBLIC UTILITIES

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I call up the order offered on a previous day for the printing of the annual reports of the public utilities of the District of Columbia in accordance with the practice heretofore followed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I objected to that order the other day. I have no objection to it now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the order.

The order was read and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the annual reports of the following-named public utility companies in the District of Columbia, for the year ending December 31, 1926, heretofore transmitted to the Senate, be printed as a Senate document:

Capital Traction Co., Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., Georgetown Barge, Dock, Elevator & Railway Co., Potomac Electric Power Co., Washington Gas Light Co., Georgetown Gas Light Co., Washington Railway & Electric Co., City and Suburban Railway of Washington, Georgetown & Tennallytown Railway Co., and Washington Interurban Railroad Co.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker of the House had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 92) authorizing the payment of salaries of the officers and employees of Congress for December, 1927, on the 20th day of that month, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, December 19, 1927

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Spirit of holiness, Thy love has brought to the gates of our lives the footsteps of One who is the sovereign expression of man's utmost need and man's utmost hope. Do Thou move in advance of us and direct the way. Come and give our work its charm, our association its blessing, and to the whole day its joy. Brace our souls with certainties, and may they not be furrowed by doubts. Be Thou the invisible bridge that unites us in our dreams and aspirations with man wherever he is found. In the name of the Son of Man. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, December 16, was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER

ROYAL C. JOHNSON, of South Dakota, appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

THE DEFICIENCY BILL

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a House concurrent resolution, which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 11

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House be, and is hereby, authorized and directed in the enrollment of H. R. 5800 (70th Cong., 1st sess.), known as the first deficiency bill, to insert on page 38 in line 9 of the engrossed bill, after the word "attorneys," the following words: "(their heirs or their assignees now of record, as their interest may appear)."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I want to offer an explanation of this resolution.

The matter of $85,000 for attorneys' fees is carried in the deficiency bill in the usual language, as we supposed.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman do this under a motion such as he has submitted?

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLANTON. This is a bill which has been passed by the House and has been passed by the Senate.

Mr. MADDEN. This will have to go to the Senate.

Mr. BLANTON. And the conference report has been agreed to by the House, and the gentleman is now proposing to insert something additional by a resolution.

Mr. MADDEN. This is done frequently.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it still before the Senate or has it been enrolled?

Mr. MADDEN. It has passed the Senate, but is not yet enrolled; and, Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of the Interior, whose department this transaction affects, and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs have both sent a letter to Senator WARREN, chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, saying this is all right. The Comptroller General says this ought to be done, and we are complying with the Comptroller General's request.

Really, I think it is all right the way it is, but the Comptroller General thinks otherwise.

I ask for a vote.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 1090) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River in the State of Tennessee, in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

Sundry messages in writing from the President of the United States were presented by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had on December 14, 1927, approved and signed a bill of the following title:

H. R. 3190. An act authorizing the President of the United States to present in the name of Congress a medal of honor to Col. Charles A. Lindbergh.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and under the rule referred as follows:

S. 1090. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tennessee River in the State of Tennessee; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

LIEUT. COMMANDER WILLIAM FRANKLIN CALLAWAY

Mr. DICKINSON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the House may well halt public business for a moment to express a word of sympathy in the great submarine disaster which has recently occurred off the coast of Massachusetts, when forty-odd splendid men went down, when the submarine S–4 was struck by a Coast Guard vessel, which sent it to the bottom of the sea.

The sympathy of everybody goes out to the men who are in this vessel, most of them gone. Six men who were in the engine room are now said to be alive, and every effort is being made to reach them and render whatever relief can be given. Everybody in this country is watching for news, and all news is being given out by the naval authorities through the Bureau of Navigation, so that all parents and others may know about them.

Our sympathy goes out to each and every one of them, and my excuse for rising this morning is to refer particularly to one man, Lieut. Commander William Franklin Callaway, a man of high character and of great service—an inspection officer who had gone there to inspect this vessel and was confined there with the other officers in the room where the officers are located, and which, perhaps, was flooded. While six men in the engine room are now said to be alive, the probabilities are that the officers are not alive.

Lieut. Commander William Franklin Callaway came from my home town. His family were my next-door neighbors. I know intimately all his relatives. He was appointed to Annapolis 20 years ago by my distinguished predecessor, David De Armond, and after graduation served continuously in the naval service, 10 years in the submarine service. His record is notable.

I shall ask permission in this connection to print with what I say a notice of him contained in the Washington Star, a similar article having appeared in the Washington Post and practically all the other papers, including the Missouri papers.

Intimately I knew him. His father was twice sheriff of my home county of Henry. His grandfather was also sheriff of the same county, both prominent in public life and my close personal friends. His uncle, Frank Callaway, read law in my office, and was afterwards prominent as an educator. One of Lieutenant Callaway's brothers was my stenographer and secretary, and is now in the Philippines. Recently I appointed the younger brother of Lieutenant Commander Callaway to Annapolis, and I felt it was not inappropriate for me to rise on this occasion and ask permission to say a word about these men who have given up their lives and are now confined at the bottom of the sea in this submarine, and to especially say a few words about this splendid naval officer, William Franklin Callaway.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print with my remarks this splendid notice of Lieutenant Commander Callaway contained in the Star of Sunday morning.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The article referred to follows:

Lieut. Commander William Franklin Callaway, 201 Shepherd Street, Chevy Chase, Md., submarine expert for the board of inspection and survey of the Navy Department.

Lieut. Graham Newell Fitch (junior grade), 2400 Twentieth Street, who attended the Force School and the Central High School here.

Walter Bishop, naval radio operator, whose wife's home is given in Navy Department records at 1228 Pennsylvania Avenue SE.

Charles A. Ford, 1016 Montana Avenue NE., civilian, chief draftsman for the board of inspection and survey.

FAMILIES ARE NOTIFIED

The families of Lieutenant Commander Callaway, Lieutenant Fitch, and Mr. Ford were notified early last night of the accident and told that every possible effort was being made to rescue the men. At the same time they were informed that little hope was being held by the department for the safe recovery of those on board the submarine. Mrs. Bishop could not be located.

"We are mobilizing every aid to raise the submarine as quickly as possible," said Secretary Wilbur, "but this will depend on diving conditions and the buoyancy of the submarine."

Pointing out that the submarine weighs 900 tons and that the lifting buoy will lift about 600 tons, Mr. Wilbur said that Capt. E. J. King, who supervised the raising of the S–51, will go by airplane to-morrow morning from New York to the scene of the disaster.

"The submarine was apparently operating on its regular standardization tests," said Secretary Wilbur. "The area for this is located purposely so as not to be in the ordinary steamship lanes. Conditions there are ideal for this work, as there is deep water and it is close to shore. If this submarine was struck by a destroyer going 18 knots there is probably very little hope that anyone survived; but we will endeavor to learn at the earliest possible moment by sending divers down to communicate, if possible.

LIST MAY NOT BE CORRECT

Accompanying Secretary Wilbur when he arrived at the department soon after 10 o'clock was Capt. W. R. Sexton, head of the Material Department of Naval Operations. Officers of the Navy Department, as soon as they heard of the disaster, began checking up on the list of officers and crew.

It was explained that the list as finally made public might not be correct as to detail, as it was not entirely up to date. It was explained also that some of the men supposed to be on the submarine when she went down might not have been aboard, while others not mentioned in the list might have gone aboard at the last minute.

Lieutenant Commander Callaway has rounded out two years' service with the Navy Department in Washington, and in the next few months expected orders detailing him for sea duty. During his residence in Washington, the first in his naval career, he has been attached to the board of inspection and survey as a submarine authority, and in such capacity made frequent trials and test runs on new, modified, and overhauled naval craft. He left Washington Monday, expecting to return home a few days before Christmas.

Born in Clinton, Mo., November 7, 1889, Lieutenant Commander Callaway was appointed to the Naval Academy from that State in 1907, and upon graduation was assigned to submarine duty. In 1917 he served aboard submarines and continued in this duty until the close of the World War. Later he commanded the submarine R–19.

WIFE COLLAPSES

In 1921 he was sent as an inspector of machinery to the Bausch Sulzer Co., of St. Louis, and the following year went to the Asiatic Fleet in command of Submarine Division No. 12.

Lieutenant Commander Callaway's next of kin are his wife, who was in a state of collapse last night; a 6-year-old son, William F. Callaway, jr.; his father, Jerry Callaway, of Clinton, Md.; and a brother, Peyton, who is a midshipman at the Naval Academy.

THE MAGNETO

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing an article of my own on the magneto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARKE. Mr. Speaker, our distinguished Speaker in presenting Colonel Lindbergh to the House of Representatives Saturday, December 10, made a very happy remark in characterizing Colonel Lindbergh as "America's most attractive citizen." I could not but feel, as everyone else, a genuine delight in this unselfish partner in "We," as he received the ovation and congressional medal he so richly deserved.

Up in the thirty-fourth congressional district some of my boyhood friends are investing in airplanes to develop their flying ability and have a sort of dress rehearsal for the "flying age" before they set forth on the "great adventure."

I take a peculiar pride in the fact that up in the beloved hills of my native county is an American institution with an invested capital of approximately half a million dollars, to make available for the United States at this time and in its times of maximum emergency, of a vitally important part of the aeronautical engine; namely, the magneto for ignition. This company is an American concern, producing American products, financed by American capital, directed by Americans, and employing 95 per cent American workers.

I realize what great interest you all have in aviation and I want you to have first-hand facts and impressions as received by me when "Bill" Southworth and I inspected this plant, for it will prove interesting to you who have to keep in touch with our progress in aviation.

Of all the accessories, each one a specialty in itself, which contributes its share to the operation of the aircraft engine, there is none in my opinion more interesting or deserving of more attention than the ignition. Practically every make and type of aircraft engine is equipped with magnetos for ignition, which by virtue of their compactness, simplicity, and efficiency are greatly preferred to the ignition system which obtains its primary energy from a storage battery.

Basically, the magneto in most general use as ignition for the aircraft engine consists of a four-pole magnet which is rotated between pole shoes by the engine drive. The immediate result is the generation of magnetism of flux which passes backward and forward through the laminated core of the coil. About this core is wound a number of turns of comparatively heavy wire. Wrapped about this is the condenser, and next in turn comes the secondary winding which is made up of nearly 2 miles of insulated wire having a thickness equivalent to that of a man's hair. A contact-breaker lever, working against a cam, interrupts the flow of primary current generated by the rotation of the magnet and the accurately timed intervals of this interruption and the consequent building up and dying down of the primary current creates a spark of approximately 18,000 volts. This high-tension voltage, which is the final product of the magneto, is distributed to each spark plug of the cylinders of the engine at the required time, thus producing a spark which is the ignition.

Late in 1922, the Bureau of Aeronautics of the United States Navy, in collaboration with the Wright Aeronautical Corporation, carried on a series of exhaustive tests with aircraft magnetos, which were at that time imported. The factory producing this magneto was located in Soleure, Switzerland, and the American company was acting as its agent. Actual operations of these magnetos on dynamometer tests and a series of flight tests conducted by the Bureau of Aeronautics over considerable periods proved without question that this magneto was far superior to any other in existence for the vitally important work of supplying dependable and accurately timed sparks to the aircraft engine. Our own ignition manufacturers in general were fully cognizant of the problems required to be solved to provide satisfactory ignition, but nothing of any consequence has been done to improve ignition devices or to keep step with the development of the aircraft engine.

As a result of the thorough tests conducted by the Navy, and realizing that some drastic steps must be taken to improve the ignition situation, the Bureau of Aeronautics negotiated a contract whereby it was arranged that to meet immediate needs 250 magnetos made up of 9 and 12 cylinder types should be imported at once from Switzerland, modified, given further thorough test, inspected, and delivered to the Bureau of Aeronautics. It is of importance and considerable interest to note that this contract was contingent upon the company's agreement to a clause therein which specified that a factory for the purpose of manufacturing magnetos must be established in the United States, thus making available to the Navy this highly important and vitally necessary machine as soon as possible.

One can well realize the great value to naval and military aeronautics that would accrue from the establishment of a domestic source of supply of highly satisfactory ignition devices for their aircraft power plants. Within three months after the date of the contract, the first magnetos were delivered to the Navy, and their satisfactory performance further justified this farsighted move on the part of the Navy.

An American company was formed and immediately made arrangements for the acquisition of suitable property and equipment for manufacturing and satisfactory arrangements with the Swiss company as to patents and manufacturing rights were consummated. The town of Sidney, Delaware County, N. Y., was selected as being an ideal place from the standpoint of transportation facilities and availability of skilled labor. This town, with a population of about 2,800, is situated in the Unadilla Valley at the junction of the Delaware & Hudson and New York, Ontario & Western Railroads. It is about 200 miles northwest of New York City on a direct line between Binghamton and Albany. With the cooperation of the Chamber of Commerce of Sidney, a recently vacated automobile factory was obtained and altered to suit the requirements.

The administration of the company is by Americans and the stock is owned by an American corporation of New York City. There has been invested well in excess of a half million dollars in the business, and more than 90 per cent of the employees are Americans. Mr. Laurence R. Wilder, president; Mr. T. Z. Fagan, in charge of sales; Mr. Herman Hanni, who had been prominent in the organization of the Swiss factory, in charge of manufacture; and Mr. G. E. Steiner, in charge of accountancy, formed the nucleus of this organization. At the time of writing Mr. Walter Spengler is chief engineer; Mr. Albert Egli, production manager; and Mr. C. P. DeWitt, purchasing agent.

Activities were started January 1, 1925, at the Sidney plant with eight employees. The actual manufacture of American-built magnetos commenced February 8, 1926. Up to the present time the company has produced in the Sidney factory close to 2,500 nine and twelve cylinder aircraft magnetos, and has on its pay roll 175 employees. The total floor space is approximately 85,000 square feet, nearly all of which is at present occupied.

This company is manufacturing and delivering aircraft magnetos for use on the Wasp and Hornet engines; for use on the Whirlwind, Cyclone, Typhoon, and Tornado engines; for use on the 3A–1500 and 3A–2500 engines; for use on the D–12 engines, and to the Army Air Corps and Navy Bureau of Aeronautics for spares and replacements. In addition, this company is supplying aircraft magnetos of various types to about eight other American aeronautical engine manufacturers.

One of the materials which is used in the construction of this magneto and which contributes so much to its success is the fine quality of dielectric, which is part of the distributor mechanism. This is a vulcanized gum, specially prepared and molded under a secret process by a Swiss concern. The company has been working intensively in an effort to obtain in the United States a material equal to it in all respects. To date its efforts have not met with success, although it is felt that recent tests of domestic material are very encouraging. The production of American-built coils is well under way, and the aircraft magneto, type V–AG12–D being produced at the Sidney factory is American built throughout with the exception of the above-mentioned dielectric parts for the distributor. With the availability of domestic material for this, the aircraft magneto will be a 100 per cent American product.

I was distinctly impressed during my visit to the factory with the splendid spirit which prevails throughout the plant. Each man and woman, from the floor sweeper to the department heads, seems thoroughly aware of the responsibility which is theirs in producing this vitally important part of the aircraft engine. Further was I impressed by the meticulous care taken in handling the various delicate and finely wrought parts which go to make up the magneto. The machine tools, jigs, fixtures, and other equipment are of the best and most up-to-date and are designed for accuracy and moderate production.

The majority of modern aircraft engines are of the 9-cylinder type, and 9-cylinder magnetos, together with the 12-cylinder type, are the ones being produced at the Sidney plant. Magnetos for 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 12, 14, 16, and 18 cylinder engines can be supplied by this company, and some of these special types are imported and modified to meet American aircraft-engine requirements at the factory in Sidney.

Nothing but aircraft ignition is manufactured at the factory in Sidney, it being considered by that company that the importance of this part of the engine justifies a high degree of specialization. This may in part account for their marked success. Unprecedented performance is being obtained with them, and somewhat in support of this it was pointed out that Lindbergh, Chamberlain, Byrd, Acosta, Smith and Bronte, Maitland and Hegenberger, Goebel and Jensen had used them as ignition equipment for their Wright whirlwind engines.

The thoroughness of the tests given the magneto before its delivery was greatly surprising to me. Each magneto is operated in groups on long test benches, delivering its spark to open gaps. The test period is between 75 and 100 hours at a speed of 2,000 revolutions per minute. At the conclusion of this test the magneto is disassembled, inspected, reassembled, and placed on test again at high speeds up to 4,500 revolutions per minute. It is then ready for final inspection, where it is carefully checked for dimensions, appearance, and so forth, and where it is assured that the magneto conforms to the particular specifications of the Army, Navy, or engine manufacturer for whom it is destined.

Considerable development work is going on constantly. Improvements and new details of design are being worked in as fast as it is possible to do so and provide sufficient time for their testing. The necessity for smaller, lighter magnetos is well appreciated and understood by the engineers, and there is ever an effort on their part to accomplish these results. Every indication points to a continuance of the superb workmanship and utmost care in manufacturing that has contributed to much of the splendid reputation of these aircraft magnetos.

A particularly interesting development that I saw was the vertical double aircraft magneto, which is a mechanism of real beauty and truly a masterpiece in fine machine work. Briefly, it consists of pole shoes, upon the ends of which are mounted two coils. Upon the end of the rotating magnet is mounted a four-lobe cam which actuates two braker mechanisms, the functioning of which produces eight synchronous or staggered sparks per revolution of the magneto. This magneto only weighs 12½ pounds and with its two distributors, which weigh 1.5 pounds each, this ignition device will mean a considerable saving in weight and space over the two-individual-magneto installation.

Mr. Fagan, who showed me about the factory, stressed particularly the great importance of the very considerable experience that the company has had in supplying aircraft engine magnetos. There were constantly being pointed out to me changes and modifications, all meaning improvements that have been incorporated as a result of the engineer's close cooperation and contact with the engine manufacturer and operating units of the Army and Navy. The Naval Aircraft Factory and the Bureau of Aeronautics of the Navy and Wright Field of the Army have worked with the company to the fullest possible extent, and a most thorough understanding between these departments and the company has made possible most gratifying results. "As a matter of fact, both these branches of Government aeronautical activity are almost indispensable in the assistance they render to the manufacturer of accessories," said Mr. Fagan.

Rear Admiral William A. Moffett, Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, has stated in one of his annual reports that "No engine is better than its accessories." I am, as a result of my visit to the plant, very sure that this places a real responsibility on them, of which they are fully aware and able to fulfill.

Aside from the manufacture of the magneto to conform with various specifications and requirements of the engine manufacturer for military, naval, and commercial use, there are many problems confronting the engineers, such as radio interference, which is caused by the high-tension spark of the magneto, exceedingly high altitude requirements, and so forth. Much is being done with these problems by the company, and gratifying results are being obtained.

Practically every aircraft engine built in this country to-day is equipped with these aircraft magnetos, and in very nearly every case there are two of them per engine. Even considering this factor of safety, the complete failure of one magneto will appreciably lessen the power of the engine. This company's viewpoint in this regard is to consider that the engine is actually equipped with only one magneto, the failure of which would, of course, immediately cause the engine to stop.

The whole organization is extremely proud of its success in having overcome the many discouraging obstacles in the path of producing in America this magneto. And justly so, for it is distinctly a better magneto than the previously imported Swiss type. This claim for superiority is entirely warranted as a result of exhaustive comparative tests carried out on a Navy project by the naval aircraft factory at Philadelphia on magnetos from the two sources and from actual performance in service.

HENRY CLAY VAN VOORHIS

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it is with profound sorrow that I rise to announce the death of Henry Clay Van Voorhis, of Zanesville, Ohio, who for 12 years represented the district I have the honor to represent in Congress.

Mr. Van Voorhis died December 12, 1927. For three quarters of a century he lived in the county where he was born, one of our most honored and distinguished citizens. He was graduated from Denison University and was a student at the Cincinnati Law School. He was a capable lawyer, but left that profession to become a Member of the Congress of the United States, being elected in 1892 to the Fifty-third Congress and served in the five succeeding Congresses, and then voluntarily retired. During his service in the House he was a member of the powerful Committee on Appropriations.

That was in the days of Uncle Joe Cannon. They were friends, and Mr. Cannon frequently stopped in Zanesville in his journey from the National Capital to his home to greet his friend, Mr. Van Voorhis. His political allegiance was to the Republican Party and at least twice he was a delegate to the Republican National Convention. Both before and after he came to Congress he was president of the Old Citizens National Bank, one of the most reliable financial institutions in Ohio.

Mr. Van Voorhis was a commanding figure, congenial, true to his friends, and gifted with a strong personality. He was a good lawyer, a splendid citizen, a very capable statesman. COLONEL LINDBERGH

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Secretary of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, D. C., December 16, 1927.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I take pleasure in informing you that the department has received a telegram, dated December 15, 1927, from the American ambassador at Mexico City containing the following message for you from Colonel Lindbergh.

"I am deeply grateful for your message and for the action of the House of Representatives."

I am, my dear Mr. LONGWORTH, sincerely yours,

FRANK B. KELLOGG.

The Hon. NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
House of Representatives.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT CLEARWATER, MINN.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the Consent Calendar.

The first business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 193) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the village of Clearwater, Minn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge authorized by the act of Congress approved March 4, 1925, to be built by the State of Minnesota and the counties of Sherburne and Wright across the Mississippi River at or near the village of Clearwater, in the county of Wright, in the State of Minnesota, are hereby extended to March 4, 1927, and March 4, 1929, respectively.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The following committee amendments were read:

Line 4, after the word "by," insert the word "the."

Strike out all of line 9 and insert the following in lieu thereof: "one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof."

Amend the title so as to read:

"To extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the village of Clearwater, Minn."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT WOLF POINT, MONT.

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 444) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Wolf Point, Mont.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, is it the purpose of the committee to adopt some policy in regard to these bridge bills? As gentlemen know, there is no character of bills that come before the House that receive less attention than do these bridge bills.

Mr. DENISON. I am not prepared to admit that.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I mean consideration by the House and not by the action of the committee. Very often we find very valuable rights are being given away to private individuals or corporations when, as a matter of fact, it has been demonstrated that the best policy for the community as well as for the Government was that the bridge be constructed and operated by the Government or some agency—like the tunnel between New York and New Jersey, which is operated with great success.

Can the gentleman from Illinois inform us what policy the committee will adopt so that we may rely entirely on the committee and not have to examine every bridge bill before us?

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has asked a pertinent question, and I will answer it the best I can. The policy of the committee is to grant the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge by the State government or a political subdivision thereof whenever the State or municipality asks for it. We prefer to give the franchise to the government or a political subdivision, or to some government agency, like the highway commission; but if they do not ask for it, and if there is public sentiment in favor of the construction of the bridge, and private individuals ask for authority to construct and build the bridge, the policy of our committee is to grant it. But every bill contains a reservation of the right in favor of the public to take it over at any time, after a limited number of years, and operate it as a free bridge.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. And every private bill contains that proviso?

Mr. DENISON. Every one contains that provision.

We never report a bill granting a franchise to private persons or corporations to build a toll bridge that does not contain a provision giving the State or county or municipality in which the bridge is located the right to recapture the bridge upon terms that fully protect the interests of the public.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to call the attention of the House briefly to the situation we are getting into on the bridge question. Under the Federal aid law there is a provision that Federal aid can not be given to toll roads, and under the construction placed upon that law the Federal aid is not given to roads which approach a toll bridge. Congress at the last session passed a large number of bridge bids, and I think a larger number of them were private toll bridges.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. In a moment. There is no adequate provision in the law to regulate the price of the toll or to in any manner have charge of the transportation over these bridges, except the privilege that has been given by Congress to permit the corporation or individual to construct the bridge. The Federal Government is providing for a great road system throughout the country. Every State in the Union is at work now building a Federal system of roads, and may we not find the entire Federal road system tied up by a system of toll bridges, whereby the entire public must contribute to private persons in order to travel over the public roads. I yield.

Mr. LEAVITT. Mr. Speaker, I just want to insert in the RECORD at this point the fact that this particular bridge now under consideration is not a toll bridge.

Mr. DOWELL. I am referring only to the proposition that we have before us, because a large number of toll bridges are to come before us at this session.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Is there any intention on the part of the committee of which the gentleman is chairman to bring in any legislation that will enable the Government to condemn these toll bridges that are mulcting the people out of millions of dollars.

Mr. DOWELL. That is the point I want to arrive at. The bridge proposition is not before the Committee on Roads. There is now before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce a bill respecting this matter, and some legislation should be presented and adopted by this Congress. There is, as I understand it, a small provision at the end of these bridge bills, which in a manner provides that the bridges may be recaptured, but it is not a complete piece of legislation, and before this Congress passes another bridge bill it should pass legislation whereby the public may under certain conditions restore these bridges to the use of the public free.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman says that there may be danger that we will lose control, or that Congress will lose control, over the right to construct certain toll bridges.

Mr. DOWELL. Oh, no.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Does not the gentleman realize that under the 50–50 proposition in respect to road construction, as the matter is carried on in the city of Washington, Congress has absolutely lost control of Federal-aid roads carrying interstate commerce?

Mr. DOWELL. Every bridge built anywhere over a navigable stream has to have the approval of Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is true, and that will continue.

Mr. DOWELL. What I insist on is that before we go further in bridge construction we should pass comprehensive legislation for the protection of the public in the future that the public may use this Federal-aid system throughout the entire country without a contribution to private interests.

Mr. SNELL. What is the gentleman's suggestion along that line?

Mr. DOWELL. There is a bill before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee now which provides for the construction of bridges, with the provision that they may be recaptured for the benefit of the public under certain conditions.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me make a suggestion to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL]. We ought to quit passing these toll-bridge bills, and we ought to follow the law we passed and provide that every bridge that connects a through highway built partly with Federal aid, especially from one State into another, must be a free bridge, and thus encourage States to appropriate money to match Federal aid, so that free bridges may be built with Government and State funds along with the through highway, as the bridge is just as much a part of the highway as any other segment of it.

Mr. SNELL. And how long would it take to get a private bridge bill through here providing that the Federal Government pay for these things? There is not the slightest possibility of doing such a thing.

Mr. BLANTON. It is just as easy to provide many millions for free bridges as it is for the other portion of the highways.

Mr. DOWELL. There is no one suggesting that the Government build these bridges.

Mr. SNELL. That is what the gentleman from Texas suggested.

Mr. BLANTON. Only in cooperation with the States; I propose for the Government to match dollars with the States to build free bridges, just as it is now doing to build the rest of the highway.

Mr. DOWELL. There is no objection to the building of bridges providing there is provision that the public may, under certain conditions secure ownership and control of them.

Mr. BURTNESS. To what bill does the gentleman refer?

Mr. DOWELL. I refer to the bill of the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. BURTNESS. I want to say that I appreciate, of course, very much the gentleman's support of the bill. I think it is very meritorious legislation. I have already requested our committee to hold hearings on the bill shortly after the holidays to consider all the propositions involved. I hope Members generally will become interested in it. On the other hand, I think it is also fair to say that the bridge bills during the last session of Congress, at least, have adopted provisions much along the line of the general bill I have introduced. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] a year ago made an extended speech on the floor of the House showing just what the policy of the subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is. Every bill authorizing the construction of a toll bridge by private capital passed during the last session, at least, and I think the same was true in the session preceding, gave to the public—that is, to adjoining counties, municipalities, or other public agencies—the right to buy the bridge on what we may term a reduced measure of damages.

There is another factor which I think has been overlooked by the gentleman from Iowa, namely, that any person may object to the amount of toll charged by the private bridge corporation if deemed unreasonable, and that the Secretary of War has power to pass on the tolls, which power has possibly been used but little.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman knows that is not a practical proposition at all.

Mr. BURTNESS. Because of the fact the proposition can, in my opinion, be improved, proposals touching this subject are included in the general bill to which the gentleman referred.

Mr. DOWELL. My position is to get the best road system possible.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman permit me to ask a question?

Mr. DOWELL. I yield.

Mr. BEGG. Is it the policy of the committee to report favorably, so far as restrictions are concerned, as many bills over the same stream as are asked for, say, 2 or 3 miles apart, when there is no heavy traffic? Is it the policy of the committee to do that?

Mr. DENISON. The policy of Congress has been to grant any municipality a franchise to construct a bridge. It is very unwise to grant a monopoly, but if the people want bridges across a stream, Congress has no objection to their having them. That is decided by local conditions. Local conditions affect it.

Mr. BEGG. Now, may I ask the gentleman—I know in three specific cases where there is not—I have forgotten, but the figures will bear me out—where there is just enough traffic to produce a return of perhaps 5 per cent on the construction of a bridge, yet there are bridges from 2, 3, or 5 miles up or down. The promoters finance it in New York, and it is not the promoters who hold the bag, but it is the innocent purchasers of the securities; and I think Congress could well afford to make an investigation as to the restrictions, I call them, or what they are, on which they are granted. That is one of the things which I think the committee ought to consider. If it is a case of permitting a bridge across any stream where there is a reasonable excuse for it, I do not care. In one case they can go to New York and make a clean-up.

Mr. DENISON. Is not that true in regard to all other investments?

Mr. BEGG. No; I do not think it is true in regard to all other investments.

Mr. DOWELL. I think we have a proposition here that is vital to the American people.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. There are a number of these toll bridges which connect important highways, highways upon which the Government and the States have expended a large amount of money. Now, why should they not be highway bridges paid for by the Government and States jointly, open free to the public? I think they ought to be. I think we ought to take steps now to encourage States to join the Government in matching dollars and building free bridges. Yet you are going to make this a toll bridge.

Mr. LEAVITT. No; that is what I want to keep clear of, that the bridge now before the House for consideration is to be constructed on the Federal system by the State of Montana.

Mr. BLANTON. Open and without tolls?

Mr. LEAVITT. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I am for it.

Mr. DOWELL. I am not discussing the bill now before the House, but I am calling attention to the situation which has arisen.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to have these bridges built and pay toll on them rather than have no bridge at all?

Mr. DOWELL. This is the situation: The Government and the various States are investing millions and millions of dollars in the construction of good roads all over the United States, and if Congress is going to permit private persons to hold key positions to build bridges without enacting comprehensive and adequate legislation for the recapture of those bridges to the public use, our people may be compelled to pay tribute to individuals by way of bridge tolls for many years to come.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. DOWELL. I want to complete my statement. I have in mind a system of road construction in the United States for the future along the lines laid out under the Federal-aid program, and I want the public to be amply protected in the use of these highways. When these private bridges have been built the public should have the opportunity under comprehensive legislation to purchase them at a fair and reasonable price to the builders.

This matter should be called to the attention of Members of Congress, because over a very large system of Federal-aid highway construction in the United States every effort should be made to keep them out of the hands of a few men after the system has been constructed. [Applause.]

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, just a few words in reply to the statement of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL]. I made an address in the House last year on this subject which the gentleman from Iowa evidently has not done me the honor to read. We adopted a policy, after a couple of years' study by the committee of the Senate and the committee of the House, governing the granting of franchises to build bridges over the navigable waters of this country, and the policy is included in every bill granting the right to construct a bridge. That policy has been agreed on after a great deal of study. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] did not ask for a hearing and did not ask permission to present any views on that subject, although he had that opportunity and he has that opportunity now. Our committee will be glad to hear him at any time concerning the proper franchise to be given for the construction of bridges.

The gentleman is entirely mistaken in his statement of the law. Congress has delegated to the Chief of Engineers and to the Secretary of War the right to regulate tolls over every toll bridge in the United States, and whenever any party has constructed a toll bridge and any citizen thinks the rate is too high, all he has to do is to write to the Secretary of War and file a protest; and every one who wants to be present at the investigation can present himself and express his views; and if the Secretary of War, after making the investigation, finds that the tolls are unreasonable or too high, he can order them reduced; and what he says is the law. There can not be any appeal from it unless, of course, his orders should amount to confiscation.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Has the gentleman had any experience in regard to changing railroad rates under that condition?

Mr. DENISON. Well, that question is just as impertinent as some of the other statements made by the gentleman from Iowa. We have laws by which those things are governed. When the gentleman says there is no regulation of tolls he is mistaken. Anybody can object to the rate of tolls, and if the tolls are found unreasonable they will be reduced.

We have worked out a plan, and it is embodied in every bill passed granting a franchise for a toll bridge. It is a fair plan to the public. By it we save to the public the right to take over any privately owned toll bridge whenever the public wants to do so, and we limit the amount of damages or compensation to be paid when the public takes over the bridge. We do not let them charge for good will or going value or earning power. All the public has to pay for is the actual value of the physical structure. That is quite a concession to the public, and that applies to every toll bridge constructed since the adoption of the policy.

Mr. CARSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. CARSS. Does this provision apply to the bridges built heretofore?

Mr. DENISON. No. This policy that we are acting upon now applies only to bridges built after the adoption of the policy. Of course, we can not pass a retroactive law. All private toll bridges constructed under acts of Congress in the past two years have been constructed under that policy, and the rights of the public are fully preserved in the recapture clause.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DENISON. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understand the gentleman to say there is a law which prescribes that the Federal Government may regulate tolls over bridges?

Mr. DENISON. Certainly; all bridges in the United States constructed over navigable streams since 1906 can be regulated by the Chief of Engineers or the Secretary of War.

Mr. MONTAGUE. A bridge running over a river dividing two States?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; that has been the law since March 23, 1906.

Mr. BURTNESS. A bridge across any navigable stream.

Mr. DENISON. Yes. The Secretary of War can regulate the tolls on any toll bridge in the United States which is constructed over a navigable waterway.

Mr. MONTAGUE. My reason for asking that question is rather an inquiry as to the power of the Federal Government to make such a rule and regulation.

Mr. DENISON. It is a rather sweeping power.

Mr. MONTAGUE. As I understand it, the Federal Government only gives its consent to such structures upon the ground that there may be no obstruction to navigation and consequently commerce, and has questionable power to make authorizations.

Mr. DENISON. In 1906 Congress conferred that power upon the Secretary of War, and it is not a dead letter. The Secretary of War exercises that power every now and then, and he has done so quite frequently.

Now, I would like to have gentlemen remember this: The Federal road act provides that no part of the funds appropriated under its provisions shall be expended upon a road where tolls are charged. Of course, the intention of Congress was to prevent the expenditure of Federal funds on a toll road, one of the old-fashioned toll turnpikes; but the section of the act, where definitions are provided, defines "bridge" as being a part of a highway, so that the comptroller in construing the act has held that Federal-aid funds can not be expended on a road that approaches not only a toll bridge but a toll ferry. There are hundreds of ferries in this country, and, of course, they are all toll ferries; and the ruling of the comptroller applies to Federal-aid roads that approach a ferry. He says Federal funds can not be expended on that part of the road which approaches a ferry; that is, upon that part of the road which extends back to a point where the road could be used independently of the bridge or ferry. When that ruling of the comptroller was made, of course, it proved to be more or less embarrassing to the Bureau of Roads, and I filed a bill in the last Congress to correct that situation. However, I have never been able to get the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] to permit us to go before his committee to present the reasons for the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The law mentioned by the gentleman contemplates that on arterial highways constructed partly with Federal aid the bridges and ferries must be free. Why should not they be free? The bridge or ferry is just as much a part of the highway as is any other segment of it. If the law and General McCarl's ruling could be enforced, it would be a great thing for the people, for it would induce the States to match dollar for dollar with the Federal Government and build free bridges to replace the toll bridges and ferries, that now interrupt and hold up interstate motor traffic along through highways. But the law is not wholly obeyed, because aid has been granted on highways with both toll bridges and ferries, and such highways have been constructed almost to abutments that lead both to toll bridges and toll ferries.

Mr. DENISON. That has not been done since the comptroller's ruling?

Mr. BLANTON. It has been done all the time, and I know of a number instances in which it has been done—the highway stopping some 100 yards or more from the approaches.

Mr. DENISON. I will have to say that I think the gentleman from Texas is wrong.

Mr. BLANTON. I have any number of such cases in my mind and can cite them to the gentleman. I have been over some of such highways this past summer.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Does the consent of Congress have to be given for the construction of bridges over a navigable stream that is wholly within a State?

Mr. DENISON. Consent of Congress is necessary unless the navigable portion of the stream is entirely within the borders of one State; then consent can be obtained from the State legislature. Since the comptroller has made the ruling to which I have referred—and it is rather technical, and I myself think it is foreign to the original intention of Congress—he has refused to approve vouchers issued by the Bureau of Roads for the expenditures of Federal funds on roads leading up to toll bridges or ferries, and therefore, the Bureau of Roads is not expending money on approaches either to ferries or to toll bridges. Now, that situation ought to be corrected by Congress.

Mr. BLANTON. If they construct a bridge they should not charge tolls but it should be open.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman from Texas ought to know that Congress can not compel the construction of free bridges.

Mr. BLANTON. But we can provide for it.

Mr. ROMJUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. ROMJUE. I understand the attitude of the Government to be just what the gentleman has stated it to be, but the gentleman from Iowa stated a moment ago there was no intention on the part of the Government to construct these bridges. Now, if there is no intention on the part of the Government to construct them and private capital must construct them, is there any way in the world we can make the States construct them?

Mr. DENISON. There is no way, of course.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the suggestion that Congress refuse permission for the building of bridges on interstate and intrastate highways is untenable. There are numerous points in practically every State of the Union where arterial highways approach from both sides of impassable streams and there terminate to the profit of inadequate ferries and to the expense and inconvenience of the traveling public. The Federal Government should either supply bridges at these key points or it should authorize private enterprise to supply them. It would be nothing short of absurd for the Government to refuse to build these bridges and at the same time refuse to permit anyone else to build them.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL] calls attention to the law forbidding Federal aid on highways connecting with toll bridges. But the same law also forbids Federal aid to roads connecting with toll ferries. It is apparent, therefore, that the building of toll bridges by local enterprise where State and Federal funds are not available in no wise prejudices the situation so far as Federal aid is concerned, for the reason that these crossings are without exception already served by ferries charging exorbitant tolls.

So far as the safeguarding of the rights of the public is concerned, it is only necessary to consult any of the bridge bills passed in the latter part of the last session of Congress to note that the standardized form which is now required in all bridge bills, and for the drafting of which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DENISON] is entitled to the thanks of the Congress and the country, amply cares for the interests of both the Government and the public. Every bridge bill passed since this form was adopted contains provisions under which the State or any adjoining political subdivision may at any time take over the bridge and acquire title at actual cost of construction, such cost to be fixed by the Secretary of War, subject only to review in a court of equity for fraud or gross mistake. It would be difficult, if not impossible, to draft a law more effective and more drastic in its protection of the rights of the traveling public and of the Government than the form now in use.

Contrary to the suggested policy of restriction in the building of bridges, Congress should authorize a bridge at every ferrying point on every Federal-aid highway in the United States. We need these bridges, and we need them now. We must have them in order to perfect our highway system and to provide for complete cooperation with our railroads and our deep-waterway system now in process of construction.

It is to be hoped that this session of Congress will break all records in the authorization of the construction of these missing links in the greatest highway system in the world.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for beginning and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Wolf Point, Mont., as authorized by the act entitled "An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Montana, or Roosevelt County, or McCone County, in the State of Montana, or either or several of them, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Wolf Point, Mont., approved January 15, 1927, be, and the same are hereby, extended one year and three years, respectively, from January 15, 1928.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SUPPLEMENT TO NATURALIZATION LAWS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 349) to supplement the naturalization laws, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, I think there should be an amendment on page 3, line 2; the article "a" should be "any."

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. It does not seem to me to be necessary.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Do gentlemen think the effect of this is that he may appear before the examiner who is nearest the witness?

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. That was the intent.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Very well, then; I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) the third paragraph of the second subdivision of section 4 of the act entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization, and to provide for a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States," approved June 29, 1906, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"As to each period of residence at any place in the county or District of Columbia where the petitioner resides at the time of filing his petition there shall be included in the petition the affidavits of at least two credible witnesses, citizens of the United States, stating that each has personally known the petitioner to have been a resident at such place for such period, and that the petitioner is and during all such period has been a person of good moral character."

(b) The fourth subdivision of section 4 of such act of June 29, 1906, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"Fourth. It shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the court admitting any alien to citizenship (1) that immediately preceding the date of his petition the alien has resided continuously within the United States for at least five years and within the county or the District of Columbia where the petitioner resided at the time of filing his petition for at least six months, (2) that he has resided continuously within the United States from the date of his petition up to the time of his admission to citizenship, and (3) that during all the periods referred to in this subdivision he has behaved as a person of good moral character, attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States, and well disposed to the good order and happiness of the United States. At the hearing of the petition residence in the county or District of Columbia where the petitioner resides at the time of filing his petition, and the other qualifications required by this subdivision during such residence, shall be proved only by the oral testimony of at least two credible witnesses, citizens of the United States. If the petitioner has resided in two or more places in such county or District of Columbia, and for this reason two witnesses can not be procured to testify as to all such residence, it may be proved by the oral testimony of two such witnesses for each such place of residence. At the hearing residence within the United States, but outside the county, and the other qualifications required by this subdivision during such residence shall be proved either by depositions made before a naturalization examiner or by the oral testimony of at least two such witnesses for each place of residence."

(c) Section 10 of such act of June 29, 1906, as amended, and section 2170 of the Revised Statutes are repealed.

(d) The Secretary of Labor shall make such changes in the forms prescribed by section 27 of such act of June 29, 1906, as are necessary to make them conform to the provisions of this act.

Mr. VINCENT of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, strike out lines 11 and 12 and insert in lieu thereof:

"Fourth. No alien shall be admitted to citizenship unless (1)."

Page 2, line 17, strike out the word "that."

Page 3, line 10, after the word "county," insert "or District of Columbia."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BOARD OF REGENTS, SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Senate Joint Resolution 48, providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of a class other than Members of Congress be laid before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 48

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress, which now exists be filled by the appointment of Charles Evans Hughes, of New York.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

SOLDIERS' HOME AT LOS ANGELES

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 164) to authorize appropriations for construction at the Pacific Branch Soldiers' Home, Los Angeles County, Calif., and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Reserving the right to object, I see here is an appropriation of $250,000. Will the gentleman from Michigan explain that?

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Speaker, there was a fire at the soldiers' home in Los Angeles and burned the mess hall. It was after Congress adjourned, and, at the suggestion of the Director of the Budget, when I was in the West I went to see it. The old soldiers are being messed in four different places. There are 1,300 of them to be fed, and a good many times it takes three messes. Some of the men have to go two or three hundred feet across one of the principal streets of Los Angeles. There are men being turned away from the soldier's home every day because they are unable to feed all the men who apply. In addition to that there are 265 men who feed at Sawtelle but who have to sleep out. The places that are now used for mess halls should be used to house the old soldiers.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman has made out a good case, and I withdraw my objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $250,000 to be expended for the construction and installment at the Pacific Branch, Soldiers' Home, Los Angeles County, Calif., of one general mess building, with bakery and equipment and such utilities and appurtenances thereto as in the judgment of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers may be necessary.

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 4, strike out "$250,000" and insert "$200,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, its principal clerk, announced that the Senate had concurred in the following resolution:

House Concurrent Resolution 11

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed in the enrollment of H. R. 5800 (70th Cong., 1st sess.), known as the first deficiency bill, to insert on page 38, in line 9 of the engrossed bill, after the word "attorneys," the following words: "(their heirs or their assignees now of record, as their interest may appear)."

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. CAMPBELL, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled House joint resolution of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. J. Res. 92. Joint resolution authorizing the payment of salaries of the officers and employees of Congress for December, 1927, on the 20th day of that month.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR—AMENDING STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 1397) amending section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act approved November 17, 1921 (ch. 124, 42 Stat. L. 220).

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve his objection?

Mr. SCHAFER. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if the gentleman knew the purpose of the bill he would not object. In the first place, it simply amends existing law by doing away with an amendment which was placed in the law on November 17, 1921. That amendment extended the time of the period of limitation and was intended to apply only to war frauds from three years to six years. Let me read the amendment of 1921:

Amendment of November 17, 1921 (ch. 124, 42 Stat. 220), now found in section 582 of title 18 of the Code of Laws of the United States of America, is as follows: "Provided, however, That in offenses involving the defrauding or attempts to defraud the United States or any agency thereof, whether by conspiracy or not, and in any manner, and now indictable under any existing statutes, the period of limitation shall be six years. This section shall apply to acts, offenses, or transactions where the existing statute of limitation had not yet fully run on November 17, 1921; but the proviso shall not apply to acts, offenses, or transactions which on that day were already barred by the provisions of existing laws."

The period of six years in reference to war cases has now passed. The war frauds are cleaned up by this time. The purpose of this is very clear. One witness in a case which is coming up for trial in the District of Columbia before long refuses to testify, on the ground that he may incriminate himself, and in order to take that immunity from him and compel him to testify, this amendment is necessary.

Mr. SCHAFER. If what the gentleman says is correct, that the six years has run in all of those cases, has it not also run against this witness in the Teapot Dome case? Here is what I have been considering, and, perhaps, the gentleman can clear it up: During the last session of Congress I made several speeches and put into the RECORD clear and convincing evidence, obtained at considerable expense, showing conclusively that there was a conspiracy on the part of Government officials and others to loot the alien property. I have not had opportunity to have that investigating resolution adopted, and I believe that a new Congress after election may look at that resolution with a favorable light. I do not want to approve of any legislation that will permit those crooks to go without being brought to trial.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. As I understand it, these cases were committed before 1920?

Mr. SCHAFER. Oh, no; some of them in 1924.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If those people defrauded the Government, they would come within the six-year period.

Mr. SCHAFER. But with this bill they would only have three years.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. That is true. I do not believe alien property cases come within the scope of the 1921 amendment. Does the gentleman want to assume the responsibility of extending immunity to a recalcitrant witness who will not testify in one of the most important cases which the Government is going to try?

Mr. SCHAFER. Oh, in order to get one witness I do not like to let a dozen or a hundred crooks go who robbed the Government through the alien property.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. If anyone has defrauded the Government in cases arising out of the war, if he has not already been indicted, there is not much chance of indicting him now.

Mr. SCHAFER. Why is there not, if there was a conspiracy in 1924 and 1925?

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Oh, we tried a case in New York City only a few weeks ago, I think it was in September or October. It was a clear-cut case where the Government was defrauded of three or four hundred thousand dollars, and yet the jury would not convict because so much time had elapsed.

Mr. SCHAFER. I believe that if these cases to which I refer were brought before a jury the jury would convict, and I will assume the responsibility. I am not going to permit a lot of crooks to have the statute of limitations run in their favor in order to get just one man. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am afraid the gentleman is doing more damage in one direction than he realizes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

BATTLE OF PERRYVILLE

The next business on the Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 48) to erect a tablet or marker to the memory of the Federal soldiers who were killed at the Battle of Perryville, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $5,000 be, and is hereby, authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of erecting a tablet or marker on the grounds of the Battle of Perryville, near Perryville, in Boyle County, Ky., in honor of the Federal soldiers who took part in that battle, and many of whom are now buried therein, said tablet or marker to be erected in a suitable location, having reference to the monument erected by the State of Kentucky to the Confederate dead that also lie buried therein. Said sum to be despensed by the Secretary of War, after he shall have approved the plans for said tablet or marker.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept, free of cost to the Government, a tract of land containing 4 acres, with the roadway 25 feet wide running from the east side of said tract to the Perryville turnpike, and upon presentation of good and perfect title to said tract of land the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to establish thereon a national cemetery.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the spelling of the word "dispensed," on page 2, line 10, be corrected.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COMMISSIONERS IN COURT OF CLAIMS

The next business on the Consent Calendar was H. J. Res. 82, to continue commissioners in the Court of Claims.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of the act approved February 24, 1925 (February 24, 1925, ch. 301, par. 1, 43 Stat. 964; United States Code, p. 899, sec. 269), providing for commissioners in the Court of Claims, their appointment, powers, and procedure, be, and the same are hereby, continued in full force and effect for the term of five years from the date of the approval of this joint resolution.

The resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

HOUSE OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, at the close of the last Congress the House passed a resolution directing the interim Committee on Accounts to make a survey of the employees and services of the House for the purpose of making any corrections, equalizing salaries, and abolishing useless positions. This committee has labored during the summer and fall and has presented here a report. We worked without any desire to favor anybody, but simply to carry out the desires and wishes of the House. Now, for the purpose, perhaps, of making our work intelligible to Members of the House, so that they will know what we have done, I am making this statement. We have no pride of authorship, no desire to separate anybody from his position, but we appreciate that the desire of the House is to have the House organization work efficiently and economically.

We abolished 22 positions. Only 2 of them might be called major positions.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I have only 15 minutes.

Mr. BYRNS. Does the gentleman propose to call up this resolution?

Mr. MACGREGOR. That will be determined later. I am making a statement under unanimous consent.

Mr. BYRNS. I want to suggest to the gentleman that a resolution of this importance ought not to be called up until after allowing opportunity for Members to look into it and understand it. I hope the gentleman will let it go over until after the holidays.

Mr. MACGREGOR. There seems to be a misunderstanding of some Members of the House as to what we are trying to do.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. You are taking my time——

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman is taking the time of the House. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I may not be able to explain it in the time allotted to me.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman could get 15 minutes additional if he wished it. This bill of the gentleman's is too important a matter to take up to-day under suspension of rules. This proposition will take from the House post office two needed employees over there. The gentleman's report says that there are three forwarding clerks, and I happen to know there are only two. There is a mistake in that respect.

The House Postmaster has given the best service in that office that has ever been given Members of Congress since I have been here. Now, I do not think the House is going to vote to cripple the splendid service given by this office. I am as strong for economy as anyone, but I am for sane economy.

Mr. MACGREGOR. It is no baby of mine, it is the House's. In the office of the Clerk we abolish three clerks of $2,020 each. We find no necessity for the expense. Over in the House Office Building is a library which probably most Members of the House did not know anything about. There are three employees connected with that library. We propose to abolish the House end library and keep the reference room adjacent to the floor of the House and appoint a librarian to take care of that. In the Doorkeeper's office we investigated the folding room and made inquiry, and there are five clerks keeping records in the folding room. We considered that number too many, so we have taken out the office of the superintendent of the folding room and placed it in charge of the very efficient foreman of the folding room. There are 31 folders in the House Office Building. We have reduced the number to 25 and taken 1 of the folders who is now carried on the roll as a folder, and who acts as a bookkeeper, and created for him the position of bookkeeper.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Allow me to present this. In the document room there are nine assistants in that work, and we have taken out one assistant and given the remainder part of the compensation. In the office of the Sergeant at Arms we have abolished the office of Deputy Sergeant at Arms, whose sole duty is to put the mace up and down.

We have also abolished a pair clerk and a messenger. There is a Deputy Sergeant at Arms in charge of the pairs and there is a pair clerk and messenger, and also a pair clerk and messenger among the minority employees, so that there are four employees to take care of pairs, which appeals to us as being entirely too many. So we have taken off one on the Republican side and one on the Democratic side. We have abolished the position of stenographer and typewriter in the Sergeant at Arms' office, for which he has no use.

In the postmaster's office we have taken off, as the gentleman from Texas says, two messengers. We were informed by the postmaster, as I remember the testimony, that there were three persons engaged in forwarding mail, and we could not see why there should be so many persons engaged in forwarding mail, and thought that one person could handle it, so that we have cut off two.

In the list of special minority employees we have abolished the position held by the late Joel Grayson, because that position can not be filled and there is now no Joel Grayson. There was only one Joel Grayson and there is nobody to take his place.

We have also abolished the position of clerk to the majority leader. At the present time the clerk to the majority is acting with the Clerk of the House, and the work of clerk to the majority leader is being done by Mrs. Donnelly, who was originally appointed under a special resolution, she having formerly been clerk to Mr. Mann. We have taken off the assistant pair clerk on the minority side and we have abolished the clerk and janitor of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, because that committee has been abolished. We have abolished 22 positions and created 6, the positions created being clerk to the Doorkeeper, assistant clerk to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, the clerk to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the janitor to the Commtitee on World War Veterans' Legislation, and janitor to the Committee on Education.

Mr. BLANTON. Right there will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the use of having all these colored janitors sitting out in the hall in front of the doors of offices in the Capitol and House Office Building? The gentleman by his bill proposes to increase their salaries to $190 each per month. I have been here 11 years. I have never found any use for it. What is the use of continuing that archaic, expensive custom that ought to have been done away with long ago?

Mr. MACGREGOR. The gentleman is probably right, but you can not do all this in one swallow. Most all of these janitors are really messengers.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but they sit out in the hall and do nothing.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. The report says that the library in the House Office Building is seldom used.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Right there, where did you get the report? I have not been able to get it. I sent out for it, and they said they were all gone.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am one of the Members who are compelled to use the library.

Mr. MACGREGOR. It would not be any great effort for you to walk over to the Library of Congress.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. But we find quicker service in the House Office Building. I have to consult books there.

Mr. MACGREGOR. That can very readily be handled under the Library of Congress, and there is no use in having five people over in this moribund library here with nothing to do.

Mr. LAGUARDIA. I am interested in that. When we send over there for books, they ought to send them over.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I omitted to say that in the office of the Doorkeeper we have 17 laborers who are supposed to be janitors. We also have 8 cloakroom men who are supposed to be janitors. There has been an entire lack of discipline in regard to the janitor force, and for the purpose of efficiency we have reduced the number of laborers in that class to 12, and placed them under the direction of the chief janitor, under rules and regulations to be provided by the Committee on Accounts, which will enforce discipline. Five of these 17 we find to be old employees who have been here for a long period of years, running up as high as 50 years, and we have placed them on what might be called a retired list.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an inquiry there?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. What has the committee done with this large number of clerks who for nine months previous to the meeting of Congress on the first Monday of December were carried on the pay roll as clerks to committees when no such committees existed, since they were not elected by Congress? Do you keep up that practice and carry clerks for four months or nine months during the recess between terms of Congress? Do you keep them on the pay roll acting as clerks or janitors to some Members?

Mr. MACGREGOR. That is a custom that has continued for a number of years. They used to be appointed as session clerks, but in recent years they have been provided for as annual clerks.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Can the gentleman tell us of any service that has been rendered by these clerks during the nine months when Congress was not in existence?

Mr. BLANTON. They mail out Republican campaign speeches.

Mr. SNELL. All sorts of inquiries come there during vacation from Members of Congress, and they are kept there to attend to that kind of work.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. As the gentleman intimates, there should be a few of those clerks to committees, but that might be arranged for at the end of a Congress. But here there are all those clerks to committees which go out of existence at the end of a session.

Mr. SNELL. I speak from my own observation.

Mr. LEAVITT. I can speak for the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HUDSPETH. How much do you expect to save by this resolution?

Mr. MACGREGOR. We expected to save $50,000; but now it is down to $10,000.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Where do you apply that saving?

Mr. MACGREGOR. We increase the compensation in the case of 22 employees in the Clerk's office and 35 in the Doorkeeper's office, 1 in the Sergeant at Arms' office, 3 in the Postmaster's office, 7 special and minority employees, 41 committee clerks, 12 assistant committee clerks, and 32 janitors or messengers. We have increased the compensation of 153 employees.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Is the gentleman here presenting a report from the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. MACGREGOR. We are presenting the report of the interim Committee on Accounts, which was authorized under the resolution adopted on March 3, at the close of the last session.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes.

Mr. ALMON. Will there be any opportunity to amend this resolution, or is it the intention to bring it up under suspension of the rules?

Mr. MACGREGOR. The purpose was to bring it up under suspension of the rules.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the gentleman will not attempt to do that to-day, for under suspension the bill could not be amended in any particular, and unless it is amended it should not pass. I regret to oppose any bill proposed by our good friend from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR], for we all on both sides of the aisle like him, and we would rather be with him than against him; but his bill does great injustice to both the post office and the document room, and must be changed.

Mr. CANNON. What is the number of the resolution appointing the interim Committee on Accounts?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I think 453.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS. This resolution has only become available in the last hour or so. I just saw a copy of it myself a moment ago, and I have been told by several Members it has not been available before and had not been printed. Does not the gentleman believe that the consideration of a resolution covering so many employees ought to be deferred until Members can look into it? I hope the gentleman will not undertake to press it to-day.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I am not pressing it now. I am simply trying to explain it.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I simply want to ask why a member of the Committee on Accounts, the gentleman from Missouri, has to ask the chairman of the Committee on Accounts a question about this resolution?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Because the gentleman from Missouri does not understand the situation. This was the interim Committee on Accounts, which exists from the time one Congress dies until the commencement of another.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Then the gentleman from Missouri was not a member of the interim committee?

Mr. MACGREGOR. No; he was not.

Mr. GALLIVAN. That is a good answer. May I ask the gentleman one more question?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Is it not a fact that this resolution was not available until two hours ago?

Mr. HUDSPETH. It is not available now.

Mr. GALLIVAN. I understand the resolution is not available to all Members even now.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I yield to the gentleman for the purpose of answering the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. UNDERHILL. It is not the desire of the committee, against the wishes of the House, to bring this matter up to-day or before the holidays, but the object was that the House should not be successfully lobbied between now and the time it does come up. That is the reason we tried to bring it up to-day. There was no attempt on the part of the committee to accomplish a reform. That was not the idea. There was no attempt on the part of the committee to consider economy. That was not the idea. The purpose of this bill is to increase efficiency, improve morale, and accord justice to the employees of the House. There is not a single Member who will be deprived of one single convenience, comfort, or necessity under the provisions of this bill. That is the whole proposition, and the chairman of the committee is trying to explain to you that although the bill seems to carry a lot of discharges that in reality it only carries 16 discharges. In addition to that, salaries which almost every Member of this House has been importuning the Committee on Accounts to increase have been increased in the lower brackets and justice has been done to a lot of hard-working employees of this House.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman states that he proposes to move to suspend the rules. Is he presenting this as a report of the committee for consideration by the House, or is this merely preliminary to asking unanimous consent to move to suspend the rules?

Mr. MACGREGOR. This is a unanimous-consent request to explain the report and the resolution.

Mr. CANNON. The matter is not then before the House?

Mr. MACGREGOR. No; except as a matter of explanation; that is all.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Will the gentleman tell us who comprised this interim committee?

Mr. MACGREGOR. The gentleman's colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. UNDERHILL]——

Mr. GALLIVAN. I have not the slightest doubt of that when I see this kind of a bill.

Mr. MACGREGOR (continuing). The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. GILBERT] and myself.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Is it the gentleman's contention that this is a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. MACGREGOR. No; I am not presenting it as a privileged report. I am simply giving information under unanimous consent.

Mr. SINNOTT. Then the gentleman does not expect to present it as a privileged report?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I do not claim that it is privileged.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. I find the bill comes from the Committee on Accounts and not from any interim committee.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Which bill?

Mr. GALLIVAN. I am asking this as a parliamentary inquiry. I do not expect the gentleman who is trying to answer me to be Speaker of the House for quite a while. I am submitting the parliamentary inquiry, Is this a report from an interim committee or from the Committee on Accounts? The gentleman who has the floor says it is a report from the interim committee.

Mr. MACGREGOR. It is.

Mr. GALLIVAN. But House Resolution 59 says, "From the Committee on Accounts."

Mr. MACGREGOR. The resolution is introduced by myself. It has been referred to the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. GALLIVAN. Then it is not a report of an interim committee?

Mr. MACGREGOR. What—the resolution?

Mr. GALLIVAN. The resolution now before us.

Mr. MACGREGOR. No; it does not have to be.

Mr. GALLIVAN. May I ask if the Committee on Accounts has reported the resolution?

Mr. MACGREGOR. It has not.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me a moment?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. It is very clear that the matter the gentleman is discussing ought not to be voted upon to-day, and I think the membership can count confidently upon its not being considered to-day. It does seem to me, however, that it is well the gentleman should explain his resolution, and for the purpose of explanation I think, perhaps, if the gentleman were not interrupted he would be able to do it better, if he be not constantly interrupted. As it is not going to be considered to-day, I hope the membership will allow the gentleman in the remaining part of his time to explain his proposition, because if it can stand on its merits we wish to adopt it in due time, and if it can not then we can drop it.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I do not yield now. I hope the gentleman will let me get through my remarks.

Mr. DOWELL. I want to ask the floor leader a question, if I may. I simply want to know what will be the parliamentary situation. Is this bill to go to the Committee on Accounts and be considered by that committee or is it to be considered by the House?

Mr. TILSON. I understand the resolution has been referred to the Committee on Accounts, but to-day it is being discussed and explained. Nothing is to be done about it now, however. No motion has been made and none can be made unless the Speaker recognizes the gentleman to suspend the rules, which is the only way it can be brought up now.

Mr. DOWELL. That answers my question.

Mr. MACGREGOR. When interrupted I was at the point in the bill with respect to committee clerks.

There are 44 committees of the House. We have increased the compensation of the clerks of all the committees except four—the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Accounts, the Committee on Claims, and the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

We have placed the committees in classes according to the way in which, in our humble judgment, they ought to be arranged. We have placed them in six classes, the Appropriations Committee, of course, occupying No. 1, and the Committees on the Judiciary, Ways and Means, and Interstate and Foreign Commerce, No. 2, and so on down the line.

We have increased the compensation of the clerks of these three committees from $3,300 to $3,600.

In the next line we have raised them from $2,880 to $3,000; 11 we have raised from $2,360 to $2,500; and 10 from $2,360 to $2,400.

There are 22 committees having assistant clerks and we have raised 10 of them. Most of them we considered had sufficient compensation for assistant clerks. The general raise has been for those getting $1,520. whom we have raised to $1,650.

We have sought to follow out the wishes of the House. We have done this, as I have said, without consideration for any person or whom it was hitting; but simply to make this House function in the way we think you want it to function. We have given you the result of our work and trust it will meet finally with your approval. I do not myself want to cram anything down the throats of the Members. I want them to use their calm, cool, and dispassionate judgment and act only according to the dictates of their consciences, and not because they are besieged by a lot of those who are personally interested.

SECTION 1044 OF THE REVISED STATUTES

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill (S. 1387) amending section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act approved November 17, 1921 (c. 124, 42 Stat. L. 220), the gentleman from Wisconsin, who objected, having withdrawn his objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1044 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by the act approved November 17, 1921 (ch. 124, 42 Stat. L. 220), be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 1044. No person shall be prosecuted, tried, or punished for any offense, not capital, except as provided in section 1046, unless the indictment is found, or the information is instituted, within three years next after such offense shall have been committed: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall apply to any offense for which an indictment has been heretofore found or an information instituted, or to any proceedings under any such indictment or information."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

HOUSE OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, service on a committee to abolish useless offices, to adjust duties and compenastions is never pleasant and seldom appreciated.

At the end of the last session the Speaker appointed two gentlemen of the majority and me to undertake this service. I will say for the other two members of the committee that they have served laboriously and sincerely. Our object was not economy so much as efficiency and equality. I will say, individually, that at no time did I consider the saving of any money where the convenience or comfort or the reasonable usefulness of any Member of the House would be impaired.

The main trouble now is a lack of responsive coordination on the part of the employees of the House, a lack of direction and control. For instance, one would think that the chief janitor had something to do with the janitors; but he has not.

One would reasonably suppose that a stenographer to the clerk was stenographer to the Clerk, but he is not; he is clerk over in the stationery room.

We have some barbers who can not barber, and a Member would run the risk of having his throat, rather than his whiskers, cut if he allowed him to shave him. [Laughter.] The reason why they are barbers on the pay roll is because they served as bodyguard to some Member in the Civil War. They have been here, some of them, for more than 40 years.

Personally I am not in favor of turning these old men out, and so we have provided a sort of place to take care of them; but they ought not to be barbers.

It was our purpose to get a more responsive service. Wherever there is a perfectly useless employee I say without hesitancy that we recommend the abolition of that office.

Take, for instance, the Deputy Sergeant at Arms, whose duty is merely to put up that mace and take it down, for which he receives around $2,800 a year, and who at the last session of Congress left for home before we adjourned and was not here to take it down and came near leaving us in session all summer. [Laughter.]

In all good faith I see no reason for continuing the office when there is the Sergeant at Arms to take down the mace.

Now, there is a minority employee whom we have recommended to be dismissed, and he happens to be one of my good personal friends among the minority employees. But there is no service for him to perform. That is Mr. Overstreet, a splendid gentleman and one of the two pair clerks for the minority. You also have two on the majority side, and so we recommend the dismissal of one on the majority and one on the minority side simply because there is no real work for them to do.

I want you gentlemen on the Democratic side to realize that to show the good faith of the gentleman on the majority side we Democrats get the best of it. It merely so happens; there was no politics in our report. An employee on the majority side is superintendent of the folding room, performing no service, at least none that can not be performed by the foreman of the folding room, whose salary is increased and who happens to be a Democrat.

Now, I know that the two Republicans would not have recommended that this position be abolished if the position had not been absolutely useless.

So far as the statement of the gentleman from Texas about the condition of the post office is concerned, why, of course, I would not interfere with the proper functioning of that office. We had an inspector from the Post Office Department go all through it. We introduced on the stand all individuals, gentlemen interested over there, to find out what these gentlemen were doing. They have three men over there doing one man's work, and we disposed of two of them.

Mr. LINTHICUM. What disposition was made of the barbers?

Mr. GILBERT. We put the barbers under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Accounts. Somebody has to perform those duties, and I happen to occupy a place on that unenviable committee, but there is where it belongs.

Now, I have no prejudice in this matter at all. It is an unpleasant task. The House gave to the committee an unpleasant task and they have conscientiously performed it. It is back to you to say whether or not the House was indulging in a mere gesture.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILBERT. Certainly.

Mr. MAPES. On page 6 of the resolution introduced by the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Accounts, the last paragraph places the laborers appointed by the Doorkeeper under the jurisdiction of the committee through the chief janitor "and such other attendants as may be appointed upon the roll of the Doorkeeper." What employees did the committee intend to embrace by the language "such other attendants"? Is it intended by that language to place all the appointees upon the roll of the Doorkeeper under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. MACGREGOR. There are two on the roll of the Clerk who are in the bathroom and we desire they should go on the roll of the Doorkeeper.

Mr. MAPES. And this language, "such other attendants," applies only to the two bathroom attendants?

Mr. MACGREGOR. Yes.

Mr. GILBERT. It is impossible, of course, to make any adjustment that will be satisfactory to every Member.

I say frankly that this recommendation of ours is not exactly as I would have it. There are some here that I think, under our resolution, are paid too much and some too little; but you can not meet the mind of every Member on those matters. On the whole, a great improvement will be made in service. a more equitable pay provided, and a saving of $17,000 a year effected if the report be adopted. It is as good as three conscientious, hard-working Members can make it. Without throwing ourselves any encomium, I believe any other report by any other Members would be found to contain as many objectionable features as this probably contains.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am for sane economy as much as anyone in this House, but while this Committee on Accounts is seeking to save $10,000, or even as the gentleman first supposed, $50,000, if they had put in the same time on some of the main bureaus or independent offices of this Government, and used the same energy, they could have saved not $10,000 or $50,000, but $50,000,000, and with careful work they could save two or three hundred million dollars a year instead of this paltry little sum proposed by them at the expense of good service. We want service in our post office, and we are getting the very best that is possible. We have one of the finest fellows there as Postmaster in the House Office Building that you could find anywhere in the United States. He is giving the service. Oh, he is a Republican and I am a Democrat, but he gives everybody good service, Democrat and Republican alike; and he ought to have every single facility given him that he needs for good service. Yet our committee is proposing to take two of his needed employees away from him.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment.

Mr. UNDERHILL. No; yield now.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I will yield now to my friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. UNDERHILL. The Postmaster is all the gentleman says he is. He has three forwarding clerks, one his wife and one his son.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that. If the floor leader of this House [Mr. TILSON] will ring up the Postmaster, he will find out that he has but two forwarding clerks, and only two, and has never had more than two. The gentleman from Massachusetts is mistaken about that.

Mr. UNDERHILL. He gave us that information himself.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not care where the gentleman got the information. I know a little something about his personnel, for I have investigated it myself, as I have carefully investigated all employees of this Government, and he has only two, and if the gentleman is wrong in his contention in that respect he may be wrong with respect to all the balance of his bill which he is seeking to bring up under suspension of the rules. [Applause.] I want economy as much as anybody, but I want sane economy. I sincerely hope that if the gentleman does bring this resolution up under suspension of the rules, in which case we would not have a chance to amend it, that the House will vote it down, and make the committee bring in its bill here under the rules so that the membership of the House may not be forced to put their stamp of approval, but may amend it as they see fit. This is too early in the session of Congress for such bills to come up under suspension of the rules. There is plenty of time in the closing hours two years from now for rules to be suspended and bills passed in that manner. We ought not to permit this bill to come up here under suspension of the rules, and I do not think the Speaker of this House will permit it, although this committee has great influence from a party organization standpoint.

What was the purpose of this original resolution to begin with, when first proposed in the Sixty-ninth Congress? It was to do justice to the House employees, and to all of them. It was to grant a proper raise to all of them in salary, which they have not had in 20 years. We have had our salaries raised and others have had their salaries raised, but the employees of this House have not had a raise in 20 years, except the war bonus of $240 to those getting under $2,000. That was the purpose of the original resolution, and yet that purpose has been thwarted, because in this proposed bill in no particular has there been a proper raise in the salaries of the House employees. Oh, some $20 has been granted here and there to a few favorites, such as the colored janitors who sit in front of office doors all day and do nothing, who by this bill are to draw $190 per month, but I am talking about the rank and file of them.

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. MACGREGOR. I think the gentleman ought to withdraw that statement about favorites. We have had no favorites in this matter.

Mr. BLANTON. Then why has the gentleman not raised all of them instead of just a few? [Applause.]

Mr. MACGREGOR. Because we have taken those that we thought ought to have raises.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the gentleman has shown favoritism.

Mr. MACGREGOR. The gentleman can not say that.

Mr. BLANTON. Whenever you raise some and forget to raise the others, I think that favoritism is shown. [Applause.]

Mr. MACGREGOR. That is a bad construction of the gentleman's mind.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I hope that this resolution will not be called up to-day under suspension. If it is called up, we must gather enough strength to kill it; and then we can later amend it properly under the rules. I will procure from Postmaster Collier the facts about his office and attach same hereto.

THE REAL FACTS ABOUT POSTMASTER COLLIER'S OFFICE

MY DEAR POSTMASTER COLLIER: In debate on the floor a few minutes ago it was stated by members of the Committee on Accounts that you now have three forwarding clerks, and that your son also is employed. I announced that you had only two forwarding clerks. I would appreciate your answering the following questions, to wit:

First. Have you two or three forwarding clerks?

Second. I have been under the impression that your son, Wilson F. Collier, is attending a law university at night and needs to work during the day, and that through the kindness of my colleagues, Congressman GRIEST and Congressman MCLAUGHLIN, who are on the patronage committee, they placed your son on temporary employment, and that he has been doing the heavy work on the outside, handling the heavy mail and heavy boxes on the loading platform. Please advise me whether my above impression about your son is correct or not.

Third. Please advise me whether taking the two employees away from you, as is proposed, would cripple your needed force and hamper you in giving the splendid service we are all now receiving?

Your friend,

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

POST OFFICE,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 19, 1927.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: I answer your questions just received, as follows, to wit:

First. I have only two forwarding clerks and have never had more than two.

Second. Your impression about my son as stated is true and correct.

Third. Yes; absolutely.

Very truly yours,

FRANK W. COLLIER.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERHILL. Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to inject myself into this debate, because it is not the time to discuss the merits or demerits of the resolution; but I can not let the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] go unchallenged, although I believe that most of the Members do not take much stock in it. However, there was some applause when he suggested favoritism was shown by this committee, that we had raised the salaries of some and not others. We have raised all of the low-paid employees. We have raised all of the hard-worked employees. We have tried to get rid of a few loafers. These are the facts. As far as the post office is concerned, we did as we did in every other department.

Mr. SCHAFER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. No. We called the head of the department in before us, and he gave us a list of those he had on his pay roll.

We found in this schedule there were three persons, two men and one woman, designated as forwarding clerks. We asked the postmaster how long they were employed as forwarding clerks.

He said one during the session, and during vacation he kept three. We asked why, and he said because they had to forward the Members' mail. We said, "What do you do with the other employees during the interim?" And he said, "They have their vacation." When we asked how long these vacations extended, he said that the time was divided up among the employees, and each man in the employ of the post office got, I think, a little over four months.

Now, we never asked a person what his politics were; we never asked who appointed him; whose particular pet he was. We just went through this thing in a businesslike way. There was no desire on the part of the committee—in spite of what the gentleman from Texas said—to play favorites or to bring about economy. That was not the idea; but because of favoritism, because of loafing, because of inefficiency, the morale of employees was destroyed and service was neglected.

Mr. SCHAFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. And those who were performing good work would ask why this one, a particular pet, was doing nothing. The law you passed that said that a certain employee should be assigned to certain duties and be on the pay roll for that purpose was being violated and said employee was hiding in some cubby-hole in the Capitol. There was no favoritism shown in any way, shape, or manner. We tried to give you something scientific, something honest, and something just. I desire to say that if you will study this you will not find a single, solitary personal consideration in it; and if you will be as square and honest as the committee was, you will recommend and indorse it yourself.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. As far as the figures are concerned, we did not increase the salaries of those earning $4,000, $5,000, and $6,000. We have increased those which were below $1,200, a pittance of $1,000 or less a year, the thoughtless Government paying its employees less than a living wage, less than an existence wage, so we raised every one of those up to a point where, at least, they could have sufficient income for maintenance of life if not life's luxuries.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERHILL. No; I will not yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I yielded to the gentleman.

Mr. UNDERHILL. I know, but not very willingly.

Mr. BLLANTON. But I did yield.

Mr. UNDERHILL. There is something I want to impress upon the minds of Members for a particular reason. Every man who has lost his job has some friend in the House. Everyone who has been removed—there are 22; but there are six other places which we created. Such employee is going to try to hold his job, and you are going to be solicited and importuned in his behalf. It is not a cheerful or enviable position for one to be in. I know it, and it is pretty hard to turn men down. If you are going to be square about it, you have to treat all alike, and ask yourselves, Is the service necessary, or is it just a job for some favorite?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

APPOINTMENT ON A COMMITTEE

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and request its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 61

Resolved, That O. J. KVALE, Representative from the State of Minnesota, be, and he is hereby, elected a member of the standing committee of the House on the Territories.

The resolution was agreed to.

PERMISSION TO SIT DURING THE RECESS

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I am requested by Mr. CURRY, chairman of the Committee on the Territories, to ask permission of the House that the Committee on the Territories may sit during the recess of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. It is only during the Christmas recess. As I understand, it is not a general request.

Mr. DOWELL. It is only during the Christmas holidays.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes on the matter under discussion.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I shall have to object to opening up this matter again. I am sorry the gentleman from Missouri could not get in. We have already wasted an hour in discussing a matter that is not coming up to-day, so for the protection of the other Members I must object to any further discussion of this matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TILSON. I object.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 278) to amend section 5 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes," approved May 25, 1926.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana moves to suspend the rules and pass House bill No. 278.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this is not a day when the Speaker is authorized to recognize gentlemen to move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair disagrees with the gentleman as to that.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I will withdraw that statement. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 278) to amend section 5 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes," approved May 25, 1926

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 5 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes," approved May 25, 1926, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this act the sum of $250,000,000, in addition to the amount authorized in section 3 hereof, is hereby authorized to be appropriated, but under this authorization and from appropriations (exclusive of appropriations made for 'remodeling and enlarging public buildings'), heretofore made for the acquisition of sites for, or the construction, enlarging, remodeling, or extension of, public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department, not more than $35,000,000 in the aggregate shall be expended annually (except that any part of the balance of such sum of $35,000,000 remaining unexpended at the end of any year may be expended in any subsequent year without reference to this limitation): Provided, That such amount as is necessary, not to exceed $50,000,000 of the total amount authorized to be expended under the provisions of this act, shall be available for projects in the District of Columbia, and not more than $10,000,000 thereof shall be expended annually (except that any part of the balance of such sum of $10,000,000 remaining unexpended at the end of any year may be expended in any subsequent year without reference to this limitation): Provided, That at least one-fifth of the expenditures outside of the District of Columbia during the fiscal year 1927 shall be for the buildings heretofore authorized, and at least one-fifth of the expenditures for the fiscal year 1928 and at least one-fifth of the expenditures for the fiscal year 1929 shall be for a like purpose, unless a less amount shall be necessary to complete all of such buildings: Provided further, That expenditures outside the District of Columbia under the provisions of this section shall not exceed the sum of $5,000,000 annually in any one of the States, Territories, or possessions of the United States."

(b) The last paragraph of such section 5 is amended by striking out "$150,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$250,000,000."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LANHAM. I am the ranking minority member on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and favor this legislation. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY] is also a member of the committee. He is opposed to the legislation. By reason of his opposition to the legislation would he not thereby have a prior right to demand a second?

The SPEAKER. In certain cases he would. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the bill has never been before the House except under suspension of the rules, and the fact that the Members are not acquainted with the provisions of it, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi suggests the absence of a quorum. The Chair will count.

Mr. BUSBY. Temporarily, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and thirty-two Members are present—a quorum. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ELLIOTT] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there is a similar bill at the desk to come up, I ask unanimous consent that the time to be taken on this bill be limited to 40 minutes on a side. In view of that, I do not propose to ask for a second on the second bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 40 minutes to a side. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 40 minutes and the gentleman from Mississippi 40 minutes.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this is a bill which has for its purpose an increase of $100,000,000 in the authorization for the construction of public buildings in the country at large. The companion bill, upon which it is understood the gentleman from Mississippi will not demand a second, is a bill with reference to the District of Columbia, authorizing an appropriation for the purchase of the property commonly known as the triangle property, located between the south side of Pennsylvania Avenue and the north side of Maryland Avenue. In the last session of Congress these two bills were combined and passed this body by more than a two-thirds vote, but failed of consideration in the other body of the Congress. Consequently they come before us again at this time for action.

This particular bill now under consideration, making an increase of $100,000,000 in the authorization for the country at large, is important by reason of the fact that it increases the annual appropriation from $25,000,000 a year to $35,000,000 a year. If enacted, the building projects which will be submitted to us under the existing law at this session of Congress will be predicated upon $35,000,000 as an annual expenditure instead of $25,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. How much will be the expenditure outside of the District of Columbia?

Mr. LANHAM. All of this additional appropriation is to be spent outside of the District of Columbia. The sum of $10,000,000 will be added to the annual amount already authorized to be expended outside of the District of Columbia. There will be, then, $20,000,000 annually for new construction in the country at large, $5,000,000 for the country at large with reference to those projects which were authorized in 1913 and never completed, and $10,000,000 for construction in the District of Columbia; in other words, $25,000,000 for the country at large and $10,000,000 for the District.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Covering a period of how many years, I will ask my colleague?

Mr. LANHAM. It covers a period of several years under the existing law, but the amount for the country will get larger as the District projects are taken up.

If I may continue for a few minutes, I think I may anticipate a good many of your questions and be able to make a more connected statement. We have had practically no construction in this country by the Federal Government for many years. There is great need for it. There is scriptural authority for the saying that "Hope deferred maketh the heart sick." Of course, the people of the Nation, anxious for the public buildings which are so much needed, have long cherished a hope they have felt to be reasonable, but their projects have been deferred and the obligation is upon us to see that they are deferred no longer than is absolutely necessary.

We decided the matter of policy in a former Congress. I was opposed to the change of policy, and labored as hard and as earnestly as I could in my opposition to the adoption of the policy which now exists, but that policy was ratified by the Congress by an overwhelming vote, and it stands now as our policy. Any effort to abolish it at this time, it seems to me, would simply tend to continue the static condition that we now have in Federal building construction.

What is the object of this bill? It is to accelerate the construction by increasing the amount of money which may be used in the country at large. Under its provisions a greater number of buildings may be built the first year, and we shall be enabled to get more rapidly the erection of the many buildings that are required in this country. I hope the limit of the authorization for annual appropriations may be extended as soon as we can determine whether or not those in the Federal Government who have in charge the construction of buildings can use a larger amount.

I confess that the $100,000,000 additional provided for in this bill will not give us all the money which is needed for Federal construction in this country, but it is, gentlemen, a step in the right direction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LEAVITT). The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. When this legislation was up last year there were assurances made by Mr. Wetmore, of the Treasury Department, Governor Bartlett, in the Post Office Department, by the chairman of the committee [Mr. ELLIOTT], and the distinguished gentleman, as ranking minority member [Mr. LANHAM], to certain Congressmen with respect to a certain building program. May we rely on those assurances concerning this bill?

Mr. LANHAM. I will say to my colleague that any assurance I am able to give I hope any man can rely upon at any time. Under the existing policy of the law I have to rely, like everyone else, upon those who are in charge of the construction.

Mr. BLANTON. Some of us are relying on those selfsame promises. The assurance I have had from the four authorities mentioned that buildings would be constructed at Sweetwater and Coleman, Tex., on sites there which the Government has owned for years causes me to support this bill.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. I understand this is a five-year program, is it not?

Mr. LANHAM. It is at present. It may require an extension or it may be, by efficiency of operation, that we can increase the annual appropriations and do the work faster and be able to complete the entire building program necessary for the country within five years. I hope we may.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. Can those vested with authority to enter into contracts for construction contract in advance of one year?

Mr. LANHAM. There is a provision in this bill which is before the House that the amounts not used in any one year may be available in the following year, carrying over the appropriations, so that they will really have the effect of being continuing appropriations.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. But they could not contract for four and five years in advance.

Mr. LANHAM. I do not think they can contract far in advance for construction which is not covered by the appropriations made.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. For that year?

Mr. LANHAM. As I have indicated, the unexpended balance of an annual appropriation may be carried over and made available in the following fiscal year.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Relative to promises, my colleague is on the Public Buildings Committee, and he has watched the procedure. Have they not proceeded so far in pretty much of a businesslike manner. I did not get in under the wire myself, I will state to my colleague; but have they not proceeded in a businesslike way?

Mr. LANHAM. I think they have. Here is the situation, gentlemen: There are more buildings necessary in this country than money will be provided for even with the passage of the bill which is now before us, but the passage of this bill is a step in the direction of making available enough money to take care of all these projects, and I am hoping that in the next session of Congress, and perhaps even in this session of Congress, we may take another step in that same direction. If we do not begin the necessary construction, we shall remain in a static state, with no buildings whatever. The people are clamoring for them. With them it is largely tweedledum and tweedledee as to any academic discussion we may have here with reference to policy, that matter having now been settled and determined. It is my purpose to try to accelerate the building of the necessary Federal structures all over this country and to stimulate those in charge of the actual construction to do as much in any one year as they can. We can likely tell from this initial year whether or not it would be wise from a practical standpoint to increase the annual amount of appropriations hereafter. I hope we may, and that we may get to all of these projects in which we are interested as rapidly as possible. However, gentlemen, we ought to start getting to them, and that is what is now proposed.

Mr. ESLICK. Is it not true that the present appropriation of $100,000,000, added to the original $100,000,000, will take care of only 178 places already having Federal buildings and 58 additional buildings, and that by taking that number, 236, from 2,317 places it leaves 2,081 places in the United States that have a postal revenue of from $10,000 to $900,000 yearly not provided for in this bill?

Mr. LANHAM. That may be true. I will not dispute the gentleman's figures, because I do not have the figures before me. But this bill starts Federal construction in this country in some places, at least, and it is conceded that it is needed in the cases cited. It may not start it at your place or my place, and there will be many places that will still need it. But let us start with our program, build all we can, and see how much those in charge can expend efficiently in any year. If it be shown they can expend more, let us increase the authorization and get all of this needed work done as rapidly as possible.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Does not the passage of this bill mean this: That the amount expended for public buildings in the country in each year will be doubled, whereas it would be only half that amount if we do not pass it?

Mr. LANHAM. That is practically so. I am hoping, gentlemen, that by the next session of Congress, when we get some of these public buildings started, we can see our way clear to increase the annual authorization so that we may get all of this Federal construction done just as rapidly as possible.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes.

Mr. COX. Considering the policy we have adopted, does not the hope of the country of ever getting public buildings depend on consideration being first given to those that present an emergency?

Mr. LANHAM. I think so; and, gentlemen, to state by way of opposition that much of this money will be placed in large cities which already have Federal buildings is beside the mark.

There are some cities under contemplation which have grown since they have had a Federal building from 25,000 population to 150,000 or 200,000 population, and certainly they must be more urgent cases, although they have an inadequate Federal building, than some town of 2,000 or 3,000 people where rented quarters may be occupied, temporarily, at least, without very serious inconvenience.

Our rent bill is mounting annually. For this very rental we can construct many buildings. Let us go ahead with the project and the program and get as many built as we possibly can, and increase the authorization as rapidly as we may in order that we may catch up with the requirements.

While I am on the floor, let me say one further word with reference to the companion bill to this one—the so-called triangle bill.

I think there is little, if any, opposition in this House to that bill. The Federal Government to-day has many of its departments in rented quarters, isolated here, there, and yonder.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LANHAM. And the great purpose of this companion bill is to carry out the L'Enfant plan and place in this triangle Federal departmental buildings like the Department of Commerce, the Department of Justice, and the Department of Labor, to get them out of rented quarters and to give us a civic center of our own buildings where we may obviate the payment of rent, where we may transact the public business with greater dispatch, and where we may have some architectural harmony and conformity among the structures and make this the great Capital that it should be.

Let me say that these buildings—the Commerce Department, the Justice Department, and the Labor Department—are not intrinsically mere District of Columbia buildings. They are buildings in which all the people of this country are interested. [Applause.]

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 20 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I come before you to talk again on the public buildings bill as a matter of principle. I want to say to you in the beginning that if the estimates that are before you, which are contained in the documents from the Treasury and Post Office Departments, are correct, I am taken care of to the extent of having one building designated to come out of the first $100,000,000, regardless of what becomes of you who are not designated.

But this does not satisfy me, because when I go into the history of the public-building programs of this country I find that the policy which we are now trying to adopt, the policy which prevailed in this country for almost 100 years, never did work and never did get results. It did not work then and it will not work now.

I take some passages from the speech of one of our colleagues, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR], in which he discusses somewhat the history of the public-building programs of the country. The gentleman tells us that until 1853 public building was done under the supervision of the President and under the supervision of the Treasury Department, and that during that time, a period of 64 years, there was a total of 23 post offices built and a total of all buildings, including quarantine and immigration stations of 56 places, and this was all that was done in the 64 years.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Is it not true that was due to the fact Congress had not appropriated the necessary money for the building of the different buildings?

Mr. BUSBY. I presume that is true.

Mr. WOODRUFF. And the fault was with Congress rather than with the method employed?

Mr. BUSBY. I am not advised on that, and I would not accept that theory of it, because seeing how slowly we have traveled during the six years I have been in Congress trying to get a building program on foot and being opposed by the administration, I would naturally come to the conclusion it was not because Congress was not willing to provide funds but because the administration could defer the building as it is doing now.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will my friend yield?

Mr. BUSBY. I yield.

Mr. HUDSPETH. As I understand it, the gentleman proposes under his bill that every Congressman have one building in his district; is that the gentleman's proposal?

Mr. BUSBY. I will answer that in this way——

Mr. HUDSPETH. If I have my friend's position correct, does the gentleman really expect to get such a bill through this Congress now or at any time in the future?

Mr. BUSBY. Not if we keep on in the way we are going now, taking "hopes deferred." We are very much like another expression from Pope—"hope springs eternal in the human breast; man never is but to be blessed"—and to you who, like my colleague and friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who has been made a couple of promises and who says he is still relying on those promises.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman, I am sure, will agree with me that there are places over the United States where it is imperative that public buildings be built.

Mr. BUSBY. Oh, certainly.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Then how are we going to get them built except through a bill of this character. Does the gentleman think there is any possibility of getting a measure through like the one the gentleman has in mind?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes, I do; if we will stiffen up like men and like true representatives of the people and say what we are going to do. Then there would be a chance and not otherwise [applause], because if you dillydally around here with an administration averse to the program, we will never get it in this way or in any other way, and I can prove this to you by the spokesmen from the departments who appeared at the hearing.

If you will now let me proceed for just a few moments I think I will come to the specific point we have before us, which is this particular bill.

I filed minority views on this question, and I venture to say not one Member out of twenty has had time to read this report, because it has been printed only a day or so.

In this document, Report No. 11, I point out the fact that it was provided by the act of May 25, 1926, that a survey of the needs of the country for public buildings be made by direction of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General. This survey was made and was presented to the House as Document No. 651, second session of the Sixty-ninth Congress, and was dated January 15, 1927. The report (p. 2) recites that it is presented as a—> preliminary report showing the minimum public-building needs of the country at the present time.

It also states (p. 3):

> It should be noted that the growth of the Postal and other services is so rapid that additional needs will develop during the period of the present building program to an extent which will greatly enlarge the figures presented in this report. The Postal Service doubles in about 10 years, and it is therefore obvious that with the present limitation of expenditures provided in the act there would be no possibility of the building program catching up with the public-building requirements of the country.

A summary of the things covered by this report (p. 3) discloses that notwithstanding the law only authorizes the expenditure of $115,000,000 for the country at large, estimates of buildings have been made totaling an expenditure of $199,128,000, as follows:

One hundred and seventy-nine cities that now have Federal buildings are to receive $167,850,500; 58 cities estimated for new buildings—most of which are required by section 3 in the act of May 25, 1926, providing for two buildings for each State—$8,477,500; marine hospitals and quarantine stations, $12,000,000; immigration stations, $1,100,000; and other buildings under the Treasury Department where no postal facilities are furnished, $9,700,000; making the total of $199,128,000 for which definite estimates have been made under the law that authorized an expenditure of only $115,000,000.

It is readily seen that the estimates submitted exceed by $84,128,000 the amount authorized to be expended.

The report referred to—Document 651—in the third division states that there are 799 cities where the postal receipts range from $20,000 per annum to more than $900,000 per annum "where no public buildings have ever been erected," and which cities are not estimated for in the proposed expenditures of $199,128,000, nor is it contemplated that they are to be considered in the seven-year building program being advocated by the administration. In addition to these 799 cities with postal receipts of from $20,000 to $900,000 per annum that are not to be cared for during the six to seven years covered by the proposed building program, there are 1,512 cities with postal receipts of from $10,000 to $20,000 per annum at the present time for which no estimates have been made and which are certainly not to be cared for in any contemplated building program. It is estimated that these 2,311 cities would require an expenditure of approximately $170,420,000 to supply them with appropriate Federal buildings; $199,128,000 covering the places estimated for, added to $170,420,000 to supply the needs of the places not estimated for, would make a total of $369,548,000 required for the public-building needs of the country at large.

In the estimates totaling $199,128,000 it is proposed to construct during the period of from six to seven years buildings in 58 cities that have never had Federal buildings. At the maximum amount of $35,000,000 that it is ultimately proposed shall be expended per annum for Federal buildings under House bill 278, known as the Reed bill, how long at that rate will it take the country to get relief from the great congestion in its mail quarters? I ask this question to disclose the utter impracticability of the methods we are proceeding on to attempt to furnish the country with the buildings it must have if it is to carry on the service of handling the mails and business through the mails for the people.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. I will.

Mr. ALLGOOD. Is it not a fact that there are 166 places owned by the Government in which there is no proper building?

Mr. BUSBY. That is true; many places have sites where it is not proposed to erect buildings on them, but they divert the funds to other centers where there are great needs; and there is great need, there can be no question about that.

Now, this document submitted by the Treasury Department in which places are estimated for totals $199,128,000. Suppose we pass the present bill. The money in it can not be reached before four years if we come to the maximum of $35,000,000. So I say there is no immediate need for further authorization, because we have authorizations for four years in advance.

Now, there is one helpful feature, and it is the only one in the bill, where we raise the limit of the annual amount to be spent from $25,000,000 to $35,000,000. But if we further entangle ourselves in following up these vague illusions of getting buildings under the present building policy, if we further authorize public buildings which can not be reached under five years, in years to come when we find that it is really impractical and impossible to proceed with this policy we will find it more difficult to extricate ourselves from the predicament. That is why I am against this bill as useless procedure.

If we are to pursue the "lump-sum" policy, we should pass a bill raising the limit of the annual expenditure from $25,000,000 to $50,000,000. That would not hurt anything, and before we expended the money authorized we could tell what kind of results we are going to get from the Treasury Department, for it would not then be hampered by unreasonable limitations.

Now, continuing the history of the public buildings, in 1902 the first "pork barrel bill," so-called, was passed by Congress because the Congress realized that they could not get results by depending on the departments; that favoritism of all sorts and kinds with promises and none of them kept was the rule and policy of the departments in following up legislation of this "lump-sum" class. I think I can demonstrate that by the official documents before I finish.

In 1902 Congress passed an omnibus building bill. It passed omnibus building bills each Congress until 1913, and practically all our public buildings were built during that period. That is about the only way we could get a public building; that is, by naming the places and amounts for buildings.

After 1913 we had no public building bill because of the war, and for 14 years we have gone along with practically no building. Our mails have increased something like 700 per cent in volume and our needs have increased accordingly. In many cities the Post Office Department is compelled to rent old store houses, and accommodations of that class, and that is where our mail is cared for and mail service rendered.

I am for taking care of this proposition in a straightforward manner. I think our country is financially able to build all the buildings which the United States needs in which to house and carry on its own business. Buildings totaling $199,000,000 are estimated for in document No. 651. The department estimates that it will take $170,000,000 to take care of the 2,311 places not mentioned in this estimate and not proposed to be cared for in this program. That will make $370,000,000 outside of the District of Columbia, and that is the present minimum needs of the country for public buildings.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I understand an appropriation of $25,000,000 is authorized to buy land for the so-called triangle.

Mr. BUSBY. That will come up in a few minutes from now. It is proposed to pass that bill to-day.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. But there will be no debate on it?

Mr. BUSBY. That is true.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Has any testimony been brought before the committee as to the aggregate assessed value of that triangle land?

Mr. BUSBY. Practically no testimony at all has been submitted to the committee regarding the triangle.

Mr. LANHAM. If the gentleman will yield, let me say that I have heard the statement made by those in authority that the assessed value of the property is a little in excess of $17,000,000 and that a part of that property which has been acquired recently for other purposes was acquired on condemnation proceedings at an advance of only 12 per cent over the assessed valuation of the property.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am glad to have that information.

Mr. BUSBY. That information is outside talk; that was not brought before the committee in a straightforward business way. The Public Building Committee reported that bill without any hearings at this Congress, and with practically no information in the way of hearings at the last Congress.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I am wondering why the committee should favor an appropriation of $25,000,000 without the taking of some testimony.

Mr. BUSBY. I can not understand that. I am wondering why they do not open the proposition up and bring it before the House without bringing it up under suspension of the rules, which prevents an opportunity to offer amendments or to say a word about an amendment; but I have gotten no answer to that as yet.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes.

Mr. GIBSON. I understand that the figures given out as the assessed valuation is the assessed valuation as it had been raised during the last year, and that the assessed valuation previous to last year was a little in excess of $13,000,000.

Mr. BUSBY. I thank the gentleman for the information. There are some items proposed for the District of Columbia. I am not opposed to that. The sum of those items is $50,000,000, contained in the act of May 25, 1926. There is $14,750,000 for the Memorial Bridge, and $25,000,000 that we propose to appropriate with which to buy the triangle. There is $5,500,000 that we appropriated recently to buy the land between the Capitol and the Union Station. There is $1,250,000 which we are spending for a site for the Supreme Court Building, and we propose to erect a building on that at an expense of $5,000,000. There is $20,000,000 expenditure for school buildings, and about one-third of that, or $7,000,000, is paid by the United States. That makes a total of $116,500,000 that we are spending in the District of Columbia. There is no limitation placed on any part of that expenditure, except on the $50,000,000 and the five-year school program, which shall extend over a period of five years. I am not complaining about that; but I do think that if we are so liberal locally we ought to recognize some of the obligations to the folks in our respective districts and care some for them. In mentioning these things I have not mentioned the arboretum or the Botanic Gardens, or the bathing beaches for the white and colored people, or the Center Market site and building, or the purchase of park grounds, all of which entail an expenditure of several million dollars more, and I venture to say that $125,000,000 will be spent in the District of Columbia while we are pinching the rest of the country because we are afraid to spend a little money for these things which have developed in your territory and mine.

The cry raised against a building bill that mentions items and limits the amounts of those items, is that it is a pork-barrel bill. I want to refute that proposition and show that there has never been a pork-barrel building bill in this country. There are 1,129 first-class post offices in the United States; 670 of those offices are located in Federal buildings and 459 first-class post offices have never had a Federal building. There are 3,419 second-class post offices in the United States, and only 515 of those offices are located in Federal buildings; 2,904 of them have never had a building erected for them. There are more than 11,103 third-class post offices in the United States and only 10 of them are located in Federal buildings. This, to my mind, refutes the cry that the country has gone to the bad because Congress has passed "another pork-barrel bill." It can not remain a pork-barrel bill, if so when it was passed, because our country is growing. Our cities are growing cities, and it is only good business to go into the heart of a growing city and select a block or half a block on which later to erect a Federal building. Our Government would save money in that way and be acting wisely as good business men should act. I know and you know a number of instances where a site was bought from 25 to 40 years ago which is worth more now than the amount that it would require to construct a modern post-office building to serve the city which has in most instances tripled in population since that time. I am in favor of the development of rivers and harbors; but if you have a river and spend so much on it this year, that river will remain the same size, and there might be such a thing as a "pork-barrel" proposition with reference to rivers and harbors, but not with reference to post-office buildings in cities.

RENTS PAID BY GOVERNMENT IN MILLIONS

Another important thing to take into consideration in determining the extent of a building program the country should undertake is the question of the millions of dollars being paid in rent by the Government for quarters in which to house its mail and other activities.

Mr. Garrard B. Winston, Undersecretary of the Treasury, stated in the hearings on H. R. 11791 of January 22, 1924 (p. 41), that—

> We are paying this year about $23,000,000 of rent outside the District of Columbia, and about $1,135,000 within the District.

Since that time it is very evident that the rent bill of the Government has tremendously increased, because in the last annual report of the Postmaster General, in speaking of the increase in rents on renewed leases for postal activities, he says, after mentioning a number of instances where quarters had been re-leased during the year (p. 13):

> This was an increase of 74.6 per cent over the expiring leases, 27.9 per cent of which increase was due to additional space required and 46.7 per cent to a higher rate paid per square foot.

It is evident that if we go along a few more years without adequately taking in hand the building needs for housing governmental activities, the Government's rent bill will be from $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 per annum. When the Government is able to borrow money at 4 per cent and less, it seems to me that we are playing the part of a very poor business man to continue year after year with the present business policy while the mail service to the people is crippled from one end of the country to the other because of lack of sufficient quarters.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Is it not a fact that this committee under its first allocation made two-thirds of the allocations to the sites secured in 1913, and to buildings that were not completed at that time, on account of war conditions, and where there were not sufficient funds? Did not the committee first look after those sites?

Mr. BUSBY. The act of May 25, 1926, provided that $15,000,000 of the $115,000,000 authorized for the country should be used to place buildings where the act of 1913 had authorized them. They were to be built within three years. That would have allowed $5,000,000 a year.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And most of the appropriation was taken up in that way.

Mr. BUSBY. Yes; $4,219,700 out of the $19,878,700 for all purposes, and that was because an amendment was tacked onto our former bill in the Senate, requiring them to do that. I do not think those places would have been given consideration if they had been left open.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Was that bill ever passed in the other body?

Mr. BUSBY. Yes; it is section 3 of the act of May 25, 1926.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. BUSBY. I yield myself 10 minutes more.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. I will.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Am I correct in the belief that under this bill contracts may be entered into for the amount up to the limit of the bill within any time? I am speaking with reference to this expenditure the limit of which is $35,000,000 a year.

Mr. BUSBY. Section 4 of the act of May 25, 1926, provides—> that unless specifically provided for in the act making appropriations for public buildings, which provision is hereby authorized, no contract for the construction, enlarging, remodeling, or extension of any building or for the purchase of land authorized by this act shall be entered into until moneys in the Treasury shall be made available for the payment of all obligations arising out of such contract, and unless the said act making appropriations for public buildings shall otherwise specifically provide, as hereinafter authorized, appropriations shall be made, and expended by the Secretary of the Treasury, in accordance with the estimates submitted by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. ELLIOTT. They can not enter into a contract for any building until the appropriation is made for that specific building.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Within the limit of $35,000,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT. That is merely an authorization to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BUSBY. Now, further in regard to the question asked by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] a while ago, as to how to get needed buildings. You will find, as Congress found in 1902, we will not get any results from this slipshod method by sending a blanket authorization down to the supervising architect, because he is still supervised by outside architects who have no responsibility to this body. As a result, we will get nothing for the country at large, and then we will come to the conclusion that if we are to get results we will have to stand up like men and quit taking vague promises. We will do as every straightforward business man would do in buying or building a house for his business activities. You say this will be administered fairly. But take the proposition of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH]. It seems to me wherever we find developed cities that have postal receipts of some $10,000 a year and up, and, mind you, there are some cities that have more than $500,000, $600,000, or $800,000, and some almost a million dollars in postal receipts annually, but where we have more than $10,000 postal receipts a year a prudent Government would look out and purchase a suitable site in that city on which to construct a Federal building, and when the receipts reached, say, $20,000 or $25,000 provide by law that the Government then in a straightforward business way will go ahead and construct a suitable building to house its activities. We can work out some plan along that line. Further to provide where there are cities having no Federal building having postal receipts of $10,000 or more in each of the congressional districts, give some recognition to those congressional districts, because the whole country pays the tax, and the whole country pays for the building.

Now, as to the other proposition that this will be fairly administered. With all due deference to our genial chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ELLIOTT], I know that Rushville, Ind., is entitled to a Federal building. Under the terms laid down you would term it a "pork-barrel" city; but I do not believe that. That is not my construction of the matter given. Now, in Report 651, last session of Congress, occur these words, speaking of Rushville. It says:

> The city should also have fair consideration for a Federal building in view of the services rendered the country by Representative ELLIOTT, the author of the public buildings bill.

Now, that is the reason given in the official report for giving Rushville, Ind., a post-office building, and yet they told us, and continue to tell us, that there is no pork in this bill.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUSBY. Not now.

Mr. ELLIOTT. But the gentleman is making an attack on me. There is just as much reason for giving a building to my town as there is for giving one to the gentleman's town.

Mr. BUSBY. I will defend your city, not on the ground that it is a pork-barrel proposition, but on its merits. I think the gentleman from Indiana should have defended it on the same ground, instead of letting them stick a thing like this in that report.

We find the very first estimate made to Congress contains an item, coming down through the President and through the Budget Committee, for Rushville, Ind.: "For the acquisition of a site and commencing the construction, $40,000," under an estimate totaling $115,000.

Now, Rushville is not one of those growing cities such as we find out farther in the West. In the year 1880 it had 2,515 population. In 1890 it had 3,475; in 1900 it had 4,541; in 1910 it had 4,925; and in 1920 it had 5,498 population. What I am showing you is that this thing does not work out just as the gentleman said it did. The committee chairman's city is included in the very first appropriation submitted. When it came up for consideration on the hearing before the Committee on Appropriations the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] said—he was chairman of that subcommittee—that he was surprised at the amount they were asking for the site. He says:

> If the people of Rushville appreciate the erection of that public building, I do not believe they would want a site costing $30,000. It is out of all proportion to the building.

He says further:

> Your post-office inspectors have made an outlandish proposition for $40,000 at Price, Utah, and $30,000 for Rushville, Ind., and that has been tentatively approved for action.

He suggests that there be some limit fixed.

Gentlemen, do you think you should let some departmental clerk or some honest man who is doing the best he can down in the department attend to your business rather than that you should take the work in hand yourself? Would you tell your people when you get back home, "I did not know what to do, and we turned the work over to the Treasury Department"? Consideration has been shown to me in this matter, but no promise is going to stop me from advocating on the floor of this House what I believe to be justice to myself and justice to my people. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi reserves one minute.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I do not know that I need five minutes, but I ought to take it if I do. I may say, when called upon to speak, that the reason for this bill is the fact that there may be better facilities afforded to the different sections of the country and the existing authorizations for public buildings allowed.

You may recall, of course, that the last bill provided for an expenditure of $165,000,000, and that $15,000,000 of that was to increase the limit of cost of buildings that were authorized in 1913 and which could not be built because of the increased cost of building; that $50,000,000 of that was allotted to buildings in the District of Columbia, and $100,000,000 for buildings in the rest of the country. But there was a provision also that there could be expended for all purposes only $25,000,000 a year; that you could expend only $5,000,000 in one State, and that each State must have at least two buildings before you could expend more than $5,000,000.

We have reached the limit of expenditure in a given year, and we have only scratched the surface of the needs of the country. It is because of this that we have given some consideration to the problem, which was occasioned by the failure of the deficiency bill last year, due to the fact that the Senate had too much to do and was unable to pass that deficiency bill before the day of adjournment came. We have lost at least a year in the building program, and so in the deficiency bill just passed we carried $8,000,000. That $8,000,000, added to what we already had and what we expended during this year, brings us up to the limit beyond which we are not allowed to go before the 1st of July. We are carrying all in the regular bill, which becomes effective on the 1st of July, that will be allowed under the old act for 1929, although this is only 1927 it is the fiscal year 1928, and so within the $25,000,000 limit which the country is allowed to spend we find ourselves unable to meet the obligations that are pressing on every hand for new buildings; and that failure to meet the obligations which the exigency of the case imposes upon us is the justification for passing the pending bill.

The pending bill adds $100,000,000 more to the $165,000,000 already provided. It enlarges upon the amount that may be expended in a given year; it enables us to approach the problem with greater certainty of being able to take care of the urgent cases; it enables us to meet more promptly the demands of the various communities of the country; and it insures to the Members of the House and the Senate earlier consideration of the questions which they have been urging and which have been urged upon them for years.

In my own case, for example, I have been trying to get a building for Chicago since 1908.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Can the gentleman assure us that the revenue bill, which we passed the other day, will provide enough money to carry out this program?

Mr. MADDEN. I voted against the revenue bill because I wanted to vote in advance to save money enough to do the things that are urgently needed. [Applause.]

Mr. COLE of Iowa. May it not be necessary for the President to veto either this bill or the revenue bill?

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, I am not the President, but I voted in advance to veto it. All of this $100,000,000 will not be expended in one year. It will take three, four, or five years to spend it all, and it will not be as great a burden upon the tax-paying public as it might seem to be on its face, but it will be an insurance to the various sections of the country that their cases will not be unjustifiably delayed. That is about what it will be.

I do not know what limit of expenditure per annum is proposed in the two bills.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Thirty-five million dollars.

Mr. MADDEN. But if it should be $35,000,000 or $40,000,000, that would, of course, meet the pressing needs and it might be that out of that I may be able to find a way to secure a building for Chicago, for which I got the first appropriation in 1908 and we are still waiting. However, I am not selfish on that point. I want the country taken care of in all its parts. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ALMON].

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, while our Government is one of the youngest, it is still one of the richest nations of the world; yet at the same time it is a tenant government. Our Government is paying more than $25,000,000 per annum as rentals on buildings in which to conduct the Government's business. The buildings in which private business is conducted are owned by corporations and individuals. I am one of those who believe that the business of the Government, wherever that business is of sufficient importance, should be conducted in buildings owned by the Government. A public building in any town or city will stimulate a patriotic pride in the people.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Is it not a fact that the interest on the investment and the upkeep of Federal buildings in the average small city is more than they are paying in the way of rentals?

Mr. ALMON. That may be true, but that does not change my idea about the propriety of the Government owning the buildings in which to conduct the Government's business. At the same time I am one of those who believe that the 500 Members of the Congress of the United States are better qualified to determine where these buildings should be constructed than any two Cabinet officers or any two bureaus in the city of Washington. It was the policy of the Congress of the United States for some 60 years to provide funds for the construction of the public buildings through and by means of what is commonly known as an omnibus public buildings bill, meaning that the Members of the Congress should determine where they should be built. I was one of those who tried from 1913 until 1926 to secure the passage of another omnibus public buildings bill.

We passed one through the House and another was reported by the committee to the House, when the question came up in 1926 a fight was made by those who favored an omnibus bill, and those who favored the policy which was adopted in May, 1926, through and by means of what is known as the Elliott buildings bill. I opposed and voted against that bill. It authorized sites for buildings to be selected by the Secretary of the Treasury and Postmaster General instead of Congress. However, it is now the law and is the only way to buildings. I am going to vote for the pending bill because I realize that if there is to be any further building provided in this country in the near future it will have to be done through the policy recommended by this administration and adopted by Congress in May, 1926. I do not know whether it is going to be a success or not, but I know the administration can not succeed in its building program that has been laid out unless Congress provides the necessary funds. I believe we should provide another $100,000,000 at this time so that it will be known that funds will be available to meet the building program. At the time the Elliott bill was enacted I said if you are going to start out on this kind of a building program you should authorize the appropriation of a sufficient amount. I said then that $150,000,000 would not be a drop in the bucket, and now instead of making this $100,000,000 we ought to make it at least $200,000,000, if you are going to make a real success of the program and put buildings where they are greatly needed. This administration is responsible for the conduct of this law. Do not give them an opportunity to say that the reason this plan or this policy has failed was because Congress would not appropriate the money with which to carry it out and make a success of it.

Mr. CROWTHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALMON. Yes.

Mr. CROWTHER. Is there a Federal building at Muscle Shoals?

Mr. ALMON. No; there is not a building at Muscle Shoals. Sheffield, situated about in the center of the Muscle Shoals district, has been selected as one of the two places in Alabama where buildings are first to be constructed. There is very great need for a building at that place, and I sincerely hope that it will be taken care of in the next year's building program. There are other places in my district in great need of public buildings, and I expect to get them later. To pass this bill, and others to follow, is the way and only way to get them. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH].

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House: O gentlemen of the House, we hear a great deal of talk about this bill being a measure solely for one section—the North and East—and also some Members on my side want to go back to the "old pork-barrel" method. Well, these gentlemen just as well face the issue and look it in the face squarely. This House is not going back to the "pork-barrel" method of selecting one Federal building in every congressional district in the United States. I take it there are many districts in the United States similarly situated as is the district which I try to represent here, and I am for this measure. My district must have some relief, and I am going to try to get it. When I came to Congress eight years ago the population of the district I am trying to represent was about 211,000. At the present time, as estimated by various chambers of commerce, telephone directories, and other agencies and so forth, it is claimed to be about 500,000. In one or two counties out there when I first ran, the largest town they had was a prairie-dog town. To-day, within a year or two, there are towns out there that have sprung up, on account of the oil development, almost overnight. Those people must have adequate postal facilities and buildings. For instance, the town of McKamey a year or so ago was a big prairie-dog town, but to-day, I am informed, has over 10,000 people. Other oil towns like Big Lake, Rankin, Best, Wink, Pyote, and many others I could mention of equal importance.

We need some Federal buildings, because we have this same situation in about 14 of the counties out there where, as I said the other day, when you strike a pick into the ground you get oil. Six of the largest oil fields of the South were recently developed in my district, including one of the richest oil fields in the United States where they are getting gushers of 10,000 barrels daily at as shallow as 1,000 feet, the Yates oil field. The town of Iroan has sprung up there. We must have a post office, a postmaster, and the Government must rent a building.

I want to say to my friend, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY], who is opposing this measure, that I tried through the old method—the one he advocates now—when I first came here, and while this district was developing, to get some public buildings established. Some of the older Members advised me as follows: "CLAUDE, introduce bills designating your places." Well, I introduced a bill to establish one, I think, in almost every county or town in my district having a population of over 2,000. I do not know of anybody who surpassed my speed limit in that respect except my colleague, the gentleman from Texas, Judge BLANTON. He had one almost proposed in every precinct in his district, as I showed you here one day. [Laughter.] Of course, I am speaking somewhat facetiously as to Judge BLANTON'S bills, but he introduced quite a flock. I think he opposed this bill the last time, while I voted for it. He has got a building at Sweetwater. Well, I am glad of it. I trust every colleague of mine who needs a building will get one—especially the Texas delegation. Some say the way to get you a building designated is to fight this bill. Well, I do not believe this, as I said to my colleague and friend, FRITZ LANHAM to-day, and he agreed with me. The building committee—Mr. Schuneman, Governor Bartlett, Mr. Martin, and the architect, Mr. Wetmore—I believe are trying to handle this matter in a business way and use business methods—they have a big problem, but I believe they will work it out fairly and squarely. They impress me as being fair men.

Mr. BUSBY. If the gentleman will permit, I want to correct him. The gentleman [Mr. BLANTON] did not oppose the bill. He simply opposed the proposition until he had promises for two places.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Oh, I think the gentleman from Mississippi is mistaken in this latter statement. I am not sure as to Mr. BLANTON'S vote. There was no record vote. But my recollection is that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] rose against that bill when it came up under a suspension of the rules. I may be in error; but at any rate, I heard him say at one time before the bill came up he was opposed to this character of legislation. He may have changed his mind when it came up. I have been in favor of such a bill, because when you have a district like mine developing out there so rapidly with towns that had developed even before the oil boom—such as Colorado, Big Springs, Marfa, Alpine, Henville, Marlin, Pecos, Fort Stockton, and many more—which is not only the greatest livestock growing district but one that produces more wool, more oil, mohair, more cattle, more sheep, goats, and, I would say, if my friend over here from Marlin, TOM CONNALLY, were not present, probably more cotton; but we produce a great deal of cotton out there, TOM, you saw it when you went out there with the Texas Press Association last summer. You take a district like that, which has grown in eight years from 211,000 population to 500,000, if some figures sent me are correct, where they are handling the mail on the sidewalks, in the alleys, even out on the street; yes, in poorly heated and worse ventilated places. It is the duty of our Government to provide adequate, safe buildings for post offices; then, gentlemen, certainly we need some Federal buildings and lots of them—I have mentioned a number of towns where post-office buildings are needed—in my home town, El Paso, we must have a new immigration station and a new Federal office building, and if the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY] can tell me under his method how in the name of the shining sun I can get a building except on paper, I would like to hear it. Here is the majority over here [indicating], the Republicans. This is the only character of legislation they say they will vote for, and they are responsible for legislation here. I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi whether, after the 4th of March, a year from next March, when the Donkey moves into the White House—and if I read the signs of the political horizon correctly, he is going to move in for four years at least—and the Elephant moves out, will my friend still be opposed to a bill of this character? If I read the signs aright, that is what is going to happen. Just what the "Burro's" name is I do not know, but "Brer" Elephant will surely have to vacate and make way for the Donkey and Democracy's triumphant entry. Will the gentleman still be against this measure?

Mr. BUSBY. Does the gentleman mean for me to answer the question? If so, I would like to have him give me an opportunity to answer.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Would the gentleman be opposed to this measure under a Democratic administration? I want to say to him that I am firmly convinced that inside of a little over a year your party and mine will handle it.

Mr. BUSBY. I am opposed to the proposition under anybody's administration, because it is wrong in principle and not recognized——

Mr. HUDSPETH. Is the gentleman serious about that? If we had a Democratic President and a Democratic Secretary of the Treasury and a Democratic Postmaster General, would the gentleman stand on this floor and fight our own party and say our party is not competent to administer this fund, as he is now saying of the present majority party? [Laughter.]

Mr. BUSBY. I have said so. If the gentleman will stop long enough for me to answer, I will say yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Ah, I can stop. I am not a "self-starter," but a "self-stopper." The gentleman seems to be a "self-starter" when this bill comes up, but unable to apply the emergency. I now yield to the gentleman from Florida, if he wishes to ask me a question. He so indicated a few minutes ago.

Mr. GREEN of Florida. The same condition that obtains in the district of the gentleman from Texas obtains all over Florida. May I ask how in the world we will ever get buildings unless we appropriate for them?

Mr. HUDSPETH. You can not get them in any other way except by the terms of this bill, I will say to my good friend from Florida, and we are appropriating for them under this bill. You do not want to get them simply on paper, as the gentleman from Mississippi proposes; you and I want them in our towns and cities where urgently needed. My friend from Yazoo City, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BUSBY], can go around talking about getting buildings in every congressional district whether needed or not—give all the boys a piece of pie—but he might just as well attempt to stop the last overflow of the great Mississippi River with a toothpick. Do you not know you can not get them in that way, Brother BUSBY?

Mr. BUSBY. I am not from Yazoo City.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Well, the gentleman is from another good place in the great State of Mississippi. Yazoo is all right.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I yield to my friend from North Carolina.

Mr. ABERNETHY. Might I suggest to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] that probably the phenomenal growth in population in his district is due largely to the hustling Congressman from that district.

Mr. HUDSPETH. No, my friend; no; the great increase in population is due to the greatest people that inhabit this earth, the finest, most fertile soil, and the most genial climate, and in spite of that Congressman you so kindly referred to. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the picture of the growth in population so vividly drawn by the gentleman from Texas, while, perhaps, not quite so exaggerated in some parts of the country, is nevertheless quite uniformly true.

Mr. HUDSPETH. It was not an exaggeration, but a true picture that I was drawing.

Mr. REED of New York. I know that, but as to the rest of the country I say that it might be quite as pronounced as in the gentleman's district; but it is a fact, as practically every Member on the floor knows, that cities have been making a very rapid growth all over this country for a period of years.

We had long, exhaustive hearings before our committee and the conditions prevailing in most of the cities of the country were described as deplorable. It was developed at these hearings that there are towns where important mail matter has to be stored in temporary buildings that are unsafe, and in some cases stored in tents. At other places valuable mail is exposed to the rain because they are unable to cover large shipments of parcel post.

The country is interested in having some relief. When we passed the bill appropriating $165,000,000, $50,000,000 of which was to be used in the District of Columbia and $15,000,000 to be used to carry out contracts authorized in 1913 that could not be completed within the limit of cost, it meant in the final analysis that the country at large under this program of an expenditure of $25,000,000 a year would only get $10,000,000 a year. This was a matter of bitter disappointment to every community where there was congestion in the postal business. I have no ax to grind. I had none when I introduced this bill for an extra $100,000,000.

Now, let us analyze this House bill 278 and see what it does. It just doubles the building program. I doubt very much if we were to authorize an appropriation for more than $100,000,000 at this time whether the organization of the Government could handle the money expeditiously and wisely until an organization had been built up to carry out a larger program. Under this program they tell us they can spend $35,000,000 efficiently and economically. Now, it means for the first three years the country at large will get an expenditure of $20,000,000. At the end of three years the country at large will get $25,000,000, and at the end of five years the country at large will get an expenditure of $35,000,000 a year.

I believe that is going to meet many urgent needs of the country. I agree with the other speaker that as soon as the organization has been built up so that the money can be expended wisely to meet the situation, that this Congress in its wisdom will give that organization more money to meet other emergency cases where the postal receipts are even less than $20,000 a year.

Mr. BRIGHAM. Will this take care of all the buildings that are said to be necessary in the survey?

Mr. REED of New York. I can not state that, but it will go as far as the money will go, and we will be $100,000,000 better off than we would if we did not pass this bill.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. Certainly.

Mr. HOWARD of Oklahoma. What would be the condition if you added to this bill another $50,000,000 or $100,000,000 authorization?

Mr. REED of New York. As I stated, the Treasury Department and the Post Office Department were carefully questioned on this phase of the situation. You know that since 1913 we have had no building program to amount to anything. The war came on and everything was disrupted. But the Government has no organization that could take care of any more money wisely than we are appropriating in this bill. As I say, if the situation develops, and they have an organization that warrants it, we can appropriate more money. I insert an analysis of H. R. 278:

Extension limit of cost	15,000,000
Sites and buildings, District of Columbia	50,000,000
Country outside of District of Columbia	100,000,000	Increase to	200,000,000
LIMITATIONS		LIMITATIONS

This act contemplates a survey of the public building needs of the country and provides that the $100,000,000 authorized for public buildings outside the District of Columbia shall be allocated to the different States, where buildings are found to be necessary, in such manner as to distribute same fairly on the basis of area, population, and postal receipts.		Unexpended balance of $35,000,000 may be expended in any subsequent year. This bill liberalizes program without changing policy of the act of May 25, 1926.

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McKEOWN].

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, they say that there is no other way to get a public building except to vote for this bill and turn it over to the department to build the building. Well, gentlemen, if you will vote down this proposition, which is under suspension of the rules, and give me an opportunity to substitute the bill that I hold in my hand, I will send you all back to your offices happy, and you will be glad the bill came up. [Laughter.]

How can the department down here know where to put a public building better than I do in my own district? They talk about the needs of the country. I want to tell my good friend from Chicago that I have down in my district a town—Seminole City—that in one month collected more freight than the Rock Island collected in Chicago, and yet it does not even get honorable mention. From this city the Rock Island collected $7,000,000 in freight in six months. The postal money orders in that town amounted to $849,957.10. They sold $46,158 worth of stamps and registered 16,000 letters. They received 18,000 registered letters and 10,000 to 15,000 letters daily. And yet that town will have no more chance of getting a public building in this bill than the proverbial grasshopper has in a turkey pen. [Laughter.]

Now, I am not going to chide you, but, as my good friend from Texas says, there may be a change in the administration next year.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Oh, there will be; no question about that. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKEOWN. Well, if it does come I will be here fighting this legislation just the same, because I am not willing to vote to abrogate the powers of Congress and put it in the hands of a bureau. As far as my experience has gone, the Democratic bureaus do not respect Congress any more than the Republican bureaus. [Laughter and applause.]

You turn this over to the bureau and the administration shifts and then you gentlemen will be here with me fighting this proposal, because you will not get any more out of a Democratic administration than you get out of the Republican administration. That is what is going to happen.

Now, let us deal in this matter with common sense. We all know down deep in our hearts that you have shifted the responsibility when you take it off your own shoulders to say where the money shall go.

You have a lot of promises on paper, but it takes the cold coin of Uncle Sam to build houses, and Congress can say where that coin is to go just as well as the department can, and you know it, and you will be standing here five years waiting for these buildings to be erected. If you vote this down and let me put this bill in, you can go home this evening happy, because you will have gotten something for your districts and rendered the country a real service by saving $100,000,000. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CHALMERS].

Mr. CHALMERS. Mr. Speaker, I spoke on this bill when it was up for consideration during the last session of the Sixty-ninth Congress. At that time I said that I was an optimist, that I believed in men and their promises, that God was in His heaven, and all is right with the world.

My friends, I am going to be frank with you. If Toledo, Ohio, does not get an adequate Federal building out of this $100,000,000 for the country at large my optimism and belief in men will get an awful jolt, because I have had a definite promise from the joint committee that if the Reed bill became a law Toledo would get its Federal building. This is as it should be.

I represent one of the most urgent projects in the United States. I call your attention to the fact that the present building is utterly and hopelessly inadequate to the Federal requirements in our city. The building was built in the early eighties. It was completed and opened in 1888. You will please note that in 1880 the city of Toledo had a population of 50,137 people. In 1890 the population was 81,434. To-day greater Toledo has more than 350,000 inhabitants. This will show an increase in population since the present Federal building was conceived of a city of 300,000.

The ranking minority member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, Judge LANHAM, of Texas, has well said:

> There are some cities under contemplation which have grown since they have had a Federal building from 25,000 population to 150,000 or 200,000 population, and certainly they must be more urgent cases, although they have an inadequate Federal building, than some towns of 200,000 or 300,000 people where rented quarters may be occupied temporarily, at least, without very serious inconvenience.

This describes the Toledo situation exactly.

The postal needs in Toledo are not pressing, but those of the Government generally, especially of the Internal Revenue Bureau and of the United States district court, are very urgent. When the present Federal building was built in Toledo a grand-jury room was provided in the attic, a room about 20 feet square, with one dormer window about 6 feet above the floor. There were no near-by toilet facilities. At that time only men served on the jury. Now, under the law, we have mixed juries of men and women. There is no jury room for either petit or grand juries. When the court room is not in use for trial purposes petit juries occupy the crowded library, thus excluding its use for library purposes. At times the grand jury occupies the court room. This is not always possible, and when impossible the grand jury goes to one of the three rooms in the district attorney's office, on another floor, a very cramped and inconvenient situation.

At times there are three petit juries in action at the same time—one in the library, one in the judge's private chambers, and one hearing a case in the court room. There is no witness room. Witnesses when not permitted to sit in the court room occupy benches in the corridor. There is no room for court commissioners. Sometimes their hearings are held in the marshal's office, a room 20 feet square, with a counter running across the middle of it. Prisoners, bondsmen, and witnesses elbow each other; and the improprieties which the contacts give rise to, both in commissioners' hearings and in trials, are frequent and grave.

Judge John M. Killits has been district judge of the Toledo district for the past 18 years. He is one of the most efficient, conscientious, and learned judges in the United States. In a letter which I received from him recently Judge Killits says:

> That the building was poorly constructed in the first place; its walls have settled and cracked. The location is so noisy from the street clatter that frequently windows must be closed in the summer when court is in session. Since I have occupied this position the work of this division has so grown that it now exceeds that of more than half the districts of the country. In 1910 there was 1 deputy marshal, 2 deputy clerks, and 1 assistant district attorney with a stenographer, taking care of the court's work. Now there are 5 deputy marshals, 5 deputy clerks, 2 assistant district attorneys, and 2 stenographers. This greatly increased force is cramped into quarters which were barely adequate in 1910. Sanitary and toilet accommodations are nothing less than abominable.

My colleagues, I urge the passage of this bill.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, a statement was made on the floor a few moments ago that no hearings had been conducted on this bill or on the triangle bill which is to follow it. I can not let that go unchallenged. The fact is that in the last session of Congress both of these propositions were given exhaustive hearings, the triangle bill passed the Senate and came to the House, and we added to it the Reed bill which is before you to-day and brought it over here, and the two bills combined in one passed this House by an overwhelming vote. I think only 26 Members voted against it.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Can the gentleman give us information as to what the hearings showed the assessed value of the land was in the triangle district?

Mr. ELLIOTT. The only thing that I know of in the hearings was $17,000,000. That is my recollection.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. On what basis is property assessed in Washington—on the cash value?

Mr. ELLIOTT. The gentleman knows as much as I do about that. It was assessed at that sum for the purpose of taxation in the District.

Mr. COLE of Iowa. Is that assessment at cash value?

Mr. ELLIOTT. That is something you can not tell about, in any place, under any law that I have ever had any experience with. Where they are supposed to assess at full value, they may do it and they may not.

On May 25, 1926, we passed what was known as the public buildings bill. That bill provided that $100,000,000 should be available in construction work throughout the country; that $50,000,000 should be available for construction in the District of Columbia and $15,000,000 more to be added to a fund for the purpose of constructing buildings which were authorized in the act of 1913, and previous acts, for the purpose of increasing the limits of cost so that those buildings could be erected and that program worked out. Under the terms of the original bill $25,000,000 was all that was available in any one year; $10,000,000 of this had to go to the District of Columbia, $10,000,000 outside, and $5,000,000 each year to carry out this program of 1913, so that that left only $10,000,000 available under that act to go to the country. That act was also case-hardened; in other words, that if any portion of that $25,000,000 was not used in that year or in any one year it could not be carried over into the next year. There was also a provision in that act that directed the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General to make a survey of the country and report back to Congress what they found in regard to needs for public buildings throughout the United States. They came back here with a report showing that it was necessary to spend not only $100,000,000 but nearly $200,000,000 to take care of those buildings outside the District. So that caused us to bring out this bill, and we were satisfied that the condition of business affairs of the country had gotten to a point that it would stand for an additional appropriation each year, and we put in this bill an authorization for $35,000,000 instead of $25,000,000, this additional $10,000,000 all to go to the country. In addition, we limbered up the law in this respect, that if this year they will only use $30,000,000 of this appropriation, or less, the amount that was not used could be carried into next year and become available then.

Mr. BURTNESS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I will.

Mr. BURTNESS. I desire to ask a question in reference to the construction of the present law. The gentleman will recall the last proviso put in paragraph 4 of the bill passed last year was to the effect that estimates should be made for two buildings in each State provided cities with receipts of $10,000 or $20,000 each did not have buildings. I understand that at first the department construed that to mean there should be two besides the buildings provided for in section 3 of the act. But before the report came out dated January, 1927, they construed the law to this effect, that any building included in section 3 would be counted as one of the two buildings. Now, what does the chairman say in reference to that point?

Mr. ELLIOTT. My construction is this: Section 3 provided for constructing the buildings of 1913 and previous acts, and has nothing to do with that provision providing for two buildings in each State, and regardless of how many buildings the State has under section 3 of the act it does not relieve the Government from building the two buildings.

Mr. BURTNESS. In other words, estimates should be made for two buildings regardless of the number of buildings carried in section 3.

Mr. ELLIOTT. That is right.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I will.

Mr. MANSFIELD. As I understand it we have authorized $165,000,000 heretofore. This bill will add another $100,000,000, making $265,000,000.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Yes.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Now, as I understand it, $367,548,000 will care for all the buildings that are eligible under the law?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I am sorry my time has expired.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that two-thirds having voted in favor thereof——

Mr. BUSBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 275, noes 27.

So, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

ACQUIREMENT OF CERTAIN LANDS WITHIN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 483) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire certain lands within the District of Columbia to be used as sites for public buildings.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 483) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire certain lands within the District of Columbia to be used as sites for public buildings

Be it enacted, etc., That to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire economically and at an early date adequate sites for suitable accommodations in the District of Columbia for the executive departments and independent establishments of the Government not under any executive department, and suitable grounds, parking, and approaches thereto, the act entitled "An act to provide for the construction of certain public buildings, and for other purposes," approved May 25, 1926, is hereby amended so as to authorize and direct him to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, all the lands obtainable with the funds that may be appropriated, including buildings and other structures, included within the triangle bounded by Pennsylvania Avenue and B Street, extending from Fifteenth Street to Sixth Street NW., and reservations A, B, C, and D, except property owned by the United States or the District of Columbia, as such lands appear in the records of the office of the surveyor of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, in addition to the amounts authorized in said act of May 25, 1926, and without regard to the limitations contained in the first paragraph of section 5 of such act, the sum of $25,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. The buildings constructed under said act approved May 25, 1926, when completed and ready for occupancy shall be turned over to the Office of Public Buildings and Public Parks for care, maintenance, and protection, including the furnishing of heat, gas, and electricity therein, together with all machinery, tools, equipments, and supplies to be used in connection therewith.

The SPEAKER. Is there a second demanded? If not, the question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—PERRY'S VICTORY MEMORIAL COMMISSION

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to be printed, with illustrations, and referred to the Committee on the Library:

To the Congress of the United States:

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE—INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ENTOMOLOGY (S. DOC. NO. 29)

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, was ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Congress of the United States:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State inclosing a recommendation from the Secretary of Agriculture that the Congress be requested to adopt a resolution authorizing and requesting the President to invite foreign governments to be represented by delegates at the International Congress of Entomology, to be held in the United States in 1928.

It will be noticed that because of the close relationship between entomology and agriculture the Department of Agriculture is especially interested in the international aspects of this science, which it considers of very great importance to this country. As it would seem, therefore, that the participation of foreign governments in the congress mentioned would be in the public interest, I recommend to Congress the passage of the joint resolution. No appropriation is requested.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. AYRES, by unanimous consent (at the request of Mr. HOCH), was granted leave of absence, for one day, on account of illness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, there is one more bill which it is intended to urge for passage before the holiday recess, and that is the bill known as the alien property bill, which heretofore has been under consideration in the House. There remains 1 hour and 20 minutes for general debate on that bill. It is hoped that if the Members will keep a quorum of the Committee of the Whole we may be able to finish the general debate on the bill to-day. The remaining consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule we may finish to-morrow, provided there is a quorum present at all times, so that no time is lost in the consideration to-morrow. But it is absolutely necessary that a quorum should remain here until that bill is passed. The day will be held in reserve in case it is not finished to-morrow; but if it is finished to-morrow, it is hoped that Wednesday's session will be but a formal session. I hope the Members will give us their presence as much as possible until that bill is out of the way, a quorum being absolutely necessary until the bill is passed.

SETTLEMENT OF WAR CLAIMS

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7201, the alien property bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7201.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Pending that motion, I would like to know how the time stands?

The SPEAKER. One hour and 20 minutes remain, to be equally divided between the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER]. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] will please take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7201, with Mr. MAPES in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 7201, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7201) to provide for the settlement of certain claims of American nationals against Germany and of German nationals against the United States, for the ultimate return of all property of German nationals held by the Alien Property Custodian, and for the equitable apportionment among all claimants of certain available funds.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. [Applause.]

Mr. BURTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I hope this bill may pass and that quickly and without any amendment. There is a very large number of conflicting claims between the Governments of the United States and of Germany, and there are potent reasons why a settlement should be promptly made. The background for this measure shows very careful attention given by the Committee on Ways and Means and also contemporaneously and at an earlier date by the Mixed Claims Commission. If I am any judge of popular opinion, the overwhelming sentiment both in the United States and Germany is in favor of the settlement proposed in the bill, notwithstanding the fact that it is not altogether satisfactory and is the result of compromise.

In the first place, we ought to maintain the most friendly relations with the present Government of Germany. Between that Government and the one against which we declared war in 1917 there is a startling contrast. The express language of our declaration was a declaration of war against the Government of Germany, an organization which for militaristic spirit and a desire for imperialism surpassed any country of our time, but the present Government of Germany is one which is taking a leading part for the peace of the world. They have learned their lesson, we may say, and the dominant forces in that country now look forward to an era of peace with all nations.

There are three special reasons why we should think favorably of this settlement. In the first place, the claims of other governments against Germany were taken up by ex parte commissions. The amount of the claims was very greatly exaggerated. One hundred and thirty-two billion marks was the first claim or the equivalent of about $30,000,000,000. In contrast, the claims of American nationals were adjudicated by an international commission. The next reason is the fairness and the unusual confidence of the German people in the Government of the United States. They agreed that the arbiter on the Mixed Claims Commission, according to the treaty of August, 1922, should be one of our own nationals. That is almost unprecedented. Justice Day was first chosen and then Judge Parker. Again, should the present provisions for payment fail, the German Government continues to be responsible for the amounts of the findings on these awards.

There are several objections made to this settlement which do not trouble me. The first is that possibly the Germans may obtain the amounts due to them at an earlier date than the American claimants. Is there any valid objection to this? In the first place, we should be generous. In the next place, we have a vast amount of their property from which liquidation can be accomplished and claims can be paid. The gentleman from Tennessee the other day deprecated the long delay in coming to any arrangements for payment by Germany. I am not troubled by that either. It was not until the latter part of 1922 that we began to settle our claims for loans to the Allies. We were technically at war with Germany until July, 1921. Germany was prostrate. There were bread lines in all her cities, and thus there was every reason why we should be considerate. Another objection is that the limit of the amount to be paid for ships which we took over, for the radio station, and for patents is fixed at $100,000,000. It is maintained that this a large figure. But bear in mind that is an unusual provision. In arbitrations the ordinary rule is not to fix any limit and this is for our benefit rather than otherwise. Again the objection is made that insurance companies are to receive the amounts due to them, some $35,000,000. On this question let me say that the universal rule of law is that an insurance company is subrogated to the claims of the assured. That is true in private transactions and it is true in international law.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. The point of those who oppose the bill upon that ground is not that the insurance companies would not have the right of subrogation against the Government of Germany but, as I understand this bill, the taxpayers of the United States will pay in part at least those claims and then will perhaps in the future be reimbursed by the Government of Germany. But suppose the German Government falls down on its payments, what then?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman is mistaken in that. We would not pay a dollar on those claims.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Then where is the money to come from?

Mr. BURTON. My time is limited and I can not yield further. If any other rule were adopted, if the payments by the insurance companies were final, and there were no grounds of claim against the country which, by submarines or other methods, destroyed our ships, it would be an encouragement in the future to resort to ruthless methods, it would be an encouragement to destroy, because it would be known that the country guilty of the destruction would escape liability. That universal principle, as I said, pertains not only to private wrongdoers but also to governments. There have been some half dozen cases in which arbitrations have been held to which the United States has been a party, and the insurance companies have been indemnified out of the awards against foreign countries. The French indemnity of 1831 was the first, and there have been some seven in all involving countries in the Old World and in the New. Among them I might mention the London commission of 1853; the Van Ness convention with Spain in 1834; the Danish indemnity, 1830; the Peruvian indemnity, 1841; the Chinese indemnity, 1858; and the British Claims Commission, under article 12 of the treaty of Washington, 1871.

Another point in favor of these claims is that there were separate awards made to each insurance company, and it is the universal principle in such cases, supported by the statute of 1896, that the Government holds the amounts that are paid as trustee for the claimants. The statute to which I have referred is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., * * * Trust funds: Hereafter all moneys received by the Secretary of State from foreign governments and other sources, in trust for citizens of the United States or others, shall be deposited and covered into the Treasury.

The Secretary of State shall determine the amounts due claimants, respectively, from each of such trust funds, and certify the same to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall, upon the presentation of the certificates of the Secretary of State, pay the amounts so found to be due.

Each of the trust funds covered into the Treasury as aforesaid is hereby appropriated for the payment to the ascertained beneficiaries thereof of the certificates herein provided for. * * * (Feb. 27, 1896. Supp. Rev. Stat., vol. 2, 1892–1901, p. 449.)

On this point I will read briefly from a decision made by Judge Parker, umpire of the Mixed Claims Commission:

But where a demand is made on behalf of a designated national, and an award and payment is made on that specific demand, the fund so paid is not a national fund in the sense that the title vests in the nation receiving it entirely free from any obligation to account to the private claimant, on whose behalf the claim was asserted and paid and who is the real owner thereof. Broad and misleading statements susceptible of this construction are found in cases where lump-sum awards and payments have been made to the demanding nation covering numerous claims put forward by it and where the tribunal making the award did not undertake to adjudicate each claim or to allocate any specified amount to any designated claim. It is not believed that any case can be cited in which an award has been made by an international tribunal in favor of the demanding nation on behalf of its designated national in which the nation receiving payment of such award has, in the absence of fraud, or mistake, hesitated to account to the national designated, or those claiming under him, for the full amount of the award received. So far as the United States is concerned, it would seem that the Congress has treated funds paid the nation in satisfaction of specific claims as held "in trust for citizens of the United States or others."

It is true that in the settlement of the Alabama claims the amounts were not paid to insurance companies, but there was a very vital difference. Individual claims were not presented, and the award of $15,500,000 was made to the Government of the United States. This situation differs so radically that different principles should prevail. Before the Mixed Claims Commission there was a specific award made to each of the insurance companies. The "Old Roman," as we called him in Ohio, Mr. Thurman, a man who was never very partial to the capitalistic elements of the country, very strongly asserted in the discussion of the Alabama award that the insurance companies should have been paid out of the amount.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman desire more time?

Mr. BURTON. I would like to have an additional minute.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one additional minute.

Mr. BURTON. In conclusion, I wish to say that this case has been very thoroughly considered. There has been an agreement between the representatives of all classes of claimants, and it is not only just but expedient that we permit the agreement to be carried out. It has a bearing upon all arbitrations. If we seek here to interfere with the findings that were made, we discourage arbitrations in the future. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I desire recognition for one minute in order to answer the inquiry propounded by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] as to where this money is to come from.

The only money that is to be appropriated in this matter is for the purpose of paying for the ships, the radio stations, and so forth. We have to pay for these anyway, whether we pass the bill or not, because it was agreed between Secretary Kellogg and those making the arrangements with reference to reparations, that if we confiscated these ships, this would be taken out of the reparations payments. Therefore if we do not pay them under the bill, we will pay them in that way.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If the gentleman will permit, I was not addressing my inquiry at all to the payment for the ships.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There is no other appropriation made.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. One moment. If the insurance companies are to be paid for losses for which they have already collected large premiums, from what fund are they to be paid?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The gentleman will find that on page 24 of the report. Twenty per cent of German property to be temporarily retained, $40,000,000; German share of unallocated interest fund, $25,000,000; mixed claims receipts—2¼ per cent to September 1, 1928, $23,000,000; one-half of the appropriation for ships and radio stations, $25,000,000. There is a total available for the payment of all the American claims, not simply the insurance claims, of $113,000,000.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. I understand that; but a part of this fund that will be paid to the insurance companies is a part of the general fund that will be appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States; is not that correct?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is only out of that part that is appropriated for the payment of the ships and the radio stations.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. And also to the payment of the insurance company claims and general claims of American claimants.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. No; there is no appropriation made for that.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Well, we will discuss that when we get to that section of the bill. I think I can then make my position perfectly clear.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I want to add on another point that we do not take any of the German property in the sense of appropriating or confiscating it. There are to be certificates issued for it, and in due time the certificates are to be taken up and paid.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the financial settlements to be made as a result of the Great War must of their nature be most complex. The Dawes reparation, the debt settlements, and all negotiations between our late enemies and our allies in the very nature of things must be difficult and intricate. No scheme can be devised which will be satisfactory and fair alike to all interested parties. It is not to be expected that any bill having to do with the subjects covered by the present bill will be accepted by all without some protest. It would seem, however, that House Resolution 7201 comes as near to it as humanly possible, and it is therefore to be hoped that this measure, the result of painstaking study by our officials, drafted with care and reported unanimously by the Ways and Means Committee, will receive so nearly a unanimous vote in this body as to convince the people of the world that it embodies the best judgment of Congress on the subject.

It is not my purpose to argue the merits of this bill or to point out its defects, if any there are, but rather to join with others in an effort to explain just what the bill will accomplish and the methods that will be employed. I start with only one premise, namely, that the exercise of the power vested in Congress by a Supreme Court decision which legalizes confiscation of property of former alien enemies is repugnant to the thoughts of the people of this country. Time and again President Wilson reiterated the fact that we entered the war from absolutely unselfish motives, and to-day this House has the opportunity to demonstrate the truth of his statement, which was undoubtedly approved by the citizens of this country.

So much time has elapsed since the establishment of peace in 1921 that the inference might be drawn that this country either contemplates confiscation of alien enemy property or desires to profit unduly by further delay in its return. This erroneous impression must not be allowed to prevail in foreign countries. Further postponement of legislation will only add to the complications and materially increase the interest account.

There are three major propositions combined in this one bill and I wish to deal with each one very briefly and separately:

First. The return of property of German nationals seized under the trading with the enemy act and now held by the Alien Property Custodian.

Second. The settlement of claims of German nationals against the United States for ships, patents, and a radio station taken over and used by this Government.

Third. The settlement of claims of American citizens against the German Government.

These are the three major propositions dealt with in the bill, but combined with them is the method of procuring funds, as well as their equitable apportionment for the above-mentioned purposes. All these points are so completely set forth in the report accompanying this bill that it hardly seems necessary to refer to them in detail. Assuming, however, that some slight explanation and a brief résumé of these subjects may be of value to the Members of the House, I will endeavor to present them in as simple language as possible.

The statement that it is impossible to describe simply a complex and intricate matter applies as well to this subject as to taxation.

The intention of the Government not to confiscate but to return the property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian has been plainly shown by the passage of the so-called Winslow bill, whereby all accounts of $10,000 or under have been paid. This of itself both established a precedent and showed the disposition of Congress toward this seized property. There is no more logic in settling accounts of $10,000 and under than there is in paying those of over $10,000, provided both classes of claims have the same merit. By paying those of less than $10,000, more than one-half of the amounts originally in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian have been returned. If these claims are just and equitable, of course, there can not be an arbitrary line set at $10,000. It is just as right and fair to pay the larger claims as it is the smaller ones. This bill calls for the payment of 80 per cent of the remaining property held by the Alien Property Custodian. It is not intended to confiscate the remaining 20 per cent, but to say to the holders of those claims that they must wait for final settlement until other financial arrangements are completed. This method of settlement was also agreed upon and acceptable to Germany. Germany is rapidly recovering from its worst financial condition as a bankrupt nation. This method, while criticized sometimes by our own people, I think it is important to say was agreed to by the representatives of Germany. Rather than wait until these payments can be made by Germany, we are taking other means of relieving our own citizens. Alien property rightfully belongs to its alien owners or their legal heirs. Likewise, American citizens are entitled to similar treatment by Germany. This is the reason why full payment will not immediately be made under this bill. We certainly owe to our citizens as just and fair treatment as we are disposed to accord to our late enemies.

The claims of American citizens have been passed upon by the Mixed Claims Commission established under an agreement dated August 10, 1922, composed of an American, a German, and Judge Parker as umpire. While these claims are similar to those of the nationals of other countries against Germany, it is necessary to have a definite form of settlement owing to the fact that Great Britain established, as it were, a clearing house for its nationals, offsetting their claims against the claims of German nationals. This method is not one that this country would be apt to approve.

While the Mixed Claims Commission is authorized to pass upon the merits of the claims and fix the amounts due, it has no authority in any way to designate or arrange the form of payment. This is a matter entirely within the hands of Congress, and it is with that problem that we are faced at the present time.

There is a third class of claims known as the claims of German nationals against the United States. As has been frequently stated, these cover ships, patents, and a radio station taken over and used by the United States. These claims have not as yet been adjudicated or passed upon. This bill sets up the machinery for such approval.

While this bill does not name the arbiter, no one is being considered for the position except the man who has made such a success as umpire of the Mixed Claims Commission. The interests of both countries will be safe in his hands and justice will be done to all concerned.

CLAIMS ON ACCOUNT OF SHIPS, RADIO STATION, AND PATENTS

Acting under the authority given him by Congress the President of the United States seized ships belonging to German nationals, a radio station, and certain patents.

In accordance with the joint resolution under which the ships were seized the value of the ships was appraised by a naval board of survey. This board reported an aggregate value of all the ships of approximately $33,000,000.

The appraisal was purely an ex parte proceeding. It seemed to your committee that the shipowners should have an opportunity to present their side of the case. The shipowners have claimed an aggregate value of approximately $300,000,000. The bill proposes that an arbiter will determine, after an opportunity to be heard has been given the owners, the just compensation which should be paid by the United States for the ships, the radio station, and the patents. It is impossible to predict, of course, what the aggregate final determinations will be. I would suppose that the values will probably be somewhat in excess of the values determined by the naval board of survey. Under the agreement entered into the aggregate amount which the United States will ultimately be called upon to pay can not exceed $100,000,000.

Inasmuch as the lowest estimate, including interest to January 1, 1928, is approximately $50,000,000, the bill provides for the immediate appropriation of this amount. If the arbiter determines an amount in excess of $50,000,000, his reports will be transmitted to Congress for additional appropriation.

Under the agreement the owners of the ships, the radio station, and the patents will receive, as soon as the proceedings of the arbiter will permit, the immediate payment of 50 per cent of their awards and the ultimate payment of the remainder.

The above outlines the three main problems dealt with in the bill. There are, however, two or three additional points to which I would like to refer briefly.

AWARDS OF THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

During the consideration of the legislation by the committee and on the floor of the House, it has frequently been asked: Why should the payment to the United States of the amount of its awards be postponed?

In the first place, the United States has no lien against any property as security for the payment of its claims. Secondly, the Government of the United States is expected to endure. It should not be concerned with a postponement of payment, even if that postponement is for a relatively long period of time, so long as it will receive payment eventually. And lastly, it must be borne in mind that all the negotiations were conducted by the United States Government. If, as a result of those negotiations, we are receiving an insufficient sum to make proper payments on all the awards of the Mixed Claims Commission, it seems to me that the United States Government should accept the responsibility and, under the circumstances, should be willing to give a priority to its citizens.

INSURANCE AWARDS

There has been considerable interest displayed in the payment of awards of insurance companies. It seems to me that the actual consideration should be laid before the House.

Awards of the Mixed Claims Commission are absolutely final and binding, so far as they evidence a direct financial responsibility of Germany for the payment of the amounts awarded. I have heard no one assert that Germany should not pay, at least eventually, all the amounts properly due from her.

It has been contended that the payment of the insurance-company awards should be postponed. As a matter of fact that is, for all practical purposes, exactly what the bill does. The insurance-company awards, at least in so far as they amount to any material sum of money, are in excess of $100,000. Many of them greatly exceed this amount. Under the bill, the final payment of all these awards will not take place within 22 years.

The testimony before the Committee on Ways and Means shows conclusively that the insurance companies who have received awards did not profit by their war-risk insurance. In fact some of them even lost money. Although the rates were advanced appreciably because of the additional risks, it was stated before the committee that their rates were, as a practical proposition, fixed by the rates established by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, which was in competition with the private insurance companies.

Furthermore, there is a complete answer to the contention. Twenty-four million three hundred thousand dollars' worth of claims of the United States are based upon the right of subrogation under the insurance policies written by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance—exactly the same kind of claims held by the insurance companies. In addition, I think we are safe in saying that this entire amount represents profit to the United States on its war-risk insurance business.

The balance of the awards of the United States, $17,715,000, represents claims on account of damages to vessels owned by the United States and operated by the Shipping Board or the United States Railroad Administration.

Section 5 of the bill provides for the establishment of a special fund to be made up of four items, as follows:

First. Twenty per cent of amounts now held by the Alien Property Custodian.

Second. The unallocated interest fund, approximately $25,000,000.

Third. Fifty million dollars appropriation for the payment of ship claims.

Fourth. All receipts in respect of claims against Germany by reason of awards of Mixed Claims Commission.

In this brief résumé of the purposes of this bill I have avoided all references to the terms of treaties which must underlie any form of agreement or settlement. These have been explained to you by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER]. They are also included in the report accompanying the bill. I preferred to make my statement in as simple and plain form as possible, without legal complications or phraseology.

No one claims that the form of settlement proposed by this bill is perfect. On the other hand, it is the best proposition which those who have the matter in hand can offer, due to the many complexities. It would seem to me that those not approving it should offer constructive suggestions of changes rather than destructive criticism.

The bill should become law promptly for the best interests of all claimants and the Government.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, it is apparent to all that this bill under discussion will pass this branch of the Congress, but in spite of this certainty I wish to hold it long enough to mark it with the earnest protest of at least one Member of the House. The bill partakes both of a national and international character and should be discussed in the light of international practices and domestic law. I am opposing the bill chiefly because it incorporates the idea of confiscation, which is repugnant to the sentiment of the country, as expressed in our fundamental law and the law of nations. This country at its very inception committed itself in the first treaty that it ever made, which was with France, to the doctrine of nonconfiscation of alien private property as a result of war. The other great powers had for many hundreds of years been departing from the old doctrine of confiscation that was greatly extended under the rule of the Roman Empire and had done much toward the refinement and humanizing of international law. In 1785 we entered into a treaty with Prussia whereby provision was made for the protection of life and property and the peaceful pursuit of trade of the subjects and citizens of both countries in time of war. This treaty was renewed in 1799 and again in 1828.

The statement has been made on the floor in debate that it was not made with Germany, therefore leaving the House to assume that we were not bound thereby so far as Germany was concerned. I would like to call the attention of the committee to the fact that both Germany and the United States have always regarded the treaty as applying to the whole German Empire. In a correspondence between the Secretary of State and the German minister in 1871 the treaty was considered as extending to the whole of Germany. This recognition was again given in the treaty in 1884, when our Government protested discriminatory rates threatened by German railways. It was again recognized in a decision rendered by our Supreme Court in the case of Disconto Gesellschaft v. Umbright (208 U. S. 570), in which Mr. Justice Day said:

> This treaty is printed as one of the treaties in force in compilation of 1904, page 643, and has undoubtedly been recognized by the two governments as still in force since the formation of the German Empire.

Similar rulings were made in later decisions rendered by the same court. There is further authority for the contention that the treaty was in force with the whole of the German Empire found in a general order issued by the greatest living soldier, General Pershing, to the American Expeditionary Forces in France, July 1, 1918. The order, among other things, contained the following:

> By the treaty of Berlin, 1799, still in force, the United States of America and the King of Prussia solemnly pledged themselves to the world and to each other * * * the obligations of this treaty will be scrupulously observed unless and until substantially violated by Germany, in which case further orders will be published from these headquarters.

So we may conclude that the argument that the treaty was not with the whole of Germany can not prevail. It is my contention, Mr. Chairman, that the Prussian treaty was in force and binding upon the contracting parties until August 25, 1921, when the treaty of Berlin was made.

Under the trading with the enemy act of October 6, 1917, creating the office of Alien Property Custodian and later amendments thereto, all property in the country belonging to aliens was seized. While I contend that this was in violation of our commitments under the Berlin treaty, yet it was an authorized exercise of the war powers of the Government. However, a study of the debates in both the House and the Senate had upon this bill will disclose the fact that no contention was made that the property of the alien should be or was to be confiscated.

In other words, the purpose of the bill was to sequester all such property; that is, take control of it and put it beyond the possibility of being used by the enemy in the waging of war against us. Some time before we entered the war the Secretary of State, with presidential sanction, stated in substance that in case of war with Germany that the property of the Germans located in this country would be protected, and that there would be no confiscation. President Wilson in his proclamation of April 6, 1917, declared—

> All alien enemies are enjoined to preserve the peace toward the United States * * *. And so long as they shall conduct themselves according to law, they shall be undisturbed in the peaceful pursuit of their lives and occupations and be accorded the consideration due to all peaceful and law-abiding persons, except so far as restriction may be necessary for their own protection and for the safety of the United States.

Again in later messages to the Congress he reannounced this same policy to be followed by the Government.

In his letter to Pope Benedict XV, he said:

> The American people have suffered intolerable wrongs at the hands of the Imperial German Government, but they desire no reprisal upon the German people, who have suffered all things in this war that they did not choose.

To now pass legislation that embodies the idea of confiscation would be to overturn our national policy, to violate our treaty obligations, do violence to our domestic law, and shock world confidence. We must in the treatment that we give the subject of the bill be mindful of treaties existing at the time of our entrance into the war.

Mr. HOOPER. Is not the gentleman from Georgia confounding seizure of German property with confiscation of German property?

Mr. COX. I shall come to that question in a moment and undertake to answer the gentleman.

Some Members, as I understand, are under the impression that this 20 per cent of the alien property and the unallocated interest is in fact held by the Government as security for the payment of the claims of our nationals against the German Government. This is not quite accurate, for as I interpret the bill, this fund made up in large part with the property of the alien is appropriated to the payment of the claims of our nationals against the German Government.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly, the 20 per cent is taken now, but provision is made for its repayment. It is held as security.

Mr. COX. Not as security. Let me direct the gentleman's attention to the report of the Senate Committee considering this bill at the last session of Congress. I read you from the report:

> The House bill provided for the return of 80 per cent of the property of German nationals held by the Alien Property Custodian and the temporary retention of the remaining 20 per cent and its application to the payment of the claims of American citizens.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Exactly, "temporary retention."

Mr. COX. Yes; but applied to the payment of claims against the German Government. Now, while these two questions, that is, the return of alien property and the payment of our nationals are somewhat related, they are not so much so that treatment must be given at one and the same time. We owe one duty to the alien enemy and another to our nationals. We owe it to the enemy to return his property without regard to the question of the payment of our nationals. This property represents investments made here upon the invitation of the Government. Aliens came here and spent a lifetime in the accumulation of a large part of this property in question. It represents their savings. To all intents and purposes, they were citizens of this country. They simply had failed to become naturalized. Shall the property of such be taken and be used for the payment of the claims of our nationals which, in many instances, represents the loss of profits on transactions had in time of war and nothing more? Such a procedure, to my mind, is indefensible. The treaty of Berlin contained the following stipulation:

All property of the Imperial German Government, or its successor or successors, and of all German nationals, which was, on April 6, 1917, in or has since that date come into the possession or under control of, or has been the subject of a demand by the United States of America, or of any of its officers, agents, or employees, from any source or by any agency whatever * * * shall be retained by the United States of America and no disposition thereof made, except as shall have been heretofore or specifically hereafter shall be provided by law until such time as the Imperial German Government * * * shall have made suitable provision for the satisfaction of all claims against said governments, respectively.

When we made the London agreement, adopting the Dawes plan, we made, I respectfully contend, "suitable provision" for the payment of our nationals, as provided for in the treaty of Berlin. What other provisions for the payment of our nationals have we the right to demand? In other words, is it our right to disregard the provisions of the London agreement and demand of Germany that she make other and further agreements by way of "suitable provision"?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER of New York. But who must define the term "suitable"?

While I agree with a large part of the gentleman's argument, that the German alien property is held as a trust fund, I can not go any further, because the treaty of Berlin puts it on the Congress of the United States to determine the definition of the word "suitable."

Mr. COX. Yes; but entering into the London agreement and accepting allocations under the Paris agreement subsequently made, we committed our nationals, who were, of course, compelled to act through the Government to an arrangement whereby claims were to be paid, and of course this arrangement deferred the time of payment to such extent as to mean no payment at all in a large sense, not in the lifetime of many of the claimants.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If there was any acceptance by Congress at all, it was not evidenced by any action thereon.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman mean with reference to the treaty of Berlin?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. The treaty of Berlin was ratified, but I am talking about the 2½ per cent awarded out of the reparations. We took that as that was all the Allies would let Germany pay us. They would not let Germany pay us any more.

Mr. COX. Yes; but in the arrangements made our nationals were represented by our Government, and the Government accepted it.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. Will the gentleman, for the benefit of some of us who are not as familiar with the terms of the treaties as apparently the gentleman is, tell us exactly what provision was made under the Dawes plan by the German Government to pay the claims of American citizens against the German Government?

Mr. COX. I must not permit myself to be drawn away from the main discussion by answering questions which, so far as the purpose of my discussion is concerned, is without relevancy.

Mr. WAINWRIGHT. In the simplest terms, what was the provision made by the Dawes plan for the payment of American claims against the German Government?

Mr. OLIVER of New York. Two and a quarter per cent, $10,700,000 a year.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman state before he gets through how he would dispose of the German and the American claims?

Mr. COX. I will with pleasure. Anything less than the complete return of the alien private property would, in my judgment, discredit the country. Pardon me here. I want to refer to another provision of the bill. That is, that clause that is intended to vest the power in the Alien Property Custodian to make further and additional seizures. It is almost unbelievable that such a suggestion would be made here 10 years after the end of the war. Why permit further seizures and further outrages perpetrated against the peaceable alien, amounting in a large part to a confiscation of his property?

The argument is offered that the reason for this provision is to enable the custodian to treat all property alike. With reference to the claims of our nationals, I concede that the Government owes them the duty to exert all of its powers, permitted under the law, to see that their claims are paid. Frankly, I am prepared to support a measure under which this Government would be authorized to make settlement of these claims, at least in large part and upon a reasonable basis.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I do not think I fully understand the gentleman from Georgia. Does he mean that he would pay German claims in full and our Government should make appropriation to pay the American claims?

Mr. COX. I would pay the German nationals. I would restore all the German property.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And make appropriation to pay the American claims?

Mr. COX. Yes, in part and under certain conditions.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Upon what grounds would the gentleman base the suggestion in having the Government of the United States assume the obligation of the German Government for the destruction of its property?

Mr. COX. That is a question the answer to which almost destroys the argument. This is my answer, however. The arrangements made between the United States and Germany whereby the claims of our nationals were to be paid, amounted to such a sacrifice of the interest of claimants that it would appear that there is justification for the Government assuming some responsibility. At any rate, the assurance is given by the proponents of this bill that nobody will lose anything, that the alien will receive all of his property with interest, and our national collect his full claim. If this is so certain as is contended, then would it not be better that the Congress return the property belonging to the alien, pay our own nationals and subrogate itself to the rights of its nationals whose have been or may be adjudicated by the Mixed Claims Commission? In other words, the Government can better finance these claims than individuals. This whole bill, so far as future payments are concerned, to both the alien and our national, is put upon the certainty of Germany meeting her obligations under the Dawes plan.

If Germany fails to pay, then the alien fails to receive the balance due and claimants against Germany would likewise suffer. That is, this happens so far as provision made by this bill is concerned. If the statement of policy of the bill is to be taken as binding upon the Congress, then this Government substitutes its liability for that of Germany, because of the assurance here given that the alien will receive his property and our claimants the satisfaction of their demands.

Mr. BOWLING. Is it not contrary to our treaty with Germany to hold the German property as hostage or security whereby our nationals may secure what is coming to them? Is that lawful?

Mr. COX. I think it is in violation of the treaty.

Mr. BANKHEAD. As I understand the gentleman, he thinks it not only in violation of the terms of the treaty but a transgression of public morality.

Mr. COX. Yes; I agree with the gentleman.

In the last Congress there was introduced what was known as the Mills bill. It was killed off by the indictment drawn against it by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER], who denounced it as a "colossal steal." The reason for this was that it provided that the United States should settle the claim of its nationals against Germany, subrogating itself to the rights of the claimant, making collections according to the terms of the Dawes plan. In this connection I want to say that this bill embodies those same principles, because if the statement of policy is held as binding upon the Congress then there is a substitution of the liabilities of this Government for Germany so far as the payment of the claims of our nationals against Germany are concerned. The bill further authorizes an appropriation of $50,000,000. One half is to go to the payment of claims for ships that were seized by the Government, the other half into this fund out of which our nationals are to be paid, and this represents, to the extent that it goes, the payment on the part of this Government of claims that its nationals hold against the German Government.

My colleagues, this bill should not pass for many reasons that are convincing to me. It is confiscatory in principle and in fact.

It violates our solemn treaties and domestic law. It is a positive injustice to those who trusted us in casting their lot in our midst, many loyal supporters of the Government, and citizens to every intent and purpose, the only trouble being they had not become naturalized. It appropriates their property to the satisfaction of claims of great interests, whose claims represent the loss of profits on transactions carried on during the war. The bill interferes with the rights of contract because of the limitations fixed upon payment. It injures world confidence in the permanency of our laws and in the binding force of our international engagements, thereby endangering our trade and commerce, the extension and improvement of which is necessary to the future prosperity of the country. It is a measure which is not reflective of the public will, because, as I believe, a well-advised public would not support a measure that brings reflection upon the Government and injures its standing in the family of nations. It is a poor compromise and a credit to no one. I take the position that it should not pass. I have no hopes of its being defeated nor of anything that I have said influencing results, but I am persuaded that if you should approach consideration of the bill with an open mind and free of the war spirit that affects your judgment that you would denounce the measure as a wicked proposal to do injustice to innocent people, to reverse a sound policy of government, the observance of which has meant so much to the advancement of the Republic as a great and just world power. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, a great Democratic statesman for whom, in spite of my rather intense Republicanism, I have always had a very high admiration, once said in a grave crisis, "It is a condition and not a theory that confronts us." I would be happy to vote for such a bill as has been suggested by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox]. I did favor, and I might say I would still favor, the Mills bill. I would like to return all of the German property immediately, and I would like to make provision for the immediate payment of the claims of American nationals. I would go even as far as the gentleman from Georgia in voting an appropriation out of the Federal Treasury to make that complete settlement possible. If the gentleman thinks it can be done, let him test it by a motion to recommit this bill. It is impossible. Everybody knows it is. Not being able to get all I want, but still being convinced that our Government and our people should take as immediate steps as possible to clear up this situation, I am willing to vote for the best compromise legislation that has yet been proposed. The gentleman says the bill implies confiscation. I do not think so. It does mean the complete return of alien property ultimately and a substantial doing of justice to all parties concerned. The gentleman said that 20 per cent of German property is being confiscated. It is not. It is being put in this special deposit fund temporarily, as are other assets, in order that payment may immediately be made of the most pressing claims, both of Germans and of Americans. It is merely temporarily withheld, but even interest is paid upon it and will be paid upon it until all of the 20 per cent has ultimately been returned. There is only one item upon which interest will not be paid and that is upon the unallocated interest, and to pay interest upon that would be to pay compound interest.

The gentleman said the London agreement did make a suitable arrangement for the payment of American claims. Who is to determine whether that was a suitable arrangement? The provision was put in for the benefit of the United States, and why should not the United States itself, through its Congress, determine when a suitable arrangement has been made? I do not think this bill is in violation of the treaty of Berlin or of the London agreement.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There has never been any claim of that kind on the part of the Germans.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman [Mr. Cox] asks what will be done if Germany fails to make payment under the provisions of the Dawes agreement. We might speculate, of course, as to the future; but we have a treaty with Germany; we have an arrangement with Germany, and we are making commitments of our own in this very legislation. If we can not presume that these arrangements will be carried out in good faith we might as well stop all attempts at any legislation of any kind. That is purely speculation. We have as much right to say that with the present spirit of Germany and with the present control of the politics of Germany there is no question that the payments provided for under the Dawes arrangement will be made by the German Government.

I want to call attention to a very peculiar situation here with reference to these two funds or these two sets of claims on the part of Germany on the one side and America on the other.

The total amount of German property held by the Alien Property Custodian on October 31 last amounted in value to $245,000,000 in round numbers. The total claims of the United States of America and its nationals against Germany on January 1, 1928, will amount to $247,000,000 and some odd hundred thousand—$245,000,000 on the one side and $247,000,000 on the other.

This bill is framed so that by the use of the special-deposit fund and by the payment of the reparations under the Dawes agreement, while it may take a term of years, ultimately both of these obligations—our obligation for the German property held by the Alien Property Custodian and the obligations of Germany to the Americans and to the United States Government—will be paid off and offset one against the other.

There remains only the fund of $50,000,000. The gentleman from Georgia spoke of a fund of $100,000,000. There is no such fund. There will be a fund of $50,000,000——

Mr. COX. I think the gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If I did, I am glad to be corrected.

Mr. COX. I said there was an appropriation of $50,000,000.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There will be an appropriation of $50,000,000. I think that the gentleman said, "One-half of the appropriation will go to pay claims of German nationals and one-half will go to the special-deposit fund." The fact is that the whole of the $50,000,000 will go into the special-deposit fund. It will be appropriated out of the Federal Treasury for the payment of just claims against the United States of the owners of the ships, the radio station at Sayville, N. J., and the patents which were seized by the United States during the war.

Mr. COX. Is not $25,000,000 used for the payment of the German claims?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Twenty-five million dollars will go into this deposit fund in 1928 and another $25,000,000 will go into the deposit fund later, in 1929. The whole $50,000,000 will go into this deposit fund, but the whole fund, including the resources from every angle, will be used to pay German claims as well as American claims. This appropriation is only temporarily being placed in this deposit fund for that purpose, but will ultimately be used to pay German claims on ships, radio station, and patents.

We do not know how much will be needed for that purpose. I have heard the argument that a limitation of $100,000,000 is too high. I do not know whether, ultimately, it will be too high or not. Some 10 or 11 years ago there was a valuation of $33,000,000, as I remember it, placed upon the ships alone by a Navy board; but if we are going to make settlements in full, if we are going to follow the same lines we have followed throughout in these settlements and pay interest on deferred payments, we may find the ultimate claims will be a great deal more than $33,000,000 or $50,000,000; but the amount that ultimately shall be paid will be determined by an arbiter appointed by the President of the United States, and I say there never was a more liberal offer by any government in the world in the settlement of an international dispute or of international claims than that which was made by Germany in this case when she voluntarily gave to the President of the United States sole authority, without any action on her part, to appoint the arbiter who shall determine what sums shall be paid to German nationals for the acquisition of these ships and for the radio station and the patents.

I am not going into any long, detailed discussion of the plan which is involved here. It is rather involved; it is rather intricate and complex; but your committee, which has considered this matter, went over it thoroughly and reached, I think, the unanimous conclusion that this is the only practical manner in which this matter can now be adjusted. And there is the further argument that the parties involved have agreed to it. The German claimants have agreed to it, American nationals having claims against Germany have agreed to it, and it requires only the sanction and the consent of the Congress of the United States.

It is rather odd, Mr. Chairman, that the debate upon this bill began in 1926 upon the same date as in 1927, the 16th day of December. On the 18th of December last we passed the bill in the House by a vote of 281 to 66. There is no substantial difference between this bill and the bill that was then passed. Let us again ring in the yuletide by the passage of a bill which will make for friendliness, for peace and good will between nations which but a short decade ago were at arm's length in the throes of war. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

The gentleman from Iowa has six minutes remaining and the gentleman from Mississippi two minutes remaining.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I can not say much in six minutes, so I will allow the gentleman from Mississippi to control the remainder of the time.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JACOBSTEIN].

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak on the bill only because I fear I may have been misunderstood in my attitude toward it by what I said the other day in criticism of the claims of private insurance companies. I still feel that there is a criticism that might be made of it, but I did not mean to imply that I was not in favor of the bill. I am in favor of it and will vote for it. Last year I voted for it, and I shall vote for it again when an opportunity is presented.

It is not an ideal bill. Perhaps an ideal bill can not be expected under the circumstances, with all the conflicting elements and conflicting interests. I think the Ways and Means Committee deserve commendation and gratitude for presenting to the House a bill which we can with a clear conscience vote for. It does not pay back 100 per cent to the German nationals, which I think we should have done five years ago. I think also that it is unfortunate that property interests are given preference over the interest of human life.

I was very much interested in the statement made by that distinguished statesman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], when he said that we ought to pay the claims of the insurance companies in order to establish the principle that property should be paid for when destruction is made on the high seas.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Death claims are to be paid for.

Mr. JACOBSTEIN. I am glad the bill provides that death claims shall be paid, but there are certain personal claims that are not paid for at all; only those are paid for where dependents are left behind. Human life is not regarded as valuable as property. I wish by the same token that we might appraise human life as valuable as we do property in this bill.

I should like to see the claims of the United States Government put on a par with the claims of the insurance companies, but they are not. I should like to see the bill amended and the change making the American Government claims on a par with the private insurance companies. But I shall vote for the bill because it is nine-tenths of the whole and because I realize that it is the only thing that can be had. Justice delayed is justice denied.

About $500,000,000 is involved in the settling of war claims under this bill. Approximately half of this huge amount will be paid to German citizens whose property was seized during the World War. The other half will be paid over to American citizens whose property was either seized or destroyed by the German Government, and for which no restitution has been made. Uncle Sam appears both as a creditor and as a debtor; as a creditor he will be paid for losses resulting from destruction of ships, and so forth; as a debtor Uncle Sam will compensate German interests for the ships, patents, and radio plants seized by our Government.

But there is involved not only half a billion dollars but a great principle of international law. It has always been the honorable and traditional policy of our Government not to confiscate property of private citizens even of our enemy. Our great statesmen from Alexander Hamilton to the present time have declared confiscation to be repugnant to our sense of justice and public morals.

On the other hand, our Government can not and should not allow our own citizens to suffer loss of property or damages due for loss of life. Fortunately a compromise has been affected in this bill by which the interests of both parties are mutually conserved. It is not a perfect bill, but the best compromise measure that has been submitted to Congress since the problem has been up for solution.

Justice delayed is often justice denied. Our citizens and German citizens have waited 10 long years for the settlement and payment of their adjudicated claims. I shall gladly vote for this bill because it is a solution of one of the most complicated problems resulting from the World War.

It is true the interested parties will not be paid in full at once. The German citizens will receive 80 per cent immediately, 20 per cent of their property being withheld as security and also to make possible the payment of American claimants at once, in part at least. The American claimants will be paid about 60 per cent immediately, and up to 80 per cent before the Germans recover their unpaid balance. Then both parties share equally thereafter as the fund accumulates for this purpose.

Our Federal Treasury will not be called on to pay out one cent, except as it pays for the ships, patents, and radio equipment it seized and used for its own purposes. Even if no settlement were made as provided for in this bill, our Government would directly or indirectly pay for this seized property.

The half billion dollars will be paid out first from funds now in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, seized from and belonging originally to the German citizens; next from interest which has accumulated on this seized property; and then from the annual payments to be made, or already made, by the German Government as part of the reparations due us from Germany and stipulated in agreements already made.

It will probably take 25 years to clean up this settlement in full. Uncle Sam is the most deferred creditor. Under this bill the Federal Treasury will be the last to be paid off. Individuals, both American and German, will get most of their claims paid within 5 years, and in full in about 15 years.

It is not a perfect but at least is a practical and a just settlement.

I like especially that feature of the bill which calls for full and immediate payments of all claims for personal injury and loss of life, and all property claims under $100,000. The large property claims are made to wait. I don't like the idea of paying off large insurance claims of companies which profited during the war before our own Government is paid off.

For 10 years the American and German claimants have been waiting for the return of their property and settlement of their claims. Because I believe a graver injustice would be done in further delay, I am for the passage of the bill and for the early settlement of these claims. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing therein a statement made before the committee with respect to this bill by ex-Senator R. L. Owen.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, under permission granted by the House I am inserting a statement prepared by former Senator Robert L. Owen, of Oklahoma, with reference to the Alien Property Custodian bill now under consideration:

STATEMENT OF HON. ROBERT L. OWEN WITH REGARD TO THE RETURN OF ALIEN PROPERTY AND SETTLEMENT OF AMERICAN CLAIMS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Gentlemen of the committee, in considering the return of German alien property and the settlement of American claims, your attention is respectfully invited, first, to the interests of the United States and the importance of its fixed policies with regard to the safety of private property.

OUR DOMESTIC INTERESTS

During the last century international law had developed a policy of giving complete protection to private property in the event of war, and practically all of the civilized nations respected this policy of protecting private property. The United States for a hundred and fifty years has maintained this policy firmly without a single departure. In 1802 it paid Great Britain approximately $3,000,000 to settle claims arising from confiscatory acts of individual States during the preceding war. The reason for this policy was as stated by Jefferson, Hamilton, and others responsible for the Constitution of the United States—that is, that when individuals confided themselves and their property to the hospitality and protection of our Government; when they loyally subjected themselves to our laws; when they paid taxes and created values by their industry and intelligence, there arose an implied contact between such individuals and the Government that they were entitled to protection, even if the foreign government of which they might be subject, should engage the United States in war.

Obviously, such individuals were innocent of making war, and the making of war by our Government could not be justly held to break the social compact, implied or actual, between them and our Government. Our Government, therefore, by the Constitution does pledge protection of their property against confiscation by numerous provisions. In consequence of this policy long pursued, the United States became a haven to which men might repair confiding in the safety of their private property invested in the United States. As an obvious result, hundreds of millions of dollars came to America and were invested in America, and the United States became of increasing industrial, commercial, and financial importance. Huge sums of money were borrowed from abroad and invested in the United States, by which our railroad system was built up and many industries were transplanted from abroad to the United States as a place both of profit and safety.

If we should now confiscate the German alien property and hold these individuals responsible for the alleged wrongdoing of the old German Imperial Government, or of the present democratic German Republic, we should be serving notice on all the world that the ancient and honorable standards set in the United States for the safety of private property could no longer be relied on.

Obviously this would be a very serious reason to prevent in future the free flow of capital for investment in the United States from abroad and would thus interfere with the greater future prosperity which America might otherwise attain. It would be against our present domestic financial interest.

Moreover, it would be against the honor and good repute of the United States abroad, because such an act, in violating our executive and legislative promises, would lower in the estimate of the world the good name of the United States Government, which has the opportunity now of setting a standard of high principle throughout the world. This is peculiarly the case because by the treaty of Versailles private property of aliens was in effect confiscated by Great Britain, by France, by Italy, by Belgium. These Governments have injured their own standing by this disregard and violation of the rights of private property, a fatal principle which led, perhaps, to the extreme disregard of private property by the communists and bolshevik throughout Europe. Is is to the national interest of America to stand strenuously against the Bolshevik doctrine or any doctrine which disregards the rights of private property upon which civilization itself is based. For that reason the domestic policy of the United States should stand steadily for the safeguarding of private property and complete protection to the owners of the German alien property now held by the United States Government, as well as for the protection of the American claimants whose property has been put in jeopardy by war and who now seek the protection of their own Government in the measures which your honorable committee is considering.

OUR FOREIGN INTERESTS

It is of equal importance to the United States in relation to our foreign affairs that we should treat private property as a sacred right.

The United States during the last 10 years has had an enormous development in its industrial, commercial, and financial life, and the present known outstanding investments of the United States and its nationals abroad exceed $20,000,000,000.

If we treat the right of private property lightly or inconsiderately we thereby set a false precedent which may be infinitely injurious to the United States. If we confiscate private property invested in the United States in disregard of our own Constitution and legislative pledges, we should not be surprised if other nations should avail themselves of such an evil precedent to confiscate the private property of our citizens and bring on international complications of dangerous consequences. The great friction which has taken place between our Government and other governments where American property has been put in jeopardy on a serious scale will readily occur to your honorable committee. The German alien property, amounting possibly with its reductions to $200,000,000, is only one-hundredth part of the American investments abroad.

Our foreign economic interests, therefore, require that we should not put in jeopardy such interests by establishing a bad precedent. We should not be influenced by those nations who have in the stress and excitement at the ending of the great war violated this principle. It is clearly evident that their present financial embarrassment and difficulty of getting credits on a favorable basis are partly due to the sense of insecurity which has been brought about by this unwise policy. Their grave blunder in disregarding their own previous better policies is a warning to us and not an example.

Therefore, in considering the question of the German alien property and the settlement of American claims, our own national, domestic, and economic interest should be well considered as of the greatest importance in guiding our action in regard to such settlements.

America has now the opportunity to maintain and set precedents of far-reaching consequences to the great future of the United States and to the world itself. We feel justified, therefore, in submitting to your honorable committee the further consideration which justifies your committee in recommending to Congress the complete settlement of these questions.

THE HONOR AND DIGNITY OF THE UNITED STATES

Separate and apart from all economic considerations is the honor and dignity of the United States. The devotion of the American people to their Government is due to the fact that they entertain a profound respect and love for the Government of the United States, because they know that that Government is incapable of conscious wrong, that they are justified in entertaining the deepest sentiment of honor and respect for that Government, that the Government fulfills every just obligation, that its dignity and its honor are kept immaculate by the representatives of the American people. And nothing could make amends to have this faith of the people weakened in any degree by an act of Congress or by an omission to act by Congress, which would show that the Congress of the United States was in any way indifferent to the legislative and executive pledges and commitments of this Government. So that our honor and our dignity alike require the most scrupulous consideration in disposing of this important question.

We therefore feel every confidence in submitting the following observations with regard to the questions before your committee:

First. The question of the return of the German alien property.

GERMAN ALIEN PROPERTY RETURN

We submit that the German alien property owners should have relief at the present session of Congress.

For nine years they have been deprived of their property. Even if Congress acts now it will take from one to two more years to make the settlements. Their need has been and is known to be serious.

It is conceded that as private individuals, trusting their large investments entirely to the protection and the justice of the United States, they were not responsible for the World War, which was ruinous to them.

TREATY PROVISIONS

They came under the mutual protection of the Government of the United States and of the former Imperial Government of Germany, under the special treaty provisions of the United States and Prussia of 1799, article 23, as renewed by article 12 of the treaty of 1828, and of the principles declared by the United States in the Jay treaty of 1794, article 10.

The treaty between the United States and Prussia of 1799 provided as follows:

"ART. 23. If war should arise between the two contracting parties, the merchants of either country then residing in the other shall be allowed to remain nine months to collect their debts and settle their affairs; and may depart freely, carrying off all their effects without molestation or hindrance; and all women and children, scholars of every faculty, cultivators of the earth, artisans, manufacturers, and fishermen, unarmed and inhabiting unfortified towns, villages, or places, and in general all others whose occupations are for the common subsistence and benefit of mankind, shall be allowed to continue their respective employments and shall not be molested in their persons, nor shall their houses or goods be burnt or otherwise destroyed, nor their fields wasted by the armed force of the enemy into whose power by the events of war they may happen to fall; but if anything is necessary to be taken from them for the use of such armed force, the same shall be paid for at a reasonable price.

"And it is declared that neither the pretense that war dissolves all treaties, nor any other whatever, shall be considered as annulling or suspending this and the next preceding article; but on the contrary, that the state of war is precisely that for which they are provided, and during which they are to be as sacredly observed as the most acknowledged articles in the law of nature and nations."

This article was renewed by article 12 of the treaty of 1828, in force when the property was taken over. (See vol. 2, Malloy Treaties and Conventions, p. 1494.)

Article 10 of the Jay treaty of 1794 provided:

"Neither the debts due from individuals of one nation to individuals of the other, nor shares, nor moneys, which they have in the public funds, or in the public or private banks, shall ever in any event of war or national differences be sequestrated or confiscated, it being unjust and impolitic that debts and engagements contracted and made by individuals, having confidence in each other and in their respective governments, should ever be destroyed or impaired by national authority on account of national differences and discontents."

The United States Government in pursuance of this just policy under the treaty of January 8, 1802, paid Great Britain some $3,000,000 to make good acts of confiscation against British subjects practiced by some of the States in the Revolutionary War.

UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION

They came under the special protection of the Constitution of the United States, which having taken every precaution to secure the protection of private property, declares as a fundamental principle:

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures."

It expressly declares that this right "shall not be violated."

It declares that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. It makes no provision for taking private property for private use, even with compensation.

Amendment 5 especially declares:

"No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

The word person, as used in this amendment, is not confined to a citizen, but covers any person of foreign allegiance domiciled in America or doing business in America.

The Constitution provides adequate means of protecting property rights against private as well as public trespass.

The Constitution makes the principle of holding private property inviolably binding on the 48 States, and says:

"Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

The Constitution forbids any State to pass any bill of attainder or law impairing the obligation of a contract.

These constitutional provisions were based on the principles enunciated by Thomas Jefferson, Alexander Hamilton, Benjamin Franklin, George Washington, and were based upon fundamental justice, sound morals, and wise international policy.

The authors of the Constitution held that when the Government admits foreigners, or invites them to bring property into the country, to pay taxes, to obey and uphold the law, the Government thereby tacitly pledges protection and security to such tax-paying foreigners. That such aliens subject to the civil and criminal law in war as well as in peace, by their loyal obedience to the law, are entitled to protection. That the seizure of their property, therefore, and its confiscation, would not only violate the implied contract of hospitable residence, but would violate every rule of justice and equity.

In his Camillus Letter 18, Alexander Hamilton said:

"No power of language at my command can express the abhorrence I feel at the idea of violating the property of individuals, which, in an authorized intercourse in time of peace, has been confided to the faith of our Government and laws on account of controversy between nation and nation. In my view every moral and every political sense unite to consign it to execration."

Alexander Hamilton, in 1794, discussing the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, urging the doctrine of the protection of private property, said:

"Moreover, the property of the foreigner within our country may be regarded as having paid a valuable consideration for its protection and exemption from forfeiture; that which is brought in commonly enriches the revenue by a duty of entry. All that is within our territory, whether acquired there or brought there, is liable to contributions to the Treasury in common with other similar property. Does there not result an obligation to protect that which contributes to the expense of its protection? Will justice sanction, upon the breaking out of a war, the confiscation of a property which, during peace, serves to augment the resources and nourish the prosperity of a State? * * * Reason, left to its own rights, would answer all these questions in one way and severely condemn the molestation on account of a national contest, as well of the property as of the person of a foreigner found in our country, under the license and guaranty of the laws of previous amity."

It was under this policy that the United States paid Great Britain some $3,000,000 to make good certain acts of confiscation against British subjects practiced by some of the States in the Revolutionary War.

The United States Supreme Court has held, through John Marshall, Chief Justice (U. S. v. Percheman, 7 Peters 51), that while in waging war the United States has, as one of its war powers, the right to confiscate, still—

"The modern usage of nations, which has become a law, would be violated; that the sense of justice and of right, which is acknowledged and felt by the whole civilized world, would be outraged if private property should be generally confiscated and private rights annulled."

The United States never has, even in war, in a hundred and fifty years confiscated alien private property.

CONFISCATION WOULD VIOLATE EXECUTIVE PLEDGES

When this country was threatened with the renewal of the submarine warfare, and war was contemplated, and the probable consequences, and alien property owners began to withdraw deposits from America, the President of the United States on February 18, 1917, through the Department of State, made the following official declaration:

"The Government of the United States will under no circumstances take advantage of a state of war to take possession of property to which, under international understanding and recognized law of the alien, gives it no just claim or title. It will scrupulously respect all private rights alike of its own citizens and subjects of foreign States."

The President of the United States said on April 2, 1917:

"We have no quarrel with the German people. We have no feeling toward them but one of sympathy and friendship. * * * We are but one of the champions of the rights of mankind. We shall be satisfied when these rights have been made as secure as the faith and freedom of the United States can make them."

The President on April 6, 1917, pledged the protection of all enemy aliens and said they would be "accorded the consideration due to all peaceful and law-abiding persons, except so far as restrictions may be necessary for their own protection and for the safety of the United States."

The President, replying to Pope Benedict, said, referring to the Germans in Europe, that the American people "desire no reprisal upon the German people, who have themselves suffered all things in this war which they did not choose."

In his message to Congress December 4, 1917, he said:

"No nation or people shall be robbed or punished because the irresponsible rulers of a single country have themselves done * * * wrong."

The President said on April 6, 1918:

"We ourselves propose no injustice, no aggressions. We are ready whenever the final reckoning is made to be just with the German people."

CONFISCATION WOULD VIOLATE LEGISLATIVE PLEDGES—TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT

The trading with the enemy act, approved October 6, 1917, shows on its face, by its context, by the manner of its presentation to Congress, by the testimony before the committees, by the reports of the committees of Congress, by the debates in Congress, that it had no intention whatever to confiscate alien property or to dishonor the pledges made by the President of the United States and by the Secretary of State immediately preceding the presentation of this bill to Congress.

The act was intended as a war measure to control trade and communication between citizens of the United States and citizens of Germany to prevent alien property being used to the disadvantage of the United States during the war, to give complete security to alien property, and to safely return it after the war or to make a just settlement, as promised by the President.

This act was drawn under the direction of the President of the United States and passed at the request of his administration for the above purpose. It was elaborately explained to Congress by Hon. Robert Lansing, Secretary of State; Hon. William C. Redfield, Secretary of Commerce; Hon. Charles Warren, Assistant Attorney General; Dr. Edward E. Prenty, Chief of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, under whose direction the act was drawn, before the committee May 29, 1917, page 13, that the bill was intended for the protection of alien property. Secretary Redfield, speaking for Mr. Lansing, in his presence said:

"The creation of an Alien Property Custodian is a novelty and is in line with that same effort toward equity which impels us to indicate an earnest desire to show to the people with whom, unfortunately, we are engaged in war, that here is the opposite of confiscation and here is the opposite of requisition."

Mr. Lansing said that the act "will put it in the hands of the Government to protect the property and it will avoid any lawless acts against it."

Mr. Warren said: "It is merely a temporary taking over of an enemy property; its conservation is in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian."

Both the Senate committee report and the House committee report (H. Rept. 685, 65th Cong., and S. Rept. 113, 65th Cong.) expressly declare the same principles and that the act did not contemplate confiscation.

The debates in Congress demonstrated the same purpose exclusively.

Mr. MONTAGUE said the act of taking over the property was done "to conserve the interests of America in this great struggle, and at the same time its final and honest payment to the creditors is made more secure."

Mr. De Walt said: "This property is not confiscated at all." He also said that the bill was not in violation of The Hague convention of 1907, which expressly provides for the protection of private property on land, and said: "It was in conformity with that idea that the proclamation of the President as early as last June was made, reaffirming the doctrine that private property should not be confiscated and that the provisions of this bill were made as they are."

Upon the suggestion of Mr. Stafford that Congress might, after the war, neglect to act, that it would have the effect of confiscation, Mr. Snook said: "Does the gentleman think that Congress will assume that position? Has the gentleman so little confidence in the Congress of the United States as to think it will not act fairly and justly with those men?"

COURT DECISIONS

The courts decided against confiscation in Pennsylvania Supreme Court (266 Pa. St. 189) and said: "The trading with the enemy act is not for confiscation of property; it is rather for its preservation. While, if the President so directs, the money or property of an alien enemy may be taken by the Government for its own purposes, the owner does not part absolutely with it if, after the end of the war, his claim to it shall be settled as Congress shall direct." This decision was confirmed by the United States Supreme Court.

In the Forty-sixth New York Supreme Court Reports, page 175, the court says: "In the exercise of its plenary power in this matter, Congress might have provided for the confiscation of enemy property, but it did not do so. The act on its face is plainly not confiscatory."

The decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the United States v. Chemical Foundation does not negative this sound doctrine. The issue of the Chemical Foundation case was whether title passes to the Chemical Foundation by sale of the patents by the Alien Property Custodian to that corporation. The court held that as a matter of law that the sale during the war of said property was valid, but this does not mean confiscation even in time of war, because the promise of the President of the United States and of the Congress of the United States to make just settlement after the war sufficiently cover the case and left an open forum for the settlement of any claim for damage arising. No individual instance had occurred under which the Alien Property Custodian should have disregarded the rights of an alien property owner that would change the purpose of the executive and legislative branches of the Government to which we have referred above.

Hon. Charles Evans Hughes, Secretary of State, in an address at Philadelphia, November 23, 1923, said: "A confiscatory policy strikes not only at the interest of particular individuals but at the foundations of international intercourse, for it is only on the basis of security of property, validly possessed under the laws existing at the time of its acquisition, that the conduct of activities in helpful cooperation is possible, * * * rights acquired under its laws by citizens of another state, a state is under an international obligation appropriately to recognize, it is the policy of the United States to support these fundamental principles."

THE LANGUAGE OF THE ACT

The language of the act shows the act was intended as a war measure only to control trade and communication between citizens of the United States and citizens and residents of Germany, and to prevent alien property being used to the disadvantage of the United States during the war, to give security to alien property and safely return it after the war or settle damage done.

The Alien Property Custodian, section 6, was empowered to receive all money and property belonging to a nonresident enemy.

German citizens in the United States holding property were not molested in person or property unless, as in a few negligible cases, by presidential proclamation they were declared enemies.

The Alien Property Custodian was to receive the property, "to hold, administer, and account for the same under the general direction of the President, and as provided in this act." But the President was expressly pledged not to confiscate but to protect the property and faithfully account for it when the war is over.

The alien property owners residing in Germany left their properties in the United States under the pledge of a German-American treaty, under the constitutional protection of the United States, under the unbroken policy of 150 years, under the protection of The Hague Convention of 1907, and the international obligation of the United States, under the executive pledges of the Secretary of State and of the President of the United States, and were perfectly justified in doing so. To confiscate the property now or to continue to retain it with the effect of confiscation would clearly dishonor the pledges made by the Chief Executive of the United States, and the obligations of the Congress itself.

The Alien Property Custodian was "vested with all of the powers of a common law trustee in respect of all property other than money," and "under such rules and regulations as the President shall prescribe, may manage such property and do any act or things in respect thereof," necessary to prevent waste. "To protect such property to the end that the interests of the United States in such property and right of such person as may ultimately become entitled thereto or to the proceeds thereof, may be preserved and safeguarded." This language is entirely inconsistent with the confiscation of the property.

Section 12 declares: "After the end of the war any claim of any enemy or of an ally of an enemy to any money or other property received and held by the Alien Property Custodian, or deposited in the United States Treasury, shall be settled as Congress shall direct." This language was discussed in Congress and its meaning explained to be that an honest accounting should be made to the owner and the return of the property or its value after the war was ended.

Section 16 imposed a penalty for willful violation of the provisions of the act that "any property, funds, security, or other articles or documents, or any vessel," etc., "concerned in such violation shall be forfeited to the United States."

This language is entirely inconsistent with the idea that the property was intended to be confiscated by the United States except for a willful violation of the act itself. At a later date, March 28, 1918, the President of the United States was authorized to acquire the title of the docks, piers, warehouses, wharves, and terminal equipment facilities on the Hudson River, now owned by the North German Line Dock Co. and the Hamburg-American Line Terminal & Navigation Co., two corporations of the State of New Jersey, if he shall deem it necessary for the national security and defense: Provided, That if such property can not be procured by purchase, then the President of the United States is authorized and empowered to take over for the United States the immediate possession and title thereof. If such property shall be taken over, as aforesaid, the United States shall make such compensation therefor, to be determined by the President. Upon the taking over of said property by the President, as aforesaid, a title to all such property so taken over shall immediately vest in the United States.

But the President was fully committed by his own proclamation and by the policy of the Government not to confiscate, but to account for such property uprightly. A plan for such adjustment is now being considered by your honorable committee, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury, representing the President of the United States. The language of this latter amendment shows there was no intent to confiscate.

On March 28, 1918, the act was further amended to give the custodian under the President the power to dispose of such properties, by sale or otherwise, "in like manner as though he were absolute owner thereof." This amendment was necessary to enable the custodian, as trustee, to convey a title free from doubt to protect the property itself. It often became necessary to dispose of assets which otherwise might be perishable, but there was no negation whatever of the duties of the trustee to continue to act faithfully as a trustee, nor was there any modification of the pledge by Congress, after the end of the war, to make a just settlement, as promised by the President.

It was under this act, as amended, that the chemical patents relating to explosives, gases, medicines, etc., were sold to the Chemical Foundation before the end of the war. The Chemical Foundation was not organized for profit but for public fiduciary purposes, to make available to the chemical industries of the United States the important patents necessary for war-making purposes and for purposes of defense. The Supreme Court held at the October term, 1926, that there was no conspiracy or fraud in such sale and that a good title passed regardless of the consideration paid. The reasoning is clear, and there is nothing inconsistent with the trading with the enemy act in this decision for the very sound reason that the owners of the patents were provided a remedy in the law itself, and because the executive and legislative branches of the Government were pledged to a just settlement when the war was over, and no injustice is done under these circumstances. Only in the event that a fair and just settlement were refused could a complaint of injustice be made.

The Alien Property Custodian has advised the return of the property.

THE CAUSES OF THE DELAY IN RETURNING GERMAN ALIEN PROPERTY

The treaty of Versailles, officially terminating the war, went into effect January 10, 1920. It was submitted to the Senate of the United States and subjected to a prolonged discussion which finally terminated at the close of the Wilson administration in a refusal to accept it.

The new administration of the Sixty-seventh Congress came into power March 4, 1921. On July 2, 1921, the Knox-Porter resolution was passed declaring the war at an end and declaring that the United States and its nationals were entitled to all rights accruing under the terms of the armistice signed November 11, 1918, or under the treaty of Versailles, or as to one of the principal allied and associated powers.

It further provided (sec. 5): "All property of the Imperial German Government or its successor or successors, and of German nationals which was on April 6, 1917, in, or has since that date come into, the possession or under control of, or has been the subject of a demand by the United States of America, or of any of its officers, agents, or employees from any source, or by any agency whatever * * * shall be retained by the United States of America, and no disposition thereof made except as shall have been heretofore, or specifically hereafter shall be provided by law, until such time as the Imperial German Government * * * or their successor or successors, shall have respectively made suitable provision for the satisfaction of all claims against said Government of all persons, wheresoever domiciled, who owe permanent allegiance to the United States of America and who have suffered through the acts of the Imperial German Government or its agents * * * since July 31, 1914, loss, damage, or injury to their persons or property, directly or indirectly, whether through the ownership of shares of stock in German * * * American or other corporations, or in consequence of hostilities or of any operations or war or otherwise," etc.

The Knox-Porter resolution also demanded the "most-favored-nation" treatment; and confirmation to the United States by Germany of "all fines, forfeitures, penalties, and seizures imposed or made by the United States of America during the war, whether in respect to the property of the Imperial German Government or German nationals" * * * "and shall have waived any and all pecuniary claims against the United States of America."

Retaining the German alien property except and until provided by law was already the United States statute law under the trading with the enemy act and Germany being required to agree to it was merely a method of requiring Germany to agree to existing law until Germany made "suitable provision" which Germany was anxious to do.

The obvious intention of the Knox-Porter resolution was not to confiscate German property but to retain it until the German Government had complied with the demands made.

The German Government did comply to the extreme limit of its capacity by the treaty of Berlin. (Hearings, Part III, pp. 17–24.)

THE BERLIN TREATY

On the 25th of August, 1921, the plenipotentiaries of the German Commonwealth and of the United States entered into a treaty of peace, reciting the armistice, the treaty of Versailles of June 28, 1919, and the Knox-Porter resolution of July 2, 1921, as follows:

"Being desirous of restoring the friendly relations existing between the two nations prior to the outbreak of war"—

Article I. "Germany undertakes to accord to the United States and the United States shall have and enjoy all the rights, privileges, indemnities, reparations, or advantages specified in the aforesaid joint resolution of the Congress of the United States of July 2, 1921, including all the rights and advantages stipulated for the benefit of the United States in the treaty of Versailles, which the United States shall fully enjoy, notwithstanding the fact that such treaty has not been ratified by the United States."

At the time of the Berlin treaty, August 25, 1921, the German Government was under the military, financial, and commercial control of the allied and associated powers. The treaty of Versailles had been enforced by a famine blockade, and the threat of an immediate resumption of war if the Government of the German Commonwealth refused to submit to the treaty of Versailles as dictated.

The President of the United States in October, 1918, had demanded the abdication of the German Imperial Government, William II and his dynasty, against which the Government of the United States had waged war. William II and the Hohenzollern dynasty abdicated prior to the armistice of November 11, and on November 9, 1918, a revolution took place in Germany to establish such a government as that demanded by the President of the United States, and desired by an overwhelming majority of the German people.

Frederick Ebert, leader of the German social democracy, on November 10, assumed the chairmanship of the council of people's commissioners. The hereditary rulers and other German kings, princes, and notables, followed the action of William II. They all stipulated abdication or acquiesced in their deposition. The military masters of Germany were overthrown. The United States had accomplished its declared purpose in waging the war.

On November 30, regulations for an election were framed to elect representatives to a constitutional convention. These regulations established the principles of universal, direct, secret, and equal suffrage for all German men and women of 20 years of age or more on the date of election. Proportional representation was established. The election was held January 19, 1919, and a provisional government was established February 10, 1919. The convention was composed of 423 delegates from 38 districts, elected by proportional representation.

The monarchist element was thus demonstrated by proportional selection to have been practically eliminated by this vote of the German people. The constitution of the German Commonwealth was adopted on July 31, 1919, and became effective by executive order August 11, 1919. A new cabinet had been organized by Gustavus Bauer. (See Constitution of the German Commonwealth by Monroe and Holcomb, Harvard University, published by the World Peace Foundation, 40 Mount Vernon Street, Boston.)

Under this treaty seeking to "restore friendly relations" with the German people shall we confiscate any part of the private property of the citizens of Germany and now in time of peace violate our executive and legislative pledges to them on the theory it will profit us in money to do so?

THE GERMAN LAW OF EXPROPRIATION

The term "reich" now means "commonwealth" or "republic," representing a national union of states.

Section 1, article 1, declares as follows: "The German Commonwealth is a republic. Political authority is derived from the people."

Article 7 provides, among other things, for jurisdiction in conjunction with the States of—

"12. The law of expropriation." (Confiscation is not recognized.)

Article 153 recites: "The right of private property is guaranteed by the constitution. Its nature and limits are defined by law. Expropriation may be proceeded with only for the benefit of the community and by due process of law. There shall be just compensation in so far as is not otherwise provided by national law. If there is a dispute over the amount of the compensation there shall be a right of appeal to the ordinary courts in so far as not otherwise provided by national law."

Article 178 declares as follows:

"The constitution of the German Empire of April 16, 1871, and the law of February 10, 1919, relating to the provision of government of the commonwealth are repealed.

"The other laws and regulations of the empire remain in force in so far as they do not conflict with this constitution. The provisions of the treaty of peace signed on June 28, 1919, at Versailles, are not affected by the constitution."

The other laws and regulations of the empire remaining in force provide that the expropriation of private property is a matter of state law under which a private property owner may have his property appropriated for public purposes upon just compensation, with a right of hearing in the state court. In this manner the rights of private property of a German citizen is protected under the German state law. The German Government in agreeing to the Berlin treaty that the German Government accords to the United States the right to retain all private property of German citizens in the United States until suitable provision was made by the German Government for the satisfaction of all claims against that Government would have had no option even if confiscation of vested private property had been contemplated. But that Government had no reason to believe, it is respectfully submitted, that when the German Government did everything in its power to make suitable provision that then the United States would resort to confiscation of the private property of the German nationals under American protection if the American claims were not fully and immediately liquidated on a cash basis.

The German Government therefore had no constitutional right to authorize the confiscation of the property of German nationals under the Weimar constitution.

It is perfectly obvious that the German Government had no intention of authorizing the confiscation. It merely surrendered to the requirement of the Government of the United States and accorded to the United States the right, which Congress had already taken, to retain the property of German nationals until the German Government made suitable provision for the satisfaction of the demands of American claimants.

But even if the German Republic had had the right to confiscate, and if the treaty of Versailles had authorized confiscation, even if the German Government had intended to authorize confiscation, the German Republic is not competent to modify the Constitution of the United States nor to modify the social compact of the United States with private persons holding property in the United States, nor to modify nor interfere with the contract relation arising from the executive and legislative pledges of the United States to protect the private property of individuals who are under the safeguard of our laws.

The United States has persistently refused to recognize the existing Government of Russia for many years on the ground that the Russian Government had systematically violated the sacred principle of the rights of private property and was undertaking to spread this pernicious doctrine elsewhere. The United States can not afford itself to violate this principle.

Hon. A. W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, in his public letter of April 19, 1926, in discussing the question of Germany's action in attempting to make suitable provision for the satisfaction of American claims, as provided under the Knox-Porter resolution and the Berlin treaty, said:

"A creditors' committee investigated Germany's economic capacity and found that 2,500,000,000 gold marks ($625,000,000) per annum was Germany's entire capacity to meet her treaty obligations. * * * German creditors accepted their committee's recommendation as embodied in the Dawes plan, and by the Paris agreement divided the total annuity among the creditors. The United States signed the Paris agreement and thereby accepted the Dawes plan. By the Paris agreement the annuity for the payment of the American mixed claim was fixed at 45,000,000 gold marks ($11,000,000)."

The German Republic therefore has made suitable provision for the satisfaction of the American claims, unless it is held that where Germany has paid to the utmost of her capacity such provision is still not "suitable." Such an interpretation of the Berlin treaty is unreasonable. The purpose of the Knox-Porter resolution was to put pressure to bear on Germany and compel Germany to do her utmost to pay these claims. Germany has done her utmost and her utmost has been fixed by the entente allies and accepted by the United States. If this be not "suitable provision," the term is a mockery.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTION UNDER THE TRADING WITH THE ENEMY ACT

The Congress of the United States under the trading with the enemy act has released all of the property held by many of the persons whose property was held by the Alien Property Custodian, even where such persons have had their property taken over lawfully under said act by the Alien Property Custodian. The property of all persons, German alien property owners, who by the operation of the Versailles treaty had become citizens of other newly erected nations, or had become citizens of other governments under the treaty of Versailles, such as the German citizens who now are residents of Schleswig-Holstein, or of Alsace and Lorraine, or who became citizens of Belgium when Eupen and Malmedy were attached to Belgium; or of German citizens who became citizens of Czechoslovakia, or became citizens of Poland, as in Danzig and the Danzig Corridor, and in other portions of eastern Germany attached to Poland; or who now are citizens of Yugoslavia, showing that Congress had no intention to confiscate this property and had actually released all of the holdings belonging to thousands of former German citizens who came within certain categories.

Moreover, the House of Representatives passed the Winslow bill on February 23, 1923, by a vote of 300 to 11, directing the return of all German alien property to German owners up to an amount of $10,000, showing that with regard to such persons Congress did not intend to confiscate their property but ordered it returned.

It is incredible that Congress intended to confiscate the property remaining after such action of Congress in ordering the full return to innumerable individuals as above set forth. The reason for retaining any portion of the property was obviously in the interest and for the benefit of the American claimants whose advocates naturally desired to have these claims settled before the claims of all the German nationals had been finally disposed of. It was in deference to their wishes that a portion of the property was still retained and, due to a parliamentary compromise, which enabled a partial settlement to be made at that time with the smaller owners.

THE AMERICAN CLAIMS AGAINST THE GERMAN REPUBLIC

The question arises, What course should Congress take in regard to the American claims against the German Republic?

During the last session of Congress the Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. A. W. Mellon, with the approval of the President of the United States (hearings), proposed that the United States should finance the American claims and be reimbursed such advances by Germany out of 100,000,000 gold marks payable annually, using $30,000,000 of accumulated interest which had been obtained on German alien property funds, but not allocated. The use of this interest was agreed to by the representatives of the German owners of the alien property, so that by this settlement the American claimants would not be compelled to wait for a period so long as to be destructive of their rights, and so that the return of the German alien property might be immediately made without the objection of those who feel that the German alien property should be retained until the American claims were liquidated.

The objection was made that to use the credits of the Treasury of the United States to liquidate the American claims would be unjust to the Treasury because in the event that the German Government should default in making the payments pledged by the German Government to the United States it would inflict a possible loss on the Treasury which would be against the interest of the taxpayers of the United States.

The matter was somewhat strongly put by saying it was equivalent to Treasury money paying German debts. These objections deserve a careful consideration.

The amount of the indebtedness of the German Republic to the United States on account of the Army of occupation costs is $250,000,000, without interest. The amount which would be due to the American claimants and the United States, less the amounts available, would be approximately $200,000,000, making a total of $450,000,000, less credits and cross-entries of $100,000,000 or more, to be liquidated by the payment of $23,820,000 (100,000,000 gold marks) per annum.

The Treasury can obtain this money due to liquidate the American claims for approximately 3¼ per cent. The United States is committed not to charge interest on the Army occupation cost, so that the liquidation under the plan of paying the United States 100,000,000 gold marks per annum would liquidate the fund within a reasonable time, unless Germany defaulted.

There is no probability of Germany defaulting this debt, which is peculiarly a debt of honor which the German Government fully recognizes, and Germany is otherwise obligated to pay these debts even if the Dawes plan were modified. The debt due to the United States by Germany under such an arrangement would amount to a little over 30 cents per capita per annum of the German population for the annual payment of $23,800,000 per annum. Germany is one of the most thoroughly organized industrial communities in the world.

But the objection still lies against the use of the Treasury fund for payment of American claims—if Germany should default—and it is therefore necessary to inquire further whether or not the financing of the American claims by the Treasury is or is not justified, in view of a possible risk.

Primarily the obligation to pay the American claims rests upon Germany, the German Republic, and is freely acknowledged. But in the contingency of German default we have a right to inquire whether the United States is not obligated as a matter of law, as a matter of sound policy, as a matter of good conscience, to protect the American claims in such event.

THE UNITED STATES IS OBLIGATED TO PROTECT THE AMERICAN CLAIMS

In times of peace a citizen who pays his taxes and supports the law is entitled to the protection in his life and property by his government, and the United States is charged with the duty of meeting the expense of protecting the life and property of the citizen through the processes provided, and private property can not be taken without just compensation. If he is assaulted, the Government of the United States goes to the expense of prosecuting those who are guilty of the assault.

But in times of war the citizen must do more than pay his taxes—he must offer his life itself for the protection of his government. He must pay extraordinary taxes; he must be prepared to subordinate every private interest for the public safety, and a reciprocal obligation arises in times of war with the government. The government should protect the citizen to the extent of its power against any injury by the operation of the government itself.

The government in time of war declares war for the purpose of protecting the larger interests of all of the people, and if in protecting all of the people by war a citizen is subjected to an extraordinary loss due to this act of the government in declaring war, or due to the policies laid down by the government during the war, the losses should not be allowed to fall disproportionately upon the citizens, but should be apportioned upon all of the people in whose interest war or the policies of war were declared.

An American citizen who suffered a great loss in Germany as a result of the declaration of war, or on the sea because of war policies adopted by the Government, is entitled to look to his Government for redress if the German Government, which is primarily responsible, should default in the liquidation of such claim.

The American claimants have a primary claim against Germany but a secondary claim against the United States. If Germany defaults, it is the duty of the American Government to protect its citizens, nevertheless.

This is the exact principle recognized by France in rebuilding the devastated regions—France paid the cost of repairing and rebuilding the destroyed property and looks to Germany to repay; why should the United States be less considerate of its citizens or less just and fair to its own people who have suffered?

The American citizens having property in Germany are under the mutual protection of the German Government and of the American Government by international treaty between Germany and the United States, and also under The Hague convention, which pledges the citizen safety of private property in war, and if Germany defaults in this obligation, the citizens who relied upon the mutual obligations of Germany and the United States to safeguard their property have a right to look to the United States Government for payment.

THE UNITED STATES AS TRUSTEE

The United States was chargeable with the duty as the representative and trustee of its citizens to see to it that its citizens were protected in their private property rights as against the German Imperial Government and its successor, the German Republic. A private citizen can not safeguard himself against a foreign government; he must rely upon his own government to protect him, and the responsibility of his own government to protect him is perfectly manifest. The United States recognizes this obligation in passing the Knox-Porter resolution and the Berlin treaty, and in the international agreement, establishing the Mixed Arbitral Commission, and in its negotiations obtaining 45,000,000 gold marks with which to liquidate the obligations of the German Republic to the American claimants.

But the United States is not only responsible for the discharge of this duty but for the discharge of the duty in a competent manner. The United States Government may not by negligence imperil its own citizens' rights without responsibility.

It is a notorious fact that when Germany had quick assets available to pay the Army occupation costs, and the American claimants in 1918, 1919, 1920, etc., the United States, by its negligence, failed to collect the amount even of the Army occupation costs from the Reparation Commission established by the allied and associated powers. Was not this a grave negligence of the Government of the United States of which the American claimants would be the victims unless now the American Government assumes the responsibility of the loss, if any, from a future possible German default?

The United States, when Germany had quick assets, made no demand on Germany for payments to protect the American claimants, which was its bounden duty to do. Since, therefore, the United States by its negligence has put the American claimants in danger of the possibility of loss in the event that the German Republic might default, the United States, chargeable with the duty of protecting its own citizens against its own negligence in this matter, should take the risk, if any there be, of German default.

THE PARIS AGREEMENT

The United States having by its negligence failed to secure the assets necessary to meet the Army occupation costs, and the amounts due the American claimants, went to Paris January 24, 1925, when the Dawes plan was adopted, six years after the armistice, and demanded a participation at that belated date and obtained from the allied powers the agreement that the United States should have 55,000,000 gold marks as first lien for the protection of the Army occupation costs, and, second, 45,000,000 marks out of the Dawes reparation fund, after certain primary charges had been made, including the 55,000,000 gold marks. In other words, the United States, acting as representative of the American claimants, obtained a first lien for itself and a second lien for the benefit of the cestui que trust—the American claimants.

It should be clear that the United States as trustee, according to the principles, practices, and underlying reasons of the law of equity, should not take advantage of the American claimants in this manner by giving itself preferential treatment. Moreover, the United States obtained the 100,000,000 gold marks on the ground, as stated by its representative in Paris, that the United States had no other means available for meeting these charges. It was perfectly clear that under the Constitution of the United States the executive and legislative pledges of the United States that the German alien property could not be confiscated and used as a means of meeting the Army occupation costs or pay the American claimants. Having on this ground obtained the 100,000,000 gold marks under the Dawes plan, the United States, in effect, confessed that the American claimants had no security in the alien property in the hands of the United States. This implied confession that the alien property was not a security leaves the Government all the more responsible.

If the Government attempted to confiscate the German alien property, it would lose the right to retain the 100,000,000 gold marks per annum, which it got allowed at Paris on the representation that the alien property was not available.

For this reason, since the United States can not plead the right to confiscate the German alien property as a means of meeting the American claims, the United States, as a matter of common fairness, should recognize its duty to give the American claimants the position of preferred creditors against the 100,000,000 gold marks, finance them, and take the possible risk, if any, of having Germany default.

This policy is a wise policy from a national standpoint, because it is of grave importance that the citizens of the United States should be able to rely upon their Government to protect them in the event of war against the consequences of governmental acts or governmental policies. The strength of the Government of the United States is based upon the devotion of its citizens and the attachment of the citizens to the Government must depend upon the Government giving full protection to the citizen in his just rights.

For these reasons the United States should, as a matter of right, as a matter of good conscience, as a matter of sound policy, take the risk, if any, of Germany defaulting. The actions of the Government of the United States in protecting its citizens against the contingencies of war are shown by many instances during the war where the Government organized special instrumentalities for the protection of the citizen against the extraordinary demands of war, such as the War Finance Board, where the Government used its credits on a huge scale to protect the citizens against the injuries which war otherwise would have inflicted; where the Government, for instance, used its own credit to the extent of $200,000,000 to finance loans through the farm-loan banks to the farmers of the Nation. The Government is now spending $500,000,000 per annum for the protection and restoration of citizens injured by war (through the Veterans' Bureau). It set up machinery for personal insurance during the war for citizens who enlisted under the colors; it provided pensions for them. It set up marine insurance for the protection of its citizens when the American insurance companies were unable or unwilling to bear the risk of marine insurance.

It is of great importance that the policy laid down in the Berlin treaty of restoring friendly relations between the German people and the American people should be carried out by liquidating all of these unsettled claims of German nationals and of American nationals.

The settlement of these claims would release a very large volume of frozen credits, which would immediately flow into the channels of industry, of commerce, of finance. A very large part of these funds would be invested in American cotton, cottonseed oil, petroleum and its by-products, in metals, agricultural products, manufactured products, and the United States would be the beneficiary of increased revenue, of increased commerce passing through our ports, and from internal revenue.

The premises considered, we respectfully submit that a sound national policy justifies the immediate return of the German alien property and the liquidation of the American claims.

ROBERT L. OWEN.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the first paragraph of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "settlement of war claims act of 1928."

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MAPES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 7201, the alien property bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ST. LOUIS & O'FALLON RAILWAY CASE DECISION

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. NEWTON. Mr. Speaker, about a week ago there was handed down by a statutory United States court in the eighth circuit in a decision in the so-called O'Fallon case wherein there was considered the so-called recapture provision of the transportation act. The decision is a very important one. It will have a good deal of effect upon future determination of valuation proceedings under the recapture provision, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting a copy of the opinion as rendered by the judges.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Reserving the right to object, anyone who wants a copy of the O'Fallon case can obtain it.

Mr. NEWTON. At the price of $15.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. Oh, no.

Mr. NEWTON. That is what the clerk advised me at the time.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. A certified copy, of course, but when printed it will be available.

Mr. MAPES. Has the gentleman considered having it printed as a House document?

Mr. NEWTON. I have not.

Mr. MAPES. Would it not be well to consider it?

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If it is printed in this way, it will be printed in very fine type so that nobody will read it. If the gentleman wants it to be read, it should be put in readable form.

Mr. NEWTON. I have a copy of the opinion myself, and my thought was that Members might be interested in reading it.

Mr. BLACK of Texas. If it is printed at all, we would like to have it in readable form. If it is printed in the RECORD it will be in such fine print that no one cares to read it. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request and proceed in a different way to secure what he desires.

Mr. NEWTON. I will do that.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the colloquy occurring, I ask unanimous consent to have the opinion referred to in my remarks printed as a House document.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Reserving the right to object, how much space will it occupy?

Mr. NEWTON. I have not any idea.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. It ought to be limited to five or six copies. I do not object, but it ought to be limited to five or six copies, as that is about as many as will read it.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Minnesota tell me just the character of the O'Fallon decision? Is that the one that the Supreme Court held that the reproduction cost——

Mr. NEWTON. Oh, no; it is not the Supreme Court of the United States at all. It is a statutory court composed of two circuit judges and the district judge sitting on an appeal.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In a court of appeals?

Mr. NEWTON. No; not in a court of appeals, but on the appeal from the Interstate Commerce Commission valuation of the recapture provision in the case of a small railroad in the city of St. Louis. It is the first time that that particular statute has come up for a judicial review.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And the court, as I remember, affirms the reasoning of the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. NEWTON. The court did not affirm the reasoning, but it did affirm the findings and valuation of the commission.

Mr. HOCH. Two of the judges were of opinion that it was not necessary to pass upon the commission's method of valuation in determining the cases before it. The third judge held that it was necessary, and he not only upheld the order of the commission, but the commission's valuation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

THE PUBLIC BUILDINGS BILL AND THE USE OF INDIANA LIMESTONE

Mr. GARDNER of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I desire to extend my remarks on the public buildings bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARDNER of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, to-day H. R. 278, the public buildings bill, passed the House by more than a two-thirds majority, without a record vote, and under suspension of the rules, and I take this opportunity of expressing myself in favor of the building program. While the district I have the honor to represent does not receive a Federal building under this bill, yet I am in favor of a building program; and in order that a building program for the construction of Federal buildings may go forward I voted for the bill. I am in favor of a building program for the reason that the Government and the country at large are sorely in need of many Federal buildings. I hope this building program will be carried on as rapidly as possible, and I hope that those charged with the duty of the location of these buildings will locate them in accordance with the greatest needs of the country.

And in connection with the building program I want to call the attention of my colleagues, and those charged with the duty of constructing these buildings, to the Indiana limestone, the Nation's building stone. Indiana limestone, or Bedford limestone, as it is commonly called, is produced near Bedford, Lawrence County, Ind. Practically all of this building stone is located in two counties in the State of Indiana—Lawrence County, in the district I represent, and Monroe County, in the district represented by my colleague, Mr. GREENWOOD. This stone is truly the Nation's building stone because there is no other material that finds so wide a field of usage from the finest structures to those purely utilitarian in character. In fact, there is no other quarry deposit in the world furnishing a material that is so universally used. Few people realize that from these two counties in southern Indiana about 35 per cent of all the building stone used throughout the entire United States is quarried, and that these two counties supply about 65 per cent of all the finished building stone used by the entire country.

It is safe to say that there is no other building stone in the world that can equal this product of southern Indiana for beauty and general utility, and that there has been no other quarry opened anywhere in the world, from the time of the building of King Solomon's temple down to the present time, that has supplied a stone that has been so generally useful for building purposes, a stone which possesses to such a marked degree the combination of beauty, permanence, and fine weathering properties. There is no other stone that is so easily worked, and so low in cost, that is at the same time as durable and strong.

It is on the basis of genuine structural merit and moderate cost that enables this product of southern Indiana to be so widely distributed and so extensively used. About 30,000 carloads of this stone are shipped from these two counties annually, amounting to over 11,000,000 cubic feet. The Government has already used this fine stone in many of its buildings because it could obtain no better material, and the use of this Indiana product is always in line with the demand for proper economy in Government expenditures. There are over 50 mills, or cutting planes, of the Indiana limestone district. About one-third of the product of these quarries is cut and finished at these mills. The remainder of this product is shipped out in the rough state to cutting planes and stoneyards in all parts of the country. It is therefore a national industry and every cutstone yard in the United States is a producer of finished Indiana limestone for building purposes. The building industry, in fact, has come to depend upon the Indiana product as one of the basic materials of construction, and its importance to the construction industry as a whole is well known to those who are familiar with this great industry. This industry employs many laborers, many skilled laborers, and it is one of the greatest and most helpful industries in the State of Indiana.

Some of the more important Government buildings constructed of Indiana limestone, the Nation's building stone, are: Treasury Department Annex, War Risk Insurance Building, Department of Interior Building, Bureau of Printing and Engraving, Medical Science Building, United States Chamber of Commerce Building.

Six State capitols: Georgia, Kentucky, Indiana, Nebraska, Mississippi, and Oklahoma.

United States assay office, New York, and eight Federal reserve banks: Boston, New York, Richmond, Chicago, Minneapolis, St. Louis, Kansas City, and Dallas.

Numerous post offices and Federal buildings, including those at Ithaca, N. Y.; Huntington, W. Va.; Indianapolis and Kokomo, Ind.; Cadillac, Mich.; Decatur, Ill.; Columbia, S. C.; Oklahoma City and Muskogee, Okla.; El Paso, Amarilla, and Paris, Tex.; Santa Barbara, Calif.

Courthouses and city halls too numerous to mention, including such fine buildings as those at Albany and Plattsburg, N. Y.; Memphis, Tenn.; Kenton and Eaton, Ohio; Shreveport, La.; Newton, N. C.; Tremont, Nebr.; Grand Junction, Colo.; Tulsa, Okla.

State office buildings and memorials, such as those at Harrisburg, Pa.; Springfield and St. Louis, Mo.; Indianapolis, Ind.; and Nashville, Tenn.

Large Scottish Rite and other Masonic temples at Washington, D. C.; Springfield, Mass.; Nashville, Tenn.; Indianapolis, Ind.; Detroit, Mich.; St. Louis, Mo.; Topeka, Kans.; Omaha, Nebr.; Little Rock, Ark.; Oklahoma City and Guthrie, Okla.

I have called attention to only a few of the buildings in various parts of the country constructed of Indiana limestone for the purpose of showing that this stone has already been recognized as a national building stone, and I take pleasure in recommending for the use of the construction of Federal buildings the Indiana limestone.

FARMERS' FINANCE CORPORATION MEASURE

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on farm-relief legislation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LANKFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire again to call attention to my bill (H. R. 77) to create the Farmers' Finance Corporation with authority to make loans through the banks to the farmers, provided the producers planting 75 per cent of the particular commodity sign contracts with each other, with the bank, and with the corporation authorizing and empowering a commodity council to control production so as to probably not produce a surplus and also to control marketing so as to secure a reasonable and fair price.

A council selected from the friends of the farmer would be authorized for each commodity. The duties of the farmers, the council, the banks, and the corporation are made definite and clear in the bill.

The individual farmer gets the loan, if he desires it. He pays no bonus, commission, fees, taxes, or equalization cost. He pays only a low rate of interest in the event he avails himself of the loan privilege and the interest he pays is set aside as a surplus for him and his fellow farmers.

The individual farmer could borrow the average amount for which his commodity has sold since January 1, 1917, and therefore his price would be stabilized at the average. The loan would enable him to hold his own cotton or other commodity for a fair price. In order to protect the corporation, the bank, his fellow farmers, and himself he agrees to make such fair curtailment of his acreage as is made by all other planters of the particular commodity and as will help him get a reasonable price for his carry-over and also for his new production.

The producers of each commodity would only be bound by their own expressed consent, and then only those who so contract. By this plan the Congress would simply offer to the farmers a plan something on the order of the 50–50 plan now offered the States in highway construction and other matters. The Federal Government would offer to help the farmers become absolutely free to manage their own products and, as never before, to name and fix a fair and reasonable price for the sale of their own commodities.

The Federal Government would only ask as a consideration for this new freedom of the farmers their pledge that they would deal squarely with each other and with the Government's corporation and do that which is best for them and all concerned in the matter of production and marketing. We would be offering to help the farmers provided they would help themselves.

The bill would give the farmers a chance to become masters of their own fortunes and, in my humble judgment, is a more satisfactory farm-relief measure than heretofore written.

The farmers would handle their own commodities and get their full value with no unnecessary profit to middlemen or absorbed by expensive marketing machinery. The farmer and his fellows would receive for their commodities the highest possible reasonable price from the manufacturers and exporters and would get all of the price, without deductions for fees, commissions, or other so-called marketing expenses.

The farmer's friends, not his enemies, would control his destinies and there would be no dangerous bureaucratic control of his rights. There would be only absolutely necessary governmental agencies, with well-defined duties and powers.

The bill is not in the interest of any organization, corporation, or any man or set of men other than the farmer, is drawn with his sole and only interest in view, and yet is not unfair or unjust to anyone.

The bill has a complete referendum and recall, and would not go into effect unless the producers of 75 per cent of a particular commodity so elected, and would not remain of force unless satisfactory to at least 75 per cent of such producers.

In my humble judgment, the bill provides a complete solution of the overproduction problem, meets every reasonable objection to other farm relief bills, and without equalization fees, expensive machinery, or red tape puts the farmer on an absolute parity with those engaged in other industries or enterprises. It helps the farmer directly, not indirectly, makes clear his every right, raises no mooted questions or difficult issues, makes him the master of his own problems, and assures him the prosperity to which he is so justly entitled.

The overproduction problem is the most serious of all, and all efforts to control production by arbitrary law, sales taxes, equalization fees, or low prices to the producer are objectionable and ofttimes very obnoxious. Let us work out a plan to let the farmers solve this problem by mutual contracts of their own rather than by law or force. If this plan will solve the overproduction problem, it must be admitted that it is a most effective scheme.

Some say that the farmers will not sign the contracts provided for in the bill, and therefore there will be no adequate control of production. Of course, if the farmers do not agree to the terms of the bill, then it will not go into effect. It is my humble judgment, however, that there is so much merit in the bill that the farmers of the country will approve its terms and do their part in bringing the provisions of the bill into full force and effect in their behalf.

Let us do our part. Knowing the farmers as I do, I feel confident that they will do theirs. I know it has been said that the farmers will not get together or act in concert. In their behalf, I deny the charge.

They will organize if we make organization worth while for them. They organized the greatest nation on earth long before the days of the big factories, railroads, big cities, and big commercial and industrial organizations.

It is hard, though, for the farmers to organize efficiently while they are being plundered and slaughtered like a covey of baited doves, from every side and by almost everybody. Let us given them legislation not as a mere jesture to get their vote in the next election, nor as a bait to get them partially together that they may be the more easily exploited and slaughtered by their enemies, but that they may work together of their own accord in their own behalf, free from outside interference, with the same governmental assistance given other peoples and industries, winning for themselves and their children a new freedom of equality and establishing once and forever their own independence in their own affairs.

ADDRESS OF HON. JOHN Q. TILSON

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting an address made by me on October 14 last in the city of York, Pa., on the occasion of the observance of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the meeting of the Continental Congress in York.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted by the House I here insert an address delivered by me October 14, 1927, on the occasion of the celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the meeting of the Continental Congress at York, Pa.

The address is as follows:

CELEBRATION OF THE ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE MEETING OF THE CONTINENTAL CONGRESS AT YORK, PA.

CONNECTICUT IN THE CONTINENTAL CONGRESS AT YORK

My presence here is due to two influences—first, the earnest invitation of my good friend Doctor MENGES, the distinguished Representative in Congress from this district, and, second, my appointment under a concurrent resolution as a member of a committee of Congress to represent the Congress of the United States in the observance of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the meeting of the Continental Congress at York.

It was suggested by the committee in charge of the historical program that as a Representative of the State of Connecticut in Congress it would be appropriate for me to tell something of the part my own State played in the important work done during the momentous session of the Continental Congress held here. Before proceeding, however, to make particular reference to the part played by any one State it is necessary to outline very briefly the general situation at that crisis of our national life so that each part may be the better fitted into the whole picture.

When the Continental Congress met at York on September 30, 1777, only a little more than a year had passed since the Liberty Bell had rung out the glad news that a new nation had been born to take its place along with the other free and independent nations of the world. With high hopes the brave but still feeble youngster had embarked upon the perilous sea of national life, but the voyage thus far had not been a very prosperous one. The clouds were particularly dark and gloomy at this time. General Washington had been defeated at the Brandywine and the road opened for General Howe to march into Philadelphia. It was necessary that the Congress remove to another place. Lancaster was at first chosen, but even in those days the principle of safety first prevailed and York was substituted, so that "the Susquehanna should flow between Congress and the enemy." I am glad to have this opportunity to visit this historic city of refuge and look it over, for in case Congress should again be chased out of its customary meeting place your beautiful city of to-day would be most inviting.

In the autumn of 1777 a critical and very trying period had been reached in our national history, so that the conduct of the Continental Congress at this juncture became a matter of the most serious moment. Samuel Adams voiced the general feeling when he said: "Our affairs are said to be desperate, but we are not without hope and not without courage. The eyes of the people of this country are upon us here, and the tone of their feeling is regulated by ours." Such was the spirit in which the session of Congress held here began its labors. The deeds performed were in accord with this spirit and the fact that the military situation was, indeed, well-nigh desperate makes all the more illustrious those deeds that were prompted by honor and courage, rather than by self-interest and cowardice. You will recall that it was while Congress sat here that the Conway cabal was brought out into the open which had for its purpose the supplanting of Washington in command of the Army; and it was here that Congress, after some doubt and scheming, wisely determined to remain true to that great figure in our national history.

In the period of deepest gloom during the sitting of the Congress here two notable events transpired that greatly encouraged those in charge of and responsible for the destinies of the new Republic. The first was the defeat of Burgoyne at Saratoga. Creasy gives this as one of the 15 decisive battles of the world. Without attempting to decide the much-disputed question as to whether it is entitled to be so ranked, it can be said with certainty that it was the most critical battle of the war. Burgoyne's campaign was well conceived. Its purpose was to open up the line of Lake Champlain and the Hudson River, thus driving a wedge through the heart of the distraught country and thereby connecting with the British force already in possession of New York City and vicinity. Had Burgoyne won at Saratoga the result would have been to effectively separate the entire New England group of States from the other States, thus rendering cooperation impossible. It was a notable victory for the American troops and added much to the repute of General Gates as an army commander. The glory of his achievement, however, has been somewhat dimmed by the unfortunate connection of his name with the attempt to supplant Washington as Commander in Chief of the American forces.

The second of the great events of the period to cheer patriot hearts was the open alliance with France which brought to our country in the time of its greatest need Rochambeau and De Grasse with an army and a navy from France.

The two notable events mentioned stand out like mountain peaks in the period of the York session, but they do not obscure the long list of noteworthy actions of a practical character on the part of Congress, all necessary for the maintenance of an armed force in the field. It was most necessary of all that the several States should act together and not separately, and so it came to pass that here in York were formulated and adopted the Articles of Confederation that served the purpose of holding the country together for the time being. It has become the fashion to belittle the value of the Articles of Confederation, because they did not create a government of sufficient strength to withstand all the decentralizing influences of a postwar period. Let those who are disposed to minimize the wisdom and utility of the articles reflect that it was 1777 and not 1787 that saw their genesis. An attempt then to agree upon a constitution like that adopted in 1787 would have meant the complete disruption of the newly formed Union. Weak as the Articles of Confederation were as the framework of a self-sustaining government in times of peace—and they have been characterized, somewhat accurately, to be sure, as "a rope of sand"—nevertheless they served as a possible basis of unity for the newly formed group of Colonies now trying to function as a nation under the stress of war. The articles were probably as strong a binding force as would have been accepted at the time, and having served a most important purpose at a most critical stage, they should be reverently regarded as constituting one of the most important documents in our history.

The all-absorbing business throughout the session of Congress held here was carrying on the war. Washington's army at Valley Forge was in a deplorable condition. Finances were at a low ebb. In order to get either men or money it was necessary for the States to cooperate with Congress, and to secure anything like uniform cooperation was an almost impossible undertaking. The States were jealous of each other and much disposed each to let the other States do it. So throughout the session we find one appeal after another for all sorts of things necessary for the conduct of the war. Some States nearer the scenes of military activities realized more fully the situation and responded with greater alacrity than others; but it was an uphill fight the young Nation was making and against great odds.

It is with pardonable pride, I hope, that I here record Connecticut as one of the States that responded nobly to the requests coming to the governor either directly or through the delegation in Congress. Our very able and industrious State librarian at Hartford, Mr. George S. Goddard, has prepared for my use a digest of all the matters to which the attention of Gov. Jonathan Trumbull was called during the period covered by the session at York, either by the direction of Congress or by the Connecticut Delegates, and it is a pleasure to note the very satisfactory response in almost every case. For instance, a letter from General Washington, dated October 21, 1777, urges the States to fill up their depleted battalions, and calls attention to the fact that the only States reporting having even recruiting officers appointed are Connecticut and New Jersey.

After the surrender of Burgoyne, Congress placed under the supervision of Governor Clinton, of New York, the defenses of the Hudson, and directed him to call on the militia of Connecticut and Massachusetts for aid.

Connecticut is called upon by Congress in a number of instances to aid in transporting and storing salt, clothing, and other necessary articles for the Army—in all instances responding favorably.

The measures taken by Connecticut for providing public stores are formally approved by a resolution of Congress, as is also the appointment as commissary of one Henry Champion, who seems to have been an early Connecticut edition of Herbert Hoover as food administrator.

In the light of present conditions in Connecticut as regards its iron industry and forests, two other formal resolutions of the Congress while at York are of special interest. On October 30, 1777, a resolution requests Connecticut to have the workmen at the Salisbury furnace cast mortars for Continental Army use under the instruction of General Knox, while on December 4, 1777, Connecticut is asked, along with New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and New York, to preserve pine timber suitable for masts. No doubt Connecticut then complied fully with those requests, but would now find difficulty in complying with either.

The introduction of the record of service of Connecticut men in the War of the Revolution, compiled by the Connecticut adjutant general's office, thus sums up the contribution by Connecticut to the military forces of the Revolution:

"A total of 30,000 men may be considered as a reasonable estimate of men from Connecticut engaged in the military service. Of this number some 10,000 represent continental soldiers—men who enlisted for long terms and served in the field outside of the State under Washington's immediate command. A complete record would embrace several thousand additional names, especially of the militia. From expressions used by Governor Trumbull in his correspondence and other sources, it is apparent that, barring a small loyalist element in the western part of the State, nearly every able-bodied man in Connecticut rendered, or was enrolled as notified and prepared to render, some kind of service during the Revolutionary War. The exposed situation of the State, with entire coast subject to incursions and ravages by the enemy and her proximity to the several fields of operations in Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and New York, required her to be in a constant state of preparation. On this account, and because of the size of her population, then relatively large, she was regarded as one of the four strong States supporting the cause, ranking in capacity next after Massachusetts, Virginia, and Pennsylvania."

Connecticut also served well the cause of the Revolution during the dark period of the York session through the men sent as Delegates to represent the State in the Continental Congress. One serious mistake made by the States sending Delegates to the Congress then and which, by the way, is still often made by constituencies in sending Representatives to Congress, was in making frequent changes in their delegations. Before one Delegate had served long enough to fully understand his task it too often happened that the lure of the bench or some other more attractive State position would draw him away. Connecticut was no exception to this rule. Each State was asked to keep three Delegates in attendance, and yet in the short space of nine months during which the Congress sat in York it was necessary for Connecticut to send seven different men in order to keep filled a delegation of three Members.

In spite of all the adverse conditions surrounding it the personnel of the Continental Congress usually ranked high in ability. A number of those who had signed the Declaration of Independence and some of those who were later to help frame the Constitution were Delegates from time to time. Of the seven Connecticut Delegates who served in Congress during any part of the session at York, four had signed the Declaration of Independence—Williams, Huntington, Wolcott, and Sherman—and one, Roger Sherman, signed all four of the great papers of the forming of the Nation—the Association of 1774, the Declaration of Independence, the Articles of Confederation, and the Federal Constitution.

The seven men who represented Connecticut, with their respective periods of service, are as follows:

Eliphalet Dyer from October, 1777, to April, 1778.
Richard Law from October, 1777, to February, 1778.
William Williams from October, 1777, to February, 1778.
Samuel Huntington from February, 1778, to June, 1778.
Oliver Wolcott from February, 1778, to June, 1778.
Roger Sherman from April, 1778, to June, 1778.
Titus Hosmer from June 23, 1778.

Of these seven Connecticut Delegates who attended the session at York, five were college graduates—Dyer, Law, Wolcott, and Hosmer being Yale men and Williams a graduate of Harvard. All but Wolcott had legal training either as attorneys in practice or on the bench. Williams does not seem to have practiced, but was a judge of the county court. Wolcott studied medicine with his brother, Dr. Alexander Wolcott, and Williams studied theology. Dyer received a degree of doctor of laws from Yale in 1787. All of the delegates had had experience in State (or colonial) legislative and judicial bodies for years. With the exception of Sherman, and possibly Hosmer, the Delegates came from families of influence, whose members were accustomed to public office. The Wolcotts, Huntingtons, and Dyers were prominent in government circles. Richard Law was the son of Governor Jonathan Law. The exception, Roger Sherman, however, proved one of Connecticut's greatest statesmen in spite of the handicap of being a self-made man.

The seven sons of Connecticut to whom I have referred served their country worthily, some of them conspicuously, here and elsewhere, thereby bringing credit to the State they represented and making for themselves honored names to be handed down to posterity.

There remains to me now but a word further, and that is on behalf of the House of Representatives at Washington to congratulate you, the good people of York, upon the enterprise and courage you have displayed in promoting and carrying through so successfully this very notable celebration. You have accomplished something preeminently worth while in thus recalling to the minds of people everywhere the events of a crucial period in our national history that has not received the attention its importance deserves.

Here ends what I have to say on this historic occasion, but as I have made reference to seven worthy men of honored memory in my own State it will not be deemed inappropriate if I here add as an appendix to my remarks a very brief biographical sketch of each of them, the data for which were furnished by the State librarian at Hartford.

Eliphalet Dyer was born in Windham, September 14, 1721. Graduated at Yale, 1740. Studied law in Windham, admitted to the bar, 1746. His real entry into public life was in connection with the project for establishing a colony in the valley of the Susquehanna. He was an original member of the Susquehanna company. In August, 1763, he went as an agent for the Susquehanna company to England to obtain confirmation from the crown of the company's title to the Wyoming Valley. He was not successful in this, but his ability as an advocate, or at least his reputation, is shown in that he was appointed a special agent for the colony to conduct the Mohegan Indian case. He declined this appointment. He was a member of the Stamp Act Congress, September, 1765, judge of the superior court; delegate to the First Continental Congress and active in the governor's council and on the committee of safety. Died in his 86th year, May 13, 1807. His services as an earnest, prudent patriot were highly valued.

Richard Law was born in Milford, March 7, 1732/3, son of Governor Jonathan Law. Graduated at Yale, 1751. Studied law with Jared Ingersol. Admitted to the bar, 1755. He began his public service as a representative to the general assembly in October, 1765, and during his career he filled offices in the assembly, was on the New London County bench and on the superior court bench. He was appointed to the Continental Congress in 1774 and 1776 but did not attend until 1778. In 1786 he was made chief judge of the superior court and later became district judge of Connecticut under the Federal Constitution. He was mayor of New London in 1784. He assisted Roger Sherman in revising the Connecticut statutes. Died January 26, 1806. It has been said of him that "as an advocate his style was pure and correct but not copious and flowing. He was distinguished more as a learned lawyer, a close logician, a fair special pleader, than as an eloquent orator. His talents were better adapted to a court than a jury."

William Williams was born in Lebanon, April 28, 1731. His father and grandfather were ministers. Graduated at Harvard, 1751. Studied theology. During the French and Indian War he went on a military expedition to Lake George in 1755. He returned much dissatisfied with the British commanders and their attitude toward the Colonials. His political life began when at the age of 25 he was made town clerk, an office he held 45 years. He represented Lebanon in the general assembly and was in that body, either in the lower or upper house, practically all of his life. The records of the council of safety are in his handwriting. In fact, the amount of manuscript in the Connecticut archives bearing either his name or in his writing, is stupendous. He was judge of the Windham county court, signer of the Declaration of Independence, and member of the Connecticut convention for the ratification of the Federal Constitution.

The aim of Mr. Williams in his political career was said to have been "to merit the title of an honest politician." He had the unlimited confidence of his fellow citizens in private life as well. He married Mary, the daughter of Governor Trumbull. Nearly all of his personal fortune was spent in the war. He kept his house open at all times to soldiers, entertaining during the winter of 1781 the officers of a regiment stationed in his town.

It is stated that Benjamin Huntington remarked to Colonel Williams, "I am in no danger of being hung, for I have neither signed the Declaration nor written anything against the British Government." "Then, sir," replied Williams, "you deserve to be hung for not having done your duty."

Samuel Huntington was born in Windham, July 3, 1731, of a respectable family which immigrated to this country at an early period. Huntington was financially unable to get a college training, but studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1758. His practice became extensive and his reputation firmly established. He was a Delegate to Congress 1776–1781; signer of the Declaration of Independence, and President of Congress 1779–1781. After his resignation from Congress he was in the council of the State. He was chief justice of the superior court and governor of the State. His manner was reticent and retiring, his shyness being often mistaken for pride. As a judge he was dignified in deportment, courteous to the bar, and much respected by those with whom he came in contact. His decisions were impartial and his attitude firm. By some he has been ranked next to Governor Trumbull for popularity in that period of the State's history.

Oliver Wolcott was born in East Windsor, November 20, 1726. Graduated at Yale, 1747. He was a descendant of a public-spirited family, his father being Gov. Roger Wolcott. After an experience as captain of a company in defense of the northern frontiers against the French, he studied medicine with his brother, Dr. Alexander Wolcott, and began its practice in Goshen. His activities soon became political. He was sheriff of Litchfield County when it was first organized; representative in the general assembly and member of the governor's council, 1771–1786. He was a Delegate to the Continental Congress and a signer of the Declaration of Independence. He was particularly active in the raising of militia during the Revolution. His residence in what was then one of Connecticut's frontier towns gave him opportunity to assist in the defense of the Hudson and in raising men for the frequent alarms. He was a brigadier general of the State and was in command of regiments sent to New York in 1776 and in the Saratoga campaign in September and October of 1777. His time was divided between civil and military public service. In 1793 Yale gave him the honorary degree of doctor of laws. He died at Litchfield December 1, 1797, aged 71.

President Dwight says: "Wolcott was remarkably distinguished for intrepidity, firmness, incorruptible integrity, strong, bold conceptions, and a peculiar decision of character. At the same time his sensibility was quick and exquisite. The sight or even the narration of a mean, dishonest, or an ungenerous action appeared to give him a chill and changed his countenance."

Roger Sherman was born at Newton, Mass., April 19, 1721. He removed to New Milford, Conn., in 1743. His father was a farmer and not wealthy, so that it was necessary for Roger Sherman to acquire his education through his own efforts. He worked as a shoemaker until after he was 22 years of age. Connecticut has not only a learned blacksmith in Elihu Burritt but a distinguished shoemaker in Sherman in her hall of fame. Before Sherman was 33 years of age he had been admitted to the bar, had occupied various civil offices of the colony, had been member of both houses of the assembly, and judge of the court of common pleas. He was actively in favor of Connecticut's claim to the Susquehanna title. He was a Delegate to Continental Congress and the one man to sign all four great papers of the forming of the Nation—the Association of 1774, the Articles of Confederation, the Declaration of Independence, and the Federal Constitution. He died at New Haven July 23, 1793.

Although he lacked the graces of polished society, his influence and statesmanlike qualities won recognition. We read that he "showed the highest qualities of a statesman in knowing how to compromise and when to be firm," and that he possessed "a remarkable sagacity in judging not only what measures were best for a community, but what the people were willing to bear. His influence over men was greatly strengthened by his strong sense of justice."

Patrick Henry ranked him with the greatest statesmen of his time and acquaintance. Gen. Winfield Scott placed him as fourth in importance of the chief actors in the revolutionary period and formation of a new government.

Thomas Jefferson spoke of him as a "man who never said a foolish thing."

Titus Hosmer was born at Watertown, Conn., 1736; graduated at Yale, 1757. He began the practice of law in 1760. His attendance at the York session of Congress was confined to the latter part of June, and therefore his name does not hold the place of prominence of the other delegates. He was speaker of the lower house of the State assembly, was made judge of the maritime court in 1780, and was considered influential in creating sentiment for vigorous measures against Great Britain. Noah Webster regarded him, with William Samuel Johnson and Oliver Ellsworth, as one of the three greatest sons of Connecticut, but upon what grounds this claim is to be maintained the great lexicographer does not make entirely clear.
